भारतीय राज्यघटनेचे शिल्पकार, प्रज्ञासूर्य, बोधिसत्व, भारताच्या सामाजिक, राजकीय, शैक्षणिक, आर्थिक व धार्मिक व्यवस्थेवर कायमचा ठसा उमटविणारे कृतिशील विचारवंत डॉक्टर बाबासाहेब आंबेडकर यांना 130 व्या जयंतीनिमित्त विनम्र अभिवादन.

भारतीय राज्यघटना, युद्धकाळातील मजूरांना न्याय मिळावा म्हणून केलेले प्रयत्न, महिलांसाठी हिंदू कोड बिल, कामगारांसाठी केलेल्या विविध तरतुदी, शेतकऱ्यांच्या हितासाठी केलेले कार्य, समाजातील शोषित, पीडित, वंचित, दलितांच्या हक्कासाठी आणि स्वाभिमानासाठी केलेला संघर्ष, सर्वांना संविधाना द्वारे दिलेला मतदानाचा अधिकार, आर्थिक लोकशाहीचे खरे पुरस्कर्ते व अर्थतज्ञ म्हणून परिचित असलेल्या डॉक्टर बाबासाहेबांनी विविध क्षेत्रात दिलेले योगदान कधीही विसरता येणे शक्य नाही. भारतीय राज्य घटनेच्या माध्यमातून सर्व समाजाला नागरिकांना आर्थिक समता व न्याय याची भूमिका त्यांनी मांडली. समाजातील तळागाळातील व्यक्तीला समान प्रमाणात आर्थिक न्याय मिळाला पाहिजे याकरिता बाबासाहेबांनी शोषित, वंचित आणि त्यांना समान न्याय देण्याची मांडलेली भूमिका अतिशय महत्त्वपूर्ण अशी आहे.

Ground-breaking path towards Social Reconstruction: Dr Ambedkar on Women Empowerment

Dr. Jyoti Niswade

Associate Professor

Matru Sewa Sangh Institute of Social Work, Nagpur

Abstract

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was a feminist at heart. His commitment of social change and development was constant and he was restless in giving social justice and dignity to the marginalised sections of the society. Dr Ambedkar's role is significant in shaping the social and political delineation and advancement of women in Indian society. He challenged the orthodox Hindu social order and stepped in to reconstruct the society with the ideas of justice, equality, fraternity, liberty and respect for the dignity of women. In his quest to ensure freedom, equality, and individuality of Indian women, he resorted to the legalized mechanism and proposed sweeping constitutional provisions, famous as the Hindu code Bill, placing women at par with men in matters of inheritance and allowing them freedom to marry outside their caste. Dr Ambedkar decisively alleged that extermination of the bigoted gender relations and elevating status of women was fundamental obligation in the process of social reconstruction. Consequently, his tireless effort for inclusion of women's rights in all the spheres is a step towards strengthening women empowerment. Present paper is the effort to understand the role of Dr. B R Ambedkar in empowerment of women, the deprived and marginalised section of the society.

Key words: Social reconstruction, women empowerment, status of women

Introduction

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had a substantial and unprecedented contribution to the empowerment of Indian women through enshrining women's rights in the Indian Constitution and challenging religious and socio-cultural norms and instigating women's political consciousness. He promoted true equality including equal socio-cultural, political and economic status for women. These ideals were espoused through political activism and his input to the Constitution and other legislation. Therefore, Dr Ambedkar's instrumental contributions to the empowerment of Indian women must be recognised as unprecedented. His activism and legal contributions clearly enhanced female agency, as he advocated egalitarianism. By challenging socio-cultural and religious norms, Dr Ambedkar weakened structural obstacles. This simultaneously improved the education, economic and labour rights of women and undermined situational obstacles such as dependency on males. It is clear therefore, through his address of the multi-faceted nature of empowerment; Dr Ambedkar significantly contributed to the empowerment of women.

Empowerment may be considered enabling "those who have been denied the ability to make strategic life choices" (Kabeer 1999). Hence, it may be measured in terms of "access" and "future claims" to human and social resources, agency, and achievements (Kabeer 1999). Empowerment can also be measured by the overcoming of situational and structural obstacles (Narasaiah 2004). According to the Country Report of Government of India, 'Empowerment means moving from a position of enforced powerlessness to one of power'. Women's empowerment is a process in which women gain greater share of control over resources. These are material, human and intellectual like knowledge, information, ideas and financial resources like money and access to money and control over decision-making in the home, community, society, and nation and to gain 'power'. Present paper is an attempt made to highlight the root cause for the low status of women in Indian society; Indian Women question ; Dr Ambedkar's reformative measures ; initiatives in elevating their position and relevance of his contribution in present days. Methodology adopted was secondary sources of existing literature through descriptive approach.

In ancient India, women enjoyed a very high position but gradually their position degenerated into merely objects of pleasure meant to serve certain purpose. In 'Manusmriti' the ancient Hindu Code-book, the status granted to women is quite visible and she was put to the lowest place of humanity. Manu, in his book Manusmriti, 'codified all the social evils as social ethos instead of their eradication' (Kumar, 2016, p. 214). Under the influence of Manusmriti, women had to face various deprivations in matters of acquiring property, education and studying religious scriptures. The notion that women should not be given freedom and be made subservient to male domination got deep-rooted. They lost their individual identity and even their basic human right. Dr Ambedkar held Manusmriti responsible for the plight of Indian women (Kavitakait, 2013). Through his literary contributions, he raised his voice against that social order which taught submission to women and forced her to remain subservient to male domination and adhere to a typical feminine behaviour.

The Indian Women Question and Dr Ambedkar

Dr Ambedkar involved women in all of his programmes and mobilized them to demand equal status with men. Dr Ambedkar's appeal to Indian women to develop consciousness of their humiliation is an epistemological break. Since he was an intellectual with a vision, he realized that such inspiration might fall flat unless there is a constitutional mechanism to ensure their upliftment. Thus, he laboured incessantly to design a common civil code through the Hindu Code Bill, whereby Indian women were considered an equal individual politically, socially, and constitutionally. In framing the Hindu Code Bill, he proposed a complete overhauling of the Hindu social system. The Bill sought to codify the legal mechanism to address various laws concerning men and women and alter the order of succession and designed new laws on maintenance, marriage, intercaste marriages, divorce, adoption, and minors and their guardianship. Emphasizing on women's position and the need to guarantee freedom, equality, and dignity to them, he framed the rules of the abolition of the birth right to property, half share for daughters, conversion of women's limited estate to absolute estate, the abolition of caste in marriage matters, and adoption and the principle of monogamy and divorce (Ambedkar, Vol 14, part one, p 5-11). Dr Ambedkar identified so much with the Indian women's cause that he resigned from Nehru's Cabinet when the conservative members rejected the Bill.

Dr Ambedkar's Reformative Measures: An Initiative in Elevating Women's Position

The vision of Dr. Ambedkar about women is explicitly depicted in Indian Constitution. Equality of sexes is strongly backed by the constitution through articles 14, 15 and 16. The principle of gender equality is enshrined in the Indian Constitution in its Preamble, Fundamental Rights, Fundamental Duties and Directive Principles. He laid down the foundation of social justice and that there can be no social justice without gender equality.

Dr. Ambedkar extensively studied the position of women in religions and threw light on denial of rights to her and ultimately the status of individual. Dr Ambedkar considered education as an important tool for the emancipation of women. It is evident from his speeches that that he had great concern for women empowerment. Addressing the Second All-India Depressed Classes Women's Conference held on 20 July 1942 at Nagpur, he said, "I measure the progress of community by the degree of progress which women have achieved. I shall tell you a few things which I think you should bear in mind. Learn to be clean; keep free from all vices. Give education to your children. Instil ambition in them. Inculcate on their minds that they are destined to be great. Remove from them all inferiority complexes." He wanted to liberate women from their suffering and economic dependency. In order to give economic rights and freedom to women, Dr Ambedkar demanded educational rights, equality and right to property for women. To educate women, he asked co-education for women with men. Through education, he believed, that women would think independently which will lead to their intellectual and mental development.

Dr Ambedkar made his view for the women rights and that has been reflected in Indian constitution. His goal was to make a society based on social justice. To secure this goal, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has given equal status to women on par with men by providing many provisions in the Indian constitution. To him, sexual discrimination should be root out from the society and everybody should get equal opportunity in the society. The Preamble of Indian constitution guarantees social and economic justice to women and that is because of Dr Ambedkar's contribution. In the preamble it is mentioned: (i) social, economic and political justice, (ii) freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship, (iii) equality of status and opportunity and (iv) fraternity assuring dignity of the individual and national unity to all the citizens of India without any discrimination of caste, creed or sex.

In Constitutional Rights and Women in Indian Constitution, there are few articles which exist that help the women of Indian society to improve their position and to compete with their male counterparts. For example Article 14 – All are equal in the eyes of law and equally protected by the law. It means equal rights and opportunities in political, economic and social spheres. Article 15 prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex. Article 15(3) enables positive discrimination in favour of women. Article 16 mentions there shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office without any discrimination on the basis of religion, caste, creed and sex. Article 24 prohibits the employment of children below the age of 14 years in factories, mines or in any other hazardous employment. Article 39 and 39(d) state Equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work. As per article 41 the state shall guarantee within its economic limits to all the citizens, the right to work, to education and public assistance in certain cases. Article 42 the state makes provision for Human conditions of work and maternity relief. Under article 44, the state provides a uniform Civil Code to all the citizens throughout the territory of India. Article 46 – The state to promote with special care, the educational and economic interests of weaker section of people and to protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation. Article 47 – The state to raise the level of nutrition and standard of living of its people and the improvement of public health and so on. Article 51 (A) (C) – Fundamental duties to renounce practices, derogatory to the dignity of women. Article 243D (3), 243T (3) & 243R (4) provides for allocation of seats in the Panchayati Raj System. Dr Ambedkar's espousal of increased economic and labour rights for women in addition to the challenge of socio-cultural and religious norms curtailed situational obstacles, increasing the presence of women in the public domain. Moreover, as the economic independence of women and their societal prosperity is interlinked, Dr Ambedkar's legal pursuit of women's economic independence ultimately improved their welfare (Nandal and Rajnish 2014). This was illustrated in the 1930's where Dr Ambedkar endeavoured for increased labour rights, particularly for women.

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, as the Chairman of the Drafting Committee, tried an adequate inclusion of women's and depressed classes' rights in the Constitution of India. He looked upon law as the instrument of creating a just social order. He incorporated the values of liberty, equality and fraternity in the Indian Constitution.

The Hindu Code Bill and Women Empowerment

In 1948 when the Hindu Code Bill was introduced in parliament and debated on the floor of the house, the opposition was strong against the Bill. The Hindu code bill is the first document to give rights to women. These rights were not only for Dalit women but to other Hindu women also the Manu followers who opposed this bill. The objectives of bill are codification of the Hindu Law and the possible amendment in it. There are seven subjects of codification of the Hindu law these are Right to Property, Order of Succession to property, Maintenance, Marriage, Divorce and Adoption, Minority and Guardianship but it was withdrawn. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar tried his level best to defend the Bill by pointing out the Constitutional principles of equality, liberty and fraternity and that in the Indian society characterized by the caste system and the necessary for a social change in which women have equality in a legal system. The women are deprived of equality and to bring equality a legal framework is necessary for a social change in which women have equal right with men. In reality, the Bill was a threat to patriarchy on which traditional family structure, was bounded and that was the major reason behind the opposition. Therefore, on the eve of the first elections in 1951, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru dropped the Bill by saying that there was too much opposition. On this issue the then Law Minister Dr. Ambedkar resigned. His explanations for resignation dated 27th September 1951 show how the parliament of independent India deprived its women citizens of even basic rights. Although most of the provisions proposed by Dr Ambedkar were later passed during 1955-56 in four bills on Hindu 'marriage' succession, minority and guardianship and maintenances and later in 1976 some changes were made in Hindu law it still remains true that the basic rights of women have yet to be restored to them even after years of the working of the Indian Constitution based on the principle of liberty, equality and justice to all Indian citizens. However, the Hindu code Bill helped the resurgence of feminist movement in India. This is crusade of Dr Ambedkar to emancipate women from injustice which inspired the women leader in parliament to keep the issue alive until its enactment. It was the starting point for women to recognize their position and pursue rights movement by acquiring strength from second wave feminism started in the early 1960s. Women are still fighting issues such as rape, dowry death, communalism, fundamentalism, sexual harassment, poverty, fundamentalism, sexual harassment and domestic violence.

Relevance of Dr Ambedkar's contribution

Dr Ambedkar insisted on the reconstruction of Hindu society on the basis of equality. His writings and activities as a social reformer went a long way in the empowerment of women. The National Policy for the Empowerment of Women, 2001, admitted that social and economic structure is largely responsible for gender inequality, as visualized by Dr Ambedkar long ago (Shukla, 2011). The ideal of equal status for women is reflected in our Constitution. The state provides for positive discrimination. Although certain degree of progress has been achieved by Indian women, they are still victims of various social evils such as kidnapping, violence, crime, humiliation, dowry, acid attacks, eve teasing, rape and honour killing.¹ Rising incidents of harassment by spouse and other relatives, both in father's house and in-laws' house, occupies the highest position as per data. Data also reveals that 46 per cent of women are illiterates in India. It will take several decades to rectify the imbalances and discriminations. A greater clamour for women's rights shows that vast is undone. Although they have been empowered socially, economically, legally and politically, there has been a dearth of adequate awareness regarding women's rights. They are not treated as equal to men. Although they have been empowered socially, economically, legally and politically, there has been a dearth of adequate awareness regarding women's rights. They are not treated as equal to men (Tiwari & Meshram). To stop sexual harassment at workplace, a bill was passed in the Lok Sabha on 2 September 2012, entitled the Sexual Harassment at Workplace Bill. It became an act in 2013 and is named the Sexual Harassment of Women at Workplace (Prevention, Prohibition and Redressal) Act, 2013. It incorporates the guidelines and norms suggested by our honourable Supreme Court in the Vishakha vs. State of Rajasthan Case.²

Conclusion

Much is talked about women empowerment today but it is more economic, political and health related. The issue of social empowerment of women need to be raised higher and given utmost importance then only it could complete phenomena. Women empowerment has five components: women's sense of self worth; their right to have and to determine choices; their right to have access to opportunities and resources; their right to have the power to control their own lives; both within and outside the home; and their ability to influence the direction and social change to create a more just social and economic order, nationality and internationally. Dr. Ambedkar strongly believed that women empowerment can be achieved by welfare of women.

1. Introduction

Peaceful society is universal demand. Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, popularly known as Babasaheb Ambedkar, was one of the foremost architects of the Constitution of Indian. Dr. Ambedkar had a fascinating personality and never allowed himself to be persuaded by intangible ideas and ideals. He was a very eminent political leader, philosopher, writer, economist, scholar and a social reformer who dedicated his entire life to exterminating untouchability and other social disparity in India. He was born on 14th April 1891 in Madhya Pradesh in a Hindu "Mahar Caste". He had to face severe discriminations from every crook of the society as the "Mahar caste" was viewed as "untouchable" by the upper class at that time.

The Constitution of a country will be in the format of law emanating directly from the inherent authority of the people themselves binding all organs of government and all sections of the society to its principles and provisions, as it is fundamental law of the land. Dr. Ambedkar was one of the very few Indian statesmen-politicians who actively participated in the discussions on constitutional matters from the Mont-Ford Reforms (1919) to the Cabinet Mission (1946) proposals. He was the first and foremost leader of the depressed classes, and the struggle of the depressed classes for human rights and socio-political equality from the twenties to the fifties of the 20th century is intertwined round his name being elected Chairman of the Drafting Committee of the Constituent Assembly.

The concept of Constituent Assembly and of the written Constitutions is like twins in political philosophy. If the Constitution is to be drafted, codified and enacted, there must be a person or some "body of persons" to draft it, and get it approved by the people or their representatives. Under the terms of the Cabinet Mission Plan, the members of the Constituent Assembly were elected in July 1946. On 29th August, 1947 passing one resolution the Constituent Assembly appointed a "Drafting Committee" with the seven members including Dr. Ambedkar for preparing a draft of the Constitution of independent India. It is said when drafting of the Constitution of India was embarked upon, Pandit Nehru and Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel thought of inviting and consulting Sir Ivor Jennings who was the renowned constitutional expert and eminent jurist of those times. When approached for guidance in the matter Mahatma Gandhi was informed to have told them why they should be looking for foreign experts when they had the right within India an excellent legal and constitutional expert in Dr. Ambedkar who ought to be assigned with the role and he so splendidly and accurately deserved.

In the Constituent Assembly Dr. Ambedkar played a very significant role with a lofty responsibility of drafting the Constitution. The whole scheme of the Constitution of India aims at to secure social and economic justice.

2. Significant aspects of making of the Constitution of India

The Round Table Conference was a momentous in the history of the Constitution of India. Being invited to discuss on constitutional matters Dr. Ambedkar necessitated in requirement and anticipated that the people of India would be able to redress their gripes by political power and this political power will come to them under the "Swaraj" Constitution. He advocated for a responsible government formed by the representatives of the people only. Dr. Ambedkar did not want to execute a Constitution on the Indians, but he succumbed that the opinion of the people about the manner in which they desired to be governed must be accepted because he strongly believed that power lies with the people and government should derive the power from people.

Following are the significant aspects of the Constitution where Dr. Ambedkar had taken vital role to bring the areas relates to a complete life full of dignity and approval of common good as a part of the Constitution:

a) Making of Preamble to the Constitution of India

The preamble is the introductory part of the Constitution and it contains entire philosophy of the Constitution of India. Preamble is the blood vessels of the body of the Constitution. The Drafting Committee of the Assembly while articulating the Preamble in the light of the "Objectives Resolution" felt that the Preamble should be circumscribed to defining the important features of the new independent state and its basic socio-political aims and that the other matters dealt with in the resolution could be more aptly provided for the substantive parts of the Constitution. Expressing his disappointment with the "Objective Resolution" Dr. B. R. Ambedkar expected it in a clear enumeration of the "doctrine of socialism".

The Committee had adopted the expression "Sovereign Democratic Republic" in place of "Sovereign Independent Republic" as used in Objective Resolution, for it thought that independence was implied in the word “Sovereign”. However Dr. Ambedkar examined the functioning of a democratic government on the basis of steadiness and accountability.

b) Distinctive Federalism

Dr. Ambedkar’s concept of federalism meant that the State was a federation in normalcy, but unitary in emergency. He argued for a strong central government because the federation of India is a result of centrifugal force and not centripetal force. In the Draft Constitution Dr. Ambedkar offered more powers to the Centre and wanted to make it strong. Some members of the Constituent Assembly censured him for that reason. Justifying the provisions for a strong Central authority Dr. Ambedkar said that he made the Union Government strong and proficient enough to keeping of residuary power not only to “save minorities from the tyranny of majority” but also “for it is only the Centre which can work for a common end and for the general interests of the country as a whole.” He assumed sturdily that strong Union Government was a need and not a luxury for Independent India. The Indian federation is fundamentally founded on strong Centre, stretchy federalism and Cooperative Federalism. He argued that the character of the Constitution, it was “Federal in form and Unitary in Spirit”. It established a dual polity with the Union at the Centre and the States at the edge, each gifted with sovereign powers to be exercised in the field assigned to them correspondingly by the Constitution.

c) Fundamental Rights

Fundamental rights are very significant for dignified human life. In the Draft Constitution the “Fundamental Rights”, prescribed were justifiable in the Court of Law. A. V. Dicey assumed that omnipotence of the Central Government in the state, and the supremacy of law with respect to the rights of the individual. Dr. Ambedkar observed “equality of opportunity” as the most vivacious one.

All fundamental rights are enforceable human rights. Provisions for enforceability are there in Article 32 and 226 of the Constitution of India. He described Article 32 as the “very soul of the Constitution and the very heart of it” and stalwartly believed, fundamental rights would mean establishment of equality and liberty in order to transformation our social system, which is so full of disparities discernments, and other which skirmish with our fundamental rights and were based on the concept unreasonableness. By visualizing the need and importance of fundamental rights under the Resolution, Dr. S. Radhakrishnan said that it was the ‘socio-economic revolution’ which they were attempting to bring about. Therefore, it was necessary to remark the material conditions’ but while doing so, liberty of the human spirit must be safeguarded.

d) Directive Principles of State Policy and socio-economic justice

Part VI of the Constitution is dealing with the Directive Principles of State Policy which contains the positive obligations of the state towards its citizens. The Directives were meant to ensure social and economic justice. Dr. Ambedkar said: “What are called Directive Principles is simply another name for ‘Instruments of instructions’ to the legislature and the executive as to how they should exercise their power.”

A realist to the core, Ambedkar thought that in the absenteeism of economic and social justice political freedom would not bring about their social harmony or national integration. He encouraged the abolition of privileges on the basis of caste or status and dynamically struggled for the liberty and dignity of each individual.

e) Defensive discrimination

The tangible input of Ambedkar is echoed in the 'defensive discrimination scheme' or the 'reservation policy' of the government envisioned under various provisions of Part III and Part IV of the Constitution of India. There are the constitutional order to upgrade the condition of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes and the other backward classes residing in India. It was for accomplishing desired goal the reservation policy or the scheme of defensive discrimination was advocated and accomplished by him for ten years at least to enrich the living standard and surroundings of the various dejected and browbeaten sections of society.

f) Single citizenship and integrated judiciary

In the Draft Constitution Dr. Ambedkar prescribed single citizenship and an integrated judicial system unlike US and consistency in fundamental laws to assimilate Indian society which was not only disaffected into caste and class, but also into regions, religions, languages, traditions and cultures. Therefore, a strong Centre was very essential and crucial to maintain territorial veracity and administrative discipline.

g) Unique blend of rigidity and flexibility in the Constitution

To make the Constitution feasible and practicable enough Dr. Ambedkar encouraged adopting a mixed approach regarding amendment. It helps to clutch the country together both in peace or normal time and in war time. Therefore, during emergency the Constitution is behaving like a unitary Constitution.

h) Parliamentary Democracy

Ambedkar was an activist of parliamentary form of government exactly from the commencement of the Government of India Act of 1935. He decisively believed that the parliamentary form of government alone can escort in an democratic society.

i) Preventive detention

Preventive detention is one of the significant features of the Constitution of India. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was the supporter of the laws of preventive detention which has been incorporated in Article 22 of the Constitution.

Conclusion

Sant Gadge Baba Said "Janata is Janardan" which means people are God. All human being are precious and special invention of Almighty God. Mahatma Gandhi gave path and message of morality. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar gave shape to social aspect without discrimination and mistreatment. Dr. Ambedkar is still relevant to the realization of social justice in India for the most disadvantaged groups. In the present context of the polarized political environment, the political teachings of Dr. Ambedkar hold more relevance than ever. He was the most determined leader, chaser of the goal, strong willed, determined, inconspicuous, daring, painstaking, scholarly, self-respecting, proficient in work, submissive, enthusiastic recipient of the highest degrees, and diverse knowledgeable, virtuous user of the knowledge for the well-being of the society.

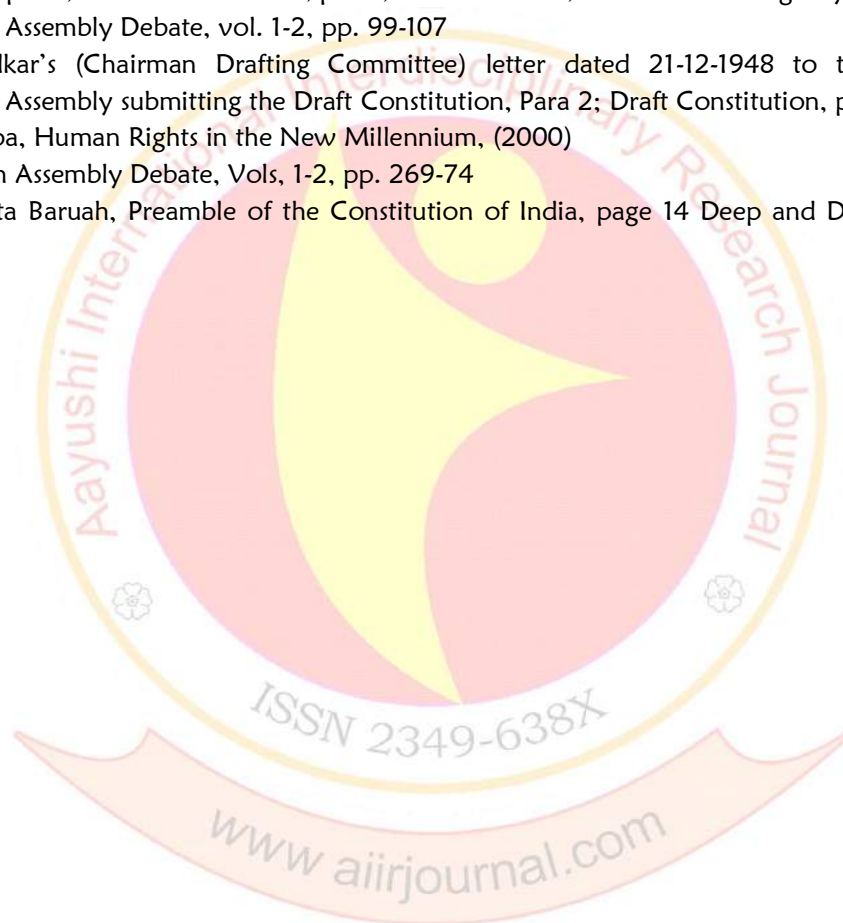

The contribution of Dr. Ambedkar in Indian democracy is not to be elapsed. As a chairman of the Drafting Committee he gave a shape to our country of a complete Sovereign, Democratic and Republic based on adult franchise. Baba Saheb Ambedkar's name will be written in golden letters in the history of India as an architect and originator of social justice. He was the most eminent person of age and chief manufacturer of the Constitution of India. He was one of the few sons in the history of India that he can be said to the gift of Indian freedom movement.

He spent his whole life for the betterment of the deprived, browbeaten, untouchables and anxious classes of people in our society. Undoubtedly Dr. Ambedkar's role and involvement to the making of the Constitution of India is of the uppermost order. Definitely he earned to be called the "father or the Chief Architect" of the Constitution of India.

Abstract

Many Economists have mentioned their theories and visions towards the development of developing nations since years. The relevance and application of those vision and theories play an important role to change the state of conditions of these nations. India, is one of the developing countries in the world with largest population is more in need of fruitful socio-economic vision and its application. Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar's vision for economy was more socio-economic in nature as he not only gave views for problem of rupee to improve international trade and develop it but also he gave number of solution to solve the social problems in the nation. Being a social economist, he always gave a thought on the welfare of labor, women, and children and backwards classes the country. His contribution in the welfare of these communities is still visible in the nation and has been safeguarding their interest over a period of times.

When economy is not in so developed state and still facing socio-economic problems, there is a need to restate vision of Dr. Ambedkar to frame strong policies and execute them to have a strong moral economy contributing well being of its people. This paper shows the empirical views of the people towards vision of Dr. Ambedkar to have a strong foundation of modern state.

About Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar.

Dr. Babasaheb Bhimrao Ambedkar was one of the most influential personalities who changed outlook of society. He was not architecture of Indian constitution, pioneer of RBI set up but also a great socialist and economist. He gave respect and status to the exploited class and weaker of the society. He not only protected lower communities, but also made a way for women empowerment, labour welfare. He was a visionary man who contributed in disciplines like economics, sociology, law, environmental sciences. Though he was born in the family of untouchable, his thoughts and actions were always considered superior. He fought against social evils and stratification. He believed in humanity, equity and equality. He is the highly qualified person in the history of traditional India. He wrote about international trade, devaluation of rupee and many economic issues. Somewhere Indian policy makers missed him while framing socio-economic policies to have better condition today.

1. Concept of Socio-economic development

Socio economics is a social science that studies how economics and social progress are related. It shows how modern societies progress because of economic decisions and policy and development of global economy. It is a comprehensive area which covers every social and economic factor. Not only economic growth in quantitative measure is adequate to call a nation developed, but social welfare has to be the associated attribute to it. Looking into India's today's condition, economic decisions are not so well working and also the social condition of the people is so satisfactory. It is easier to understand through the economic standard of living of people and creation of human capital.

- He first opposed Keynes and support gold standards system to solve the problem of rupee
- He wrote in center-state financial relationship
- He was against total capitalism as it leads to exploitation
- Agriculture is the core industry of state and not private firms
- Monopoly of the state should be on insurance sector what he believed in.
- Basic industries should be in the hand of government and should never be privatized.
- Rural development leads to better social life
- Land reform is necessary to avoid exploitation.

3 Social Thoughts of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar

- Labour welfare should be main role of business class
- Women empowerment should be given priority to have gender equality.
- Better of backward classes should be done through social policies
- Social equality should be encouraged as discrimination gives rise to social conflicts.
- Farmer welfare should be provided as they are the main contributor in social progress.
- Non discriminating should be the feature modern society.
- support to economically backward classes irrespective to caste, class and creed.

4 Today socio-economic problems in India

- Farmer's agitation against farmer's bill?
- Concern of Insurance sector as LIC in threat of partial privatization.
- Merger of banks on large scale
- Rise in extreme unemployment
- What is accountability of government if all is sold in private hands?
- Why nationalization of industries and banks is under threat?

Need Of The Study

We are in the era of modern state and still suffering from so many socio-economic issues in India. Income inequality is server, inter-class conflicts are on rise, capitalism is being observed in new from in service sector, there is social disharmony due to religious conflict, violence against women, and problem of devaluation of rupee and so on. There for a question arises on our policies and strategies. Can we take into consideration thoughts of Dr. Ambedkar and frame polices to have better socio-economic status of India? It is the main idea behind this paper. The enquiry is made to young minds regarding their opinion stating how Dr. Ambedkar is relevant today and how his thoughts if implemented in action can change the society and its outlook. The paper narrated significance of his great thoughts to have welfare state.

Atta Deep Bhav ! : Rethinking Social Work in the light of Ambedkar's Thought

Dr Mali Devi Sawariya

Assistant Professor, Department of Social Work,
Aditi Mahavidyalaya, University of Delhi

Abstract

Most of the social work curriculum in India have inadequately addressed by just narrowing his thoughts as a social reformer and hence by not providing adequate space to the significant role of emancipator thoughts and critical outlook of Ambedkar. The present article examines this exclusion and aims to revisit social work with Ambedkar's thought and vision for annihilation of caste and evolution of new social order that truly attends the systematic factors leading to human problems. This article is significant as it aims to address these issues and concerns so that our academic spaces, methodology, content, training and practice can become 'inclusive' in reality in the light of Ambedkar's thought.

Keywords: Radical Social Work, Critical Thought, Ambedkar, Emancipatory practice

Introduction: Decolonizing Social Work

Be Your Own Light! - Dr Bhim Rao Ambedkar (Ambedkar, 2014, p.382)

Social Work as a discipline and practice in Indian context historically has been looked as deeply rooted in various approaches beginning from charity - welfare- ecological- clinical- evidence-rights based and now as we know it - rights based empowerment approach. These approaches guided social work professionals in diverse time, places and context in providing human services to individuals, groups and communities. In Indian context, social work altogether remained focused on the diverse social issues, undoubtedly significant, but there has been major negligence in inclusion of critical social thoughts of Dr Bhim Rao Ambedkar, both in discipline as well as professional training of social workers. This structural exclusion of Ambedkar's vision and his critical reflections from the mainstream Indian social work education - origins, theories and ideologies highlights that still the intersectional oppressive elements of Indian social order have been inadequately addressed. The contemporary trend of indigenizing social work profession is also narrow in nature as it has limited itself on building its consistent identity from traditional Hindu philanthropies and chosen ideologies. That is the major reason behind the weakened state of politicized social work and the declining practice of 'social action' as a method of social work. Bailey and Brake (1975) highlighted that the negligence of structural factors behind social inequalities has limited the practice of radical social work. For its effective practice, it is necessary to understand that every domain of social work practice must be critical in nature i.e., 'essentially based on understanding the position of the oppressed in context of the social and economic structure they live in' (Bailey and Brake, 1975). Desai (2002) in his work on 'ideologies and social work' mentions the various philosophies, critique and implications of social change theories but laid no emphasis on Ambedkar's ideologies and its significant relationship with principles of social work and its methods. In doing so, the theoretical orientation and critical social thoughts to understand voices of the oppressed in dominant social order were consequently left unattended. This absence can be observed in significant work on 'Road to Reform: Saansi Tribe with a Criminal Tradition' in Taber and Batra (1996) as it lacks the theoretical analyses and critical social thoughts from Ambedkar's ideology to address the structural violence that Saansi community witnessed in its everyday social life by being labelled as ‘criminals’ historically. This orientation is necessary in contemporary social work practice so that the genesis of social pathologies can be contextualized and further based on this contextualization, the principles of self-determination, equality and liberty can be reclaimed by oppressed masses in social as well as public spaces. Globally, it was in 2014 that the following definition of social work was reconstructed in such a manner that it navigated spaces for collective voices to eradicate oppressive structures in indigenous social contexts:

Social work is a practice-based profession and an academic discipline that promotes social change and development, social cohesion, and the empowerment and liberation of people. Principles of social justice, human rights, collective responsibility and respect for diversities are central to social work. (IASSW & IFSW - 2014)

Above definition reveals that social order is not static, it is subject to the collective action and social movements that emerge from cognitive processes working behind empowerment and liberation of oppressed communities.

Much of the social thought of Ambedkar is also situated in the identification of pathologies in social environments and its oppressive nature. These thoughts not only are reflective and critical, but are also suggestive of the nature of interventions necessary to establish egalitarian society. Ambedkar’s thought in social work guides on how human agency can intervene in bringing social change through working on the centrality of inter-personal action as political (Adams, Dominelli & Payne, 2002). Social Work needs to be re-discovered by examining the spaces of representation as well as representational spaces it has produced in the domain of opportunities to produce knowledge that belongs to oppressed castes (Lefebvre, 1991). In the west, Frankfurt School proponents like Adorno (2000), Horkheimer (1974), Fromm (1973), Marcuse (1964), Benjamin (1969) and Habermas (1989) actively contributed in development of such social thoughts. But in Indian context, such developments were left unattended. In the light of above discussion, the present paper aims to address these limitations by reflecting explicitly upon Ambedkar’s reforms through his critical social thoughts as the means of production of knowledge that challenges social oppression. He advocated for a legislation that must ban the practice of superstitious belief because its prevalence reduces scientific temper, critical rationality and argumentative ability of people as it restricts production of dialogue, knowledge and ideas. As per this thought, Ambedkar (2014) connotes that the whole society can be effectively seen as a client system in social ecology where individual behavior shapes the collective practices and goals. For an effective community change, he identified blind faith in superstitions as one of the parasites which damaged the vital sub-systems of the client system which consequently degrades the functioning of interpersonal relationships and behaviors. During planning of intervention for such reform-oriented legislations, it is significant to note that the struggle for bringing transformation shall not be based on ‘survival of the fittest’. Very much in congruence to social work ethics, Ambedkar (2014) argues that ‘the question is, not whether a community lives or dies ; the question is, on what plane does it live’. Hence, his view reflects that the focus of rationally planned interventions must be on ensuring ‘quality of survival’ rather than meagre survival. This quality of survival can be worked upon by enhancing knowledge and means of its production. In his own words:

I have always held that Knowledge is Power in every field of life. The Scheduled Castes will not attain their goal of freedom and liberty until they drink deep of all knowledge. (Ambedkar, 2014, p.72)

Hence, it is the control of means of production of knowledge that social workers working with oppressed communities shall focus with aim to further establish and sustain the controlling impact on the State. The success of this intervention will play a crucial role in giving a direction to the legislations, policies and programmes of the State and thus development of communities will be made possible through controlling the ecology of subsystems of the State.

Human Dignity: Centrality of Thought

Another significant learning from Ambedkar's ideas that can be crucial for contextualizing social work was the chosen glorification of women in Indian epics troubled him. He expressed in his writings on how these epic texts propagated myths and distanced themselves with social injustice that women faced as human agencies in those texts. Critical rationality based on education derived from reason and experience was an important for principle through which he analyzed all the religious texts and scriptures and found that:

Buddhist women were the first in India who made a substantial and independent contribution to the religious literature and who were recognized as equals to the best authors of their time. This is shown by the fact that the songs of the Buddhist Sisters (under the title "Therigatha") were given the honoured position of Canonical Scriptures and thus placed beside the words of the Buddha and His most prominent disciples. (Ambedkar, 2014, p.498)

His thoughts on therigatha suggests the principle of equality across gender, castes and classes by signifying a poetic compilation of the collective community of Buddhist women from diverse social locations and vulnerable groups writing on their journey towards shared humanitarianism for all through self-abnegation. He offered interventions as he actively institutionalized and organized collective emancipatory efforts through formation of Bahishkrit Hitkarini Sabha in 1924. Its rise was based on value-oriented perspective to annihilate caste from social order. He envisioned that the values of respect for human dignity and worth was the core principle of Mahad Satyagraha. It was not for water, it was aimed to achieve humanhood and the collective human rights for oppressed castes. The Nashik Satyagraha for entry into Kalaram temple was again for human dignity and social equality. He emphasized it as 'triumph of justice' in the following words:

Ours is a movement which aims at not only removing our own disabilities, but also at bringing about a social revolution, a revolution that will remove all man-made barriers of caste by providing equal opportunities to all to rise to the highest position and making no distinction between man and man so far as civic rights are concerned. The bonfire of Manusmriti was quite intentional. We made a bonfire of it because we view it as a symbol of injustice under which we have been crushed across centuries. (Ambedkar, 2014, p.24)

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar believed that oppressed castes can achieve human dignity and self-elevation through helping our own selves, re-attaining our respect and establishing our knowledge structures. With a deep belief in Bergson (1998) that individuals 'can heighten their consciousness only by questioning every philosophical proposition', he insisted on 'Atta Deep Bhava' philosophy. It means ‘Be your own Light’ (Ambedkar, 2014, p.382). As Social Workers, these thoughts can be contextualized as attaining our right to self-determination with our values to bring human dignity and wellbeing for our people. It was during Nagpur Satyagraha that the Satyagrahis reclaimed this right to self-determination by establishing their own movement slogans - ‘Jai Bheem is my name, Scheduled Caste Federation is my Caste and Dalitsthan is my abode’. These structures of Dalit Satyagraha distinctively defined their idea of social justice and collective hope for new social order. His letters are also reflective his critical abilities to work for establishing ‘truth and social justice’ by criticizing the legal injustice faced by Dalit Women. In one such letters, he writes directly and fearlessly to the Editor of Times of India about the unjustified action of Home Minister of Bombay as he suspended action against perpetrators of crime against Dalit women. He responds that it was due to the lack of our control over the social-political hegemony due to which justice was denied to Dalit women.

Partition of India (1947): The Dawn

Further he relentlessly offered an inevitable and direct critique of the decision of Partition of India during 1947 by insisting that it was ‘unsatisfactory’ due to its immediate damaging impact on lives of human settlements living on the frontier which was to be divided. He stated that only ‘wisdom and statesmanship will dawn to prevent India from being divided into two parts’. He was troubled by the state of Muslims who distinguished themselves from Muslim league and as now their dignity and loyalty was under suspicion by their own fellow citizens. In the similar context, he asked critical questions from the State about the depressed condition of Scheduled Castes whose category was forcibly regulated under ‘essential services’ and hence were not permitted to represent their choices. He also wrote about concerns expressing lack of economic and social rehabilitation provision for Scheduled Caste in the exchange of population in both new Hindu and Muslim Zones after partition.

Research Orientation towards Social Conditions of Oppressed

In the context of research, his writings reflect a hope that there will be a time when the scholars belonging to oppressed castes and classes will work extensively in researching the lives of oppressed castes in their social conditions and this research work will further become a milestone in bringing social change in discipline as well as training based on emancipatory approach.

The Way Ahead: Implications for Social Work Practice

The inclusion of Ambedkar’s thought in social work discipline and practice will promote the values of social equality, self-abnegation, cultivation of collective will-power, respect for human dignity and worth, non-judgmental attitude and critical social thinking and conscience that can create mass mobilization against hegemonic social structures and make social transformation a reality. Ambedkar’s thought critiques the role of state and its legal -judicial sub-systems so that we can address the presence of systematic violence inside institutions of public welfare. For all of the above, the centrality lies in bringing knowledge related means under the control of oppressed castes and classes. This is the hope with which decolonization of social work knowledge systems has been the core intent of this paper.

Abstract

The joy of writing about dr. ambedkar's life event is unique. In India, whether it was the British rules or raja maharaja rules, there was no change in the inhuman atrocities on women and dalit in India. This country and the so-called mahatmas of the country have also been silent witnesses of centuries of injustice and exploitation. Dr. Bhimrao ambedkar studies everything and after reading a lot, he felt that if dalits and women were not given their rights before independence in this country, the situation would be even worse. His job experience in vadodara taught him that there is an urgent need to change these evils of the society. But how does all this happen? So nowadays kejrival has jumped into politics and made improvements for Delhi public. Even years ago, ambedkar also felt that this would be possible only if there was representation of dalits in politics. So in order to get this right I have tried to present in this paper everything that they have discussed and struggled for.

KEYS WORD: - Dalit, Inhuman, Injustices, Politics, Representation

Introduction:-

His widowhood and erudition have always been a matter of remarkable resilience to the great man who has been fighting for the salvation of every member of Indian society all his life. Racism was an inhuman system linked to prejudice. Due to which women and dalits were treated worse than animals. People who have been living a life of exploitation and hell for centuries have realized that if their rights are not guaranteed before independence, then no one will listen to us after independence. Messiah ambedkar of the untouchables believed that such a system in his country would guarantee the protection of the untouchables in an independent India. And that is possible only with the law of the people's representative of the dalits.

Poona Pact:-

There was no consensus on the issue of minorities in the round table conference. Gandhiji was not ready to legally consider dalits as separate. And on September 20, 1932, gandhiji declared a fast against the separate representation of the untouchables. Anxiety spread in the community. By the time dr. ambedkar reached Mumbai, he had become a symbol of hope, aspiration and strength of the dalit community. In his large reception, he said that may was against gandhiji. But people all over the world have come to realize that what gandhiji opposed of our exploitation is terrifying violence. Future generation of Hindus will appreciate the services rendered by me when they read the history of the round table conference. Dr. "mahatmaji should not create a situation where I have to choose between his lives on the one hand and the rights of the untouchables on the other" ambedkar said in a statement. dalits were outraged that for centuries the path to liberation from inhuman life was going to be opened but gandhiji's fast would be closed forever. All sorts of efforts by the congress worked by adopting the policy of sam dham dand bheed. Such an air was created all over the country that dr. ambedkar will take gandhiji's life but will not give up his stubbornness. Today's youth and people of dalit society are reading such things and thinking about who did what for our good. Gandhiji was a staunch opponent of dalits. Dr. bhimrav ambedkar once said in a packed meeting. If the sovition, yugoslavia, Czechoslovakia, etc are considered to be multi ethnic countries then india should seal their rights for a small group. And only then can all classes remain the same but it sadly makes sense to say that we are still far from the equality of society.

DR. BABASHAEB PLANE FOR DALIT REPRESENTATION:-

Dr. babasaheb presented a systematic plane for a separate representation of the untouchable's dalits for election on September 21 at a conference of leaders.

- (1) In the council 30 seats are given to the untouchables in madras, 16 in Mumbai, 50 in Bengal, 10 in Punjab, 40 in uttarPradesh, 20 in bihar, orissa and madhya Pradesh and 11 in Assam.
- (2) These seats will be elected by joint election along with reserved seats.
- (3) After the first 10 years, direct election will be held by joint election system with reserved Seats.
- (4) The special representation rights of the untouchables will remain for fifteen years, even After that. It will then be decided according to the opinion of the dalits.
- (5) The right of special representation of dalits in the executive committee of the centre shall Be the same as the right of the provincial executive.
- (6) All citizen of untouchable age will have the right to vote. You will have to give them Equal votes in both the provincial and central executives.
- (7) To represent dalits according to their population in municipalities, localities, district, Taluka boards, gram sanghes, school boards and other local bodies which exist if opened.
- (8) In central and provincial government jobs, posts should be given according to the Qualifications of dalits according to their population. At the same time, arrangements Should be made to simplify the rules of law in matters like education to meet their number.

(9) The education of the untouchable should be arranged by allocating the education grant to The population of the untouchables in each province.

According to him, the Hindu superpower was ready to give 256 seats to the untouchables as per the number of 18 seats. In the minority assembly in London, ambedkar had demanded 213 seats as per the number of 15 seats. Dr. ambedkar in his plans demanded 187 seats to save gandhiji's life. But sadly, gandhiji and hindu leaders did not even accept babsaheb low key talk. The pole of love and brotherhood opened here. In which gandhiji played the role of villain. And the representation of dalits was not legally accepted. The agreement was finally signed on September 24 with 148 seats. This settlement was named the puna agreement. This is depicted as a black chapter in Indian politics. That is the result of the betrayal of Gandhi and the congress with the untouchables is the puna agreement. Circumstances may change for a while in the behavior of any person or organization but its nature does not change day by day. Congress did not abide by the pune agreement and the tradition of cheating with the untouchables continued. Even today, every political party has its own idea and continues to do injustice to the untouchable. If babasaheb had not kept humanity and had not tried to save gandhaiji's life, the scenario of our country's politics today would have been somewhat different. In view of gandhiji's health, the terms of the truce were accepted. And gandhiji signed. How we can say gandhiji's our nation father?

Accepted Terms For Dalit Representation:-

- (1) What was the reserved seat for the untouchables in the general elections in the provincial? Councils will thus be allotted. 30 in madras, 12 in Mumbai including sindh, 4 in Punjab, And 12 in Bihar and Orissa, central province 20, a total 148, and this number of the Provincial council declared by the prime minister meet. Depending on the number of Seats.
- (2) As mentioned here in general election as many persons as dalit caste participate they will Be able to select 44 persons for each reserved seat. You will have the right to give them Only one vote. The four candidates who get the most votes in the early elections will be Able to stand as candidates in the general elections.
- (3) The untouchables will be represented in the central management committee in joint Elections and in accordance with the principle of defense. And other rules. Election will Also be held in relation to the provincial councils.
- (4) The practice will be abolished within 10 years if the practice of electing candidates for the Above central as well as provincial managing assemblies is stopped as stated below.
- (5) Sects may have participated in the agreement as far as the dalit castes are represented as Per rules (1) and (2) for reserved seats for central and provincial manager's members. After meeting each other, you will continue until a decision is reached by peace.
- (6) For dalit brother, the report of the Lothian committee on suffrage will be in proportion to The central and central managing meetings.
- (7) Being of dalit casts, no person shall disqualify for election to a municipal or district local Board or appointment to any government job. Dalits will be represented as per the Education laid down in the facts.
- (8) Adequates amount is allocated separately for the education of dalit castes from the Amount to be fixed in respect of education in each province.

FIG:-2 PAPER HEDLINE FOR POONA PACT

Conclusion:-

The task of waking up dalits from sleep was done by dr. ambedkar did. Night and day hard work made efforts sweating, making dalits revolt against injustics and that is why dr. ambedkar was ready to start an agitation at any time. The contribution made by Dr. bhimrao ambedkar for the upliftment of dalits was indescribable and memorable. That is why his name was immortalized in the word.

Question of Gender Equality in India from Ancient to Modern Era In the view of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

Prof Bharat Maurya

Chaudhary Bansi Lal University Bhiwani Haryana 127021.

Abstract

The whole world cannot be complete without just society. Man, and women must live together with equality, justice, and in a faire manner. This was the thought of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar. In India women rights had not been given due respect in Ancient, Medieval, and even in Modern era. Gender equality and Ambedkar views would be examined in this paper. How Ambedkar seen Gender question in India? What was the remedy in his mind for gender equality? In ancient time women was not consider fit for equal right, respect dignity equal to man. In medieval period Shariati base law couldn't consider women equal to man but in Modern era and after independence with Hindu code bill and Hindu Succession Act (1956) provide same equal rights to men. though the India constitution has provided equal rights to women and man irrespective of gender, caste, class, creed, but in Indian society political, economic, social culturally different is still relevance. In this Paper I find that there is too much difficulty for women to get equal rights for equal opportunity dignity value and respect.

Keywords- Mitakhshara school, Privy Council, Vara dakhshina, Uniform succession n law, Gender Equality.

Each human being deserves equal respect and dignity irrespective of caste, class, religion, gender, social, economic and cultural background. In Indian culture from the earliest times Hindu women's legal right to inherit property has been restricted. Manu writes; Her father protects her in childhood, her husband protects her in youth and her sons protects her in old age. A woman is never fit for independence". however, women were getting property but not on the basis of principal of equally distribution from ancestral and marital family's property either movable or immovable. Women were getting property in the name of stridhan (literally, women's property or fortune) and it mainly came from marriage gifts clothes, jewelry and in some cases landed property.

In Ancient Hindu Scripts: Women and Property –

The Sanskrit saying “Na stri swatantramrhati – Swatrantam Na Kachit Striyah” means that women were unfit for any independent existence that was the rule of ancient India for women. Women were described

As shakti (Goddess of universal power) Mahalakhami, (Goddess of wealth) Ma Sarasvati, (Goddess of knowledge) by Krishan in Mythological stories (Puranas). For an unmarried woman

The ancient scriptures not mention any property. The texts of Hindu religion were created by lord Brahma like Vedas and Smriti and sruties in which the rights of women about property also mention.

Three clauses were mention in The Mitakhshara School

- 1- The importance of block relationship in matters of in heritance.
- 2- The restrictions placed on coparcener's share in the joint family property.
- 3- The distinction between male and female heirs.

In the view of above clause, the property right of women was restricted and the widow of a deceased coparcener could not enforce partition of her husband's share against his brothers.

Dayabhaga School-

- 1-The right to inheritance arises from the spiritual offerings to the deceased ancestors.
- 2-The right over Hindu joint family property, devolves to the heir on the death of the father not by birth.
- 3-For heir of joint family property each share is definite, each brother can sell his particular fraction of the same.

The Privy council used the term property rights as “women’s estate” where by the female owner takes it as a limited owner,

1-She cannot ordinarily the corpus.

2-On her death it goes to the next heir of the last full owner i.e., the male owner from whom the woman had inherited.

The dharma shastra:

In this classical book there is mention that the wife of an absent manger, of the widow of a dead manager can alienate or transfer family property belonging to numerous Minors who are unable to enter into contractual relationships in their own persons, especially in situations that call for maintaining dependent and carrying out the various obligations of the family. When women would be in distress then she can be manager however she can’t be manager when she wishes by themselves for their own purposes.

As full owner of property Hindu women never recognized. even women were considered a child by many texts.

Medieval Period: -

Shariyat the personal laws of Hindu community were never disturbing by believers of Islam. In the form of Varadakshina or dowry, newly wedded couples were getting jewelry and other gift that’s become a status symbol for matrimonial gift. Due to women’s estate concept and socio-cultural reasons women got landed property either by inheritance specially from the male members of the family such as the husband or the father-in-law or by share obtained by partition of the property. She was made the owner subject to law limitations – first, she could not ordinarily alienate the corpus and second on her death it devolved upon the rest.

The Modern Period: -

The Hindu women’s right to property act (1937) .It established Hindu women’s rights over landed properties inherited from male owners ,especially from husbands, Even though to a limited extent.

There was three provision about widows

- 1.intestate man’s widow
- 2.widow of a predeceased son,
- 3.window of a pre-deceased grandson.

1937 act established limited right for Hindu women in their intestate husband’s property .

Act did not say any things about share of women in agricultural lands.

The Hindu Succession Act (1956).

It was based on Hindu code bill a uniform succession law, the Hindu succession act (1956) was adapted for Hindus in free India and finally gave a death blow to the ancient practice of preventing women from male heirs. With this act the concept of women's estate was finally discarded and the meaning of landed property and other

Movable and immovable properties. Section 14 of the legislation declare that any property a Hindu woman receives after June 17,1956, will be her absolute property. the definition of property in act includes both movable and immovable property that she receives as gift, or through maintenance or inheritance, or that she acquires by her own skill or by purchase prescriptions, partition etc., all type that were shown in text of vijnaneshwar that was nine types

- 1.gifts and bequests from relations;
- 2.gifts and bequests from relations;
- 3.property acquired by self- exertion and mechanical arts;
- 4.property purchased with stridhan;
- 5property acquired by compromise;
- 6.property obtained by adverse possession;
- 7.property obtained in lieu of maintenance.
- 8.property obtained by inheritance; and
- 9.share obtained by partition.

In Hindu code bill it was as follows:

The widow, the daughter, the widow of a pre-deceased son, all are given the same rank as the son in the matter of inheritance. the daughter also is given a share in her father's property: her share is prescribed as half of that of the son. The number of female heirs recognized how much longer than under either the Mitakshara or the Dayabhaga.

Under section 15 of the Hindu succession act (1956), the daughter in law inherits only when she is a widow .hence she cannot inherit her due share in her father in laws property when her husband is alive .Section 23 of the Hindu succession act states that the right of female heirs to claim partition of the dwelling house shall not arise until the male heirs choose to divide their respective shares therein it differentiates between married, unmarried and windowed daughters ability to claim right of residence .it does not give the right to claim partition but gives a right Of residence only if the daughter either is unmarried, has been deserted or has been separated from her husband. A married daughter who has left her husband of her own accord and is not deserted by her husband has no right to reside in the dwelling house. When a married daughter Becomes widow or has been deserted by her husband. she can claim only residential rights in the dwelling house. The restriction on the partion is imposed only on the female heirs. if a male heir chooses to partition the dwelling house, the female heirs cannot present him, but they will be entitled to their share. The Hindu succession (Andhra Pradesh) Amendment Act (1985) made a remarkable development. According to this law the rights of the daughter are equal to that of the son in any circumstances. This law found the mitakshara system is in violation of the fundamental right of equality.

Act, 2005 section 6: - India supreme court give land mark judgement in September 2005 that women would have an equal right to a share in property as men and daughter must get share in inherit ancestral property along with male relatives. the difference between male and female was abolished.

Women can be party of rights in the coparcenary property among male and female member of a joint Hindu family.

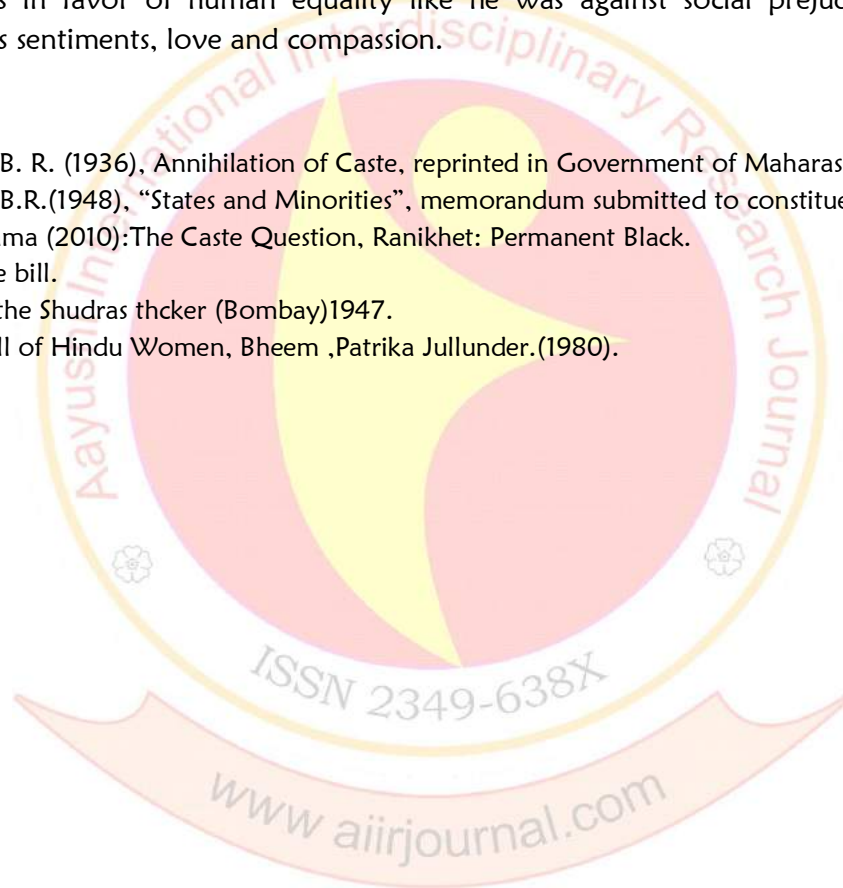

The question of gender equality has been explained in Indian constitution, in preamble, fundamental rights, fundamental duty except these provisions many laws empowered to state that they can protect women from discriminations on any ground.

Did Ambedkar's dream fulfill by Indian Constitution, Law, and Society? – The answer is no. He wanted that equality in all forms like equality in dignity, respect, identity, economic, social, education, job, decision making, social status, access to health facilities etc. He also strictly Wish to remove discriminations like, untouchability, caste base discrimination, and unequal division of property, public place access etc. In India women were excluded from reading religious books, property, education, respect, social interaction. Practically if women get property then she would not have right to take decisions related to property such as selling, building or other related decisions. He was in favor of human equality like he was against social prejudices (race, gender, common, Feeling's sentiments, love and compassion.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Views on Democracy

Prof. Naresh Wasudeo Patil

Assistant Professor

Kumbhalkar College of Social Work Wardha Rashtasant Tukdoji Maharaj Nagpur University Nagpur

Abstract

Dr. Ambedkar was a revolutionist of the truest kind, not merely dreaming of setting India free from British rule but of remodeling India into a country where freedom holds meaning for everyone. He dedicated his life to the upliftment of the Dalits. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was perhaps the first Indian political thinker who realized the inapplicability of the Western pattern of democracy to India. Ambedkar wished social reformers to create public opinion to fight the gross inequalities in the society. This paper focuses on the views on Democracy of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar. He was the „beacon of light“ for the millions of depressed, oppressed, and exploited people of India. The contributions of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar pervade the whole gamut of social sciences. Therefore his legacies to knowledge make him a socialist, historian, economist, political thinker and strategist, lawmaker, and cultural revolutionary. It is very sad that the media in the past, as well as the present, has projected Ambedkar mainly as a bitter critic of the Hindu religion and a great social rebel. They have ignored Dr. Ambedkar's multifaceted personality. In this paper, we tried to focus Dr. Ambedkar's role in Modern India.

Keywords: Emancipation, inequalities, humanist, Dalits, Reform, Democracy

Introduction

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, was an Indian jurist, economist, politician, and social reformer who inspired the Dalit Buddhist movement and campaigned social against discrimination towards the untouchables (Dalits), while also supporting the rights of women and labor. He was the first law and justice minister, the architect of the Constitution of India, and a founding father of the Republic of India. In India or anywhere, he was often called Babasaheb, meaning "respected father" in Marathi and Hindi. Dr. Ambedkar was an excellent patriot, social thinker, political reformer, a philosophical writer with progressive ideas. He stood for all political, social, and cultural activities which increased the explanation for human progress and happiness. He was the soul for the constitution of India. He took so many efforts for the betterment of the oppressed and depressed classes. And during this struggle, he stood rare crusading spirit, carving a move into this process plays a significant role for himself among the leading architects of recent India.

Ambedkar was a prolific student earning doctorates in economics from both Columbia University and the London School of Economics and gained a reputation as a scholar for his research in law, economics, and political science. In his early career, he was not only an economist but professor, and lawyer also. His later life was marked by his political activities; he became involved in campaigning and negotiations for India's independence, advocating political rights and Social freedom for Dalits, and contributing significantly to the establishment of the state of India. In 1956, he converted to Buddhism initiating mass conversions of Dalits.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a foremost philosopher and strategist of the emancipation movement of Indian Untouchables. He viewed the problem of emancipation of humanity in general and, the untouchables in particular in terms of historical and contemporary context. According to him, the root cause of Indian untouchability lies in the Hindu religious philosophy and the Hindu way of life. As a solution to this Dr. Ambedkar challenged the historically existing Hindu social order and counter developed his own social model in the process of developing his movement. In doing so he had to work out his strategy from time to time. The development of political action is a process of shifts and turns in views congruent with the basic goals and objectives of the movement.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had to frame his thinking in the process of giving responses to the views expressed, and the idea propounded and put forth, by the then existing movements of his time. He acted in a historically given Indian social milieu. The development of his political thought must be viewed from these angles. The changes and continuities in his political ideas in his lifetime i.e. from 1916 to 1956.

Objectives of the Study:

Every research has some objectives. Researcher does any research by keeping some particular objectives. Objectives give proper direction to the research. The present topic has been selected by keeping the following objectives.

1. To study Dr. Ambedkar's views on democracy in detail.
2. To know the democratic system.
3. To study the benefits of democratic system.
4. To make aware people about democratic system.
5. To study how democratic system is useful for social change.

Hypothesis of the Study:

- 1 All Indian citizens don't have knowledge of democratic system in detail.
- 2 Many people are not aware of democracy.
- 3 Democracy can be the medium of social change.
- 4 Some people are well familiar with democratic system.
- 5 Democracy is made for all kind of people.

Research Method

Research means search for knowledge and research of search. Research solves intellectual and professional problems and finds solutions for it. Research means a systematic study in any faculty for finding new principles and old principles. Research is an intellectual process. It removes faults of old knowledge and adds something to the new knowledge. For the present research analytical method has been used to focus the prime objective of the study

Dr. Ambedkar as a social reformer

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was one of the very important political thinkers and social revolutionaries, Who has produced modern India. If we try to look into Dr. Ambedkar's sociological approach to abolish untouchability we find that he picked up the Nashi Kalaram temple entry, mahad water tank issue, opening of educational institutions for Dalit and Backward castes as entry points to attack Brahmanical hegemonic theory for exploitation, control and manipulation of the Dalit masses in order to Annihilation of Caste

Dr. Ambedkar believed in peaceful methods of social change. He was supported to constitutional lines in the evolutionary process of social transformation. He thought that factors like law and orders are indispensable for social life. It also strives to sustain institutions that will make better

‘social order’. He was opposed to the violent methods in social change. He had no faith in anarchy methods. A welfare state of all cannot be developed on the grounds of terror, force, and brutal methods. According to him violent methods to a peaceful society isn't only improper but also unscientific and immoral Dr. Ambedkar’s views the concept of Democracy

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar was a nationalist and patriot to the core. In the Constituent Assembly, he remarked, —We must be determined to defend our independence to the last drop of blood. Although Dr. Ambedkar was an indomitable freedom fighter, he never deviated from the democratic norms. He bitterly opposed direct action and other unconstitutional means. According to him, —Democracy is a form and method of the state whereby revolutionary changes within the economic and social life of the people are caused bloodlessly. Therefore, he neverthrew his lot with those that adopted violent and unconstitutional means. According to him, the unconstitutional means are the grammar of anarchy. He advised, —We must abandon the method of civil disobedience, non-cooperation, and Satyagraha. When there no way left for constitutional methods for achieving the economic and social objective, there was an excellent deal of justification for unconstitutional methods. But where constitutional methods are open, there can be no justification for these unconstitutional methods. || (Bhagavan)

If we look at Ancient Indian history it would be clear that India had a long tradition of Democracy. In Dr. Ambedkar’s views, the concept of Democracy, Panchsheel, and the majority have their roots in Buddhist thought. During the time of Buddha democratic practice was prevalent in India. Lord Buddha was a great supporter of the tribal democratic states. In no other part of the ancient world were the relations of man and man and of man, and of man and the state so fair and humane as it was in India. There was government by discussion. In ancient India the Tribal Councils –Sabhas and Samit's- had a big say in the governance system, people were gathered in large numbers in open-air platforms to discuss matters of public importance and that was contained the elements of a modern Parliament. The king was primarily seen as a protector and defender of public opinion. The Buddha Jatakas cite stories of kings ousted by mass revolts. Lord Buddha was born in a ‘Sakya Clan’ which was belonged to the Republics. He was born a democrat and died as a democrat. At the time he lived there were 14 Monarchial states and 4 Republics. He belongs to the clan of Sakya and the Sakya kingdom was a Republic. He was extremely loved by Vaisali which was his second home just because it was Republic.1 The Buddhist texts reveals that after the death of Lord Buddha, the 1st Buddhist Council was held at Raja-giha, the 2nd Buddhist Council was held at Vaishali, the 3rd Buddhist Council was 260 summoned by king Ashoka at Pataliputra, and the 4th Council was held under king Kaniska, and all the four Councils were large public Assemblies based on the democratic pattern.

In the Sakya Parliament the young and the old assembled-father, son, and younger brother all were possessing franchise. They had the right to speech and vote and each one could aspire guarded. Siddhartha Gautam was initiated into the Sakya Parliament at the age of twenty. Most of the modern Parliament procedures were adopted by the Sakya Parliament. It was the rule of procedure in the Sakya Parliament that there could be no debate without a motion and no motion could be declared carried unless it was passed three times. The Republican society functioned in an atmosphere of equality and mutual respect. Moreover, the social organization was free from sectional barriers. The Republican Constitutions were really laying the foundation of “social democracy”. The Buddhist Sangha was fashioned on the secular and democratic procedures of the political Sangha.² Supporting the historical evidence of the past.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar viewed that ancient India was the master of the World. There was such intellectual freedom in Ancient India as was nowhere else to be found. There was a time when India was studded within Republics and where there were monarchies, they were either elected or limited. But they were not absolute. Parliamentary democracy is unknown to us at present. But India, at one time had Parliamentary institutions. If one goes through the 'Suktas' of Mahaprinibbana, one can find ample evidence of the democratic method in Buddhism. The Buddhist Bhikshu Sanghas were nothing but Parliament and the Sanghas knew and observed all the rules of Parliamentary procedures known to modern times. It is stated that the system of secret ballot paper was followed in the Buddhist Sanghas. The ballot paper is called, 'Salapatraka Grahakas'. Unfortunately, we have lost all these past heritages.

Every individual in a Sangha was equal by birth and every family was equal for political purposes. These Republican principles of Buddha's Constitutional pattern of Sanghas had a tremendous impact on Ambedkar. He strived hard for the establishment of democracy in post-independence India. He expressed his anguish over the loss of the entire past heritage. To him, the Hindu Social System divided the society into Varnas and Castes and also denied the existence of liberty, equality, and fraternity which are the deepest concern of democracy. If in democracy liberty does not destroy equality and equality does not destroy liberty, it is because at the base of both there is a fraternity. Fraternity is, therefore, the root of democracy.⁵ The Hindu social system raised all barricades against democracy. It did not teach fraternity.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar interpreted the concept of democracy in the Indian context. In his opinion, democracy is not a fixed dogma, it always changes its form, it is not always the same in the same country, and that it always undergoes changes in purpose. Indian democracy was quite different from the Western democracy of Athens, England, and America. Hence, it is pertinent to understand the meaning of democracy known to the West. Aristotle, the father of Political Science, defined democracy in terms of the roots of the Word; 'demos' means people, 'Kratein' means the rule. To him, democracy is a form of government in which supreme power is in the hands of freemen.

Aristotle's definition was that democracy was a Constitution for those who are free and owners of the property- that is, all citizens except the serfs. The people form a majority in an elected sovereign government and exercise some role in decision-making and in judging in disputes. This classical definition of democracy found echoes in John Stuart Mill and Thomas Jefferson. Jefferson preferred that form of democracy which provided a "government by its citizen in mass, acting directly and personally, according to rules established by the majority".⁶ J.S. Mill, democracy was the "ideally best form of government" in which every citizen is "at least occasionally called on to take an actual part in the government by the personal discharge of some public function, local or general".⁷ To Walter Bagehot democracy as "Government by discussion". Abraham Lincoln defined democracy as a government of the people, by the people, and for the people. In the views of Anthony Arblaster, "for democracy is a concept before it is a fact because it is a concept it has no single precise and agreed to mean".⁸ It shows his deep insight into the real problems of democracy. Because as it is argued in recent times, democracy cannot be used as a plain and simple, uncomplicated term of description at all.

In fact, Dr.Ambedkar understood it very well that the Western pattern of democracy is not applicable to the Indian scenario. Dr.Ambedkar's thought in democracy is not limited to what he thought about political democracy, and the machinery for its implementation,-like franchises, election, political power, and electorates, but is reflected in all his writings, lectures, speeches, conferences, and above all, in his lifetime struggle against the Hindu caste system, his knowledge of the western political literature on democracy was astounding and by his thorough research in this field, he could see very well that the enlightened citizenship of western democracies was based on the pillars of equality and fraternity which could not even be conceived of in the caste-ridden Indian socio-political context. Even the early western aversion to the rule of the multitude that goes by the name of "people" was carefully studied by him when he contemplated the possibility of a post-independence democratic government in India. Remembering Edmund Burke, he warned against the tyranny of the majority. Nowadays, it has become a well-known problem of democracy that a majority of votes can be questioned on many grounds and can, sometimes, place one before very uncomfortable questions. That is to say, in the democratic process of adult franchise, elections of the electorate can be very undemocratic because of a number of wrong rhetorics linked with it that usually go unquestioned.

Ambedkar realized that a mere distinction between state and society, state and government, and the state and nation are not enough to serve the purpose. The views of J.S.Mill, Harold J. Laski, and MacIver on democracy were not appropriate in the Indian social system because they failed to focus on the social relationship between the people who form a society. Indian society, to Ambedkar, is based on Castes and everything is organized on the basis of caste. The Indian society does not consist of individuals; it consists of a collection of castes with an utter lack of bond of sympathy or cooperation. The existence of the Caste is a standing denial of the ideals of democracy.

He expressed his firm belief and said —Constitution is not a mere lawyer's document, it is a vehicle of life, and its spirit is always the spirit of the age || . The greatness of his life and mission indicates conspicuously, his prophetic zeal and burning love for suffering humanity made a deep impression on his contemporaries.(Bhagavan; B. R. Ambedkar) He expressed his grave concern regarding the mentality of Indians. In his Radio talk, he said, —Indians today are governed by two different ideologies. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar set out their political ideal in the preamble of the Constitution affirms a life of liberty, equality, and fraternity.. (Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, Dr. Ambedkar, and Democracy: An Anthology)

The Constitution of India has abolished Untouchability. But what Dr. Ambedkar had visualized, —If social consciousness is such that it is prepared to recognize the rights which law has chosen to enact, rights will safe and secure. But if the fundamental rights are opposed by the community, no law, no parliament, no judiciary can guarantee them in the real sense of the word, || appears to be true.(Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, Dr. Ambedkar, and Democracy: AnAnthology; Ambedkar and Moon)

Conclusion

In his short life, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's was a one of the most remarkable person in India. He rose up from the dust, from being treated worse than an animal to becoming the father of the Indian Constitution. Dr. Ambedkar was truly a multi-faceted personality. A veritable emancipator of Dalits and marginalized groups , a great National leader and patriot, a great author, a great educationalist, a great political philosopher, a great religious guide, and above all a great humanist without any parallel among his contemporary. Dr.Ambedkar gave inspiring self-confidence to the untouchables who were blind, deaf, and dumb. Some called him Moses, some Abraham Lincoln, and some Booker T.Washington. He was a splendid organizer. He began movements to give an identity to the untouchables. Then he built up organizations of land labor and industrial workers. He was democratic to the core, so when he prepared announcements, it was through his party that he published them. He practiced equality of human beings. Hence, he has been regarded as „A Ray of Hope” for the downtrodden in India

Dr. Bhimrao Ramaji Ambedkar (1891-1956) contribution to water crisis in India was highly remarkable. He was a member of the Central Cabinet in charge of the Department of Irrigation and Electric Power between 1942 and 1946 formulated many policies and the planned development of irrigation and electric power resource can be undeniable as one comes across and visualize the splendid outcome after India crossed more than seven decades of independence. The multi-purpose large dams and reservoirs have made a significant contribution towards meeting water demand of various States both Urban and Rural areas in the country, realising the vision of Dr B. R. Ambedkar.

This paper, as a mark of commemoration to his birth anniversary and whole-hearted gratitude to the services he rendered towards the upliftment of Indian society in all jargons.

Introduction

Dr. Bhimrao Ramaji Ambedkar (1891-1956) contribution to water crisis in India was highly remarkable. He was a member of the Central Cabinet in charge of the Department of Irrigation and Electric Power between 1942 and 1946 formulated many policies and the planned development of irrigation and electric power resource can be undeniable as one comes across and visualize the splendid outcome after India crossed more than seven decades of independence. When Ambedkar placed as charge of irrigation and electricity, those years were the crucial period for the evolution and adoption of the concept of economic planning at an all -India level. Meticulously all the problems were solved as he took a positive alternative policies which were in existence from the British era and formulated them in action¹.

This paper, as a mark of commemoration to his birth anniversary and whole-hearted gratitude to the services he rendered towards the upliftment of Indian society in all jargons.

Policies and Planning for water

Dr. Ambedkar involvement in the formulation of certain development policies and planning are very less known by the young generation. He was involved in framing the policies on two important occasion --- one as Law Minister in the Central Cabinet of independent India during 1947-1951 and another as a member of the Viceroy's Executive Council incharge of the labour, irrigation and power portfolio during 1942-1946. In July 1942 irrigation and electricity became the earmarked subjects and major concern of the labour portfolio to frame policy and planning for it².

The Labour Department from the scratch started all - India planning for the development of irrigation, waterways and navigation. During this period, very first time that the Centre began to consider planning as a fundamental subject for water, mineral resources, power etc., on a wide-scale and against all India background.

Dr. Ambedkar, foremost in the frontier of the affairs of the Labour Department was the backbone in initiating many steps such as :

(a) the emergence of a definite all-India policy with regard to the development of "water and electric power resources" of the country; "States and Minorities" (1947), "Communal Deadlock and the Way to solve it" (1945), "Evidence before the Southborough Committee on Franchise" (1919), in Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar: Writings And Speeches, op. cit., Vol. 1, 1979.

(b) the creation of an administrative apparatus and technical bodies at the Centre to assist the states in the development of irrigation and electric power resources such as the present-day Central Water Commission and Central Electricity Authority;

(c) the adoption of the concept of River Valley Authority or Corporation to overcome constitutional problems regarding the jurisdiction of Central-State Governments and to develop irrigation and hydro-electric power of interstate rivers;

(d) the introduction of the concept of regional and multipurpose development of river valley basin for the first time in India; and

(e) the initiation of some important present day river valley projects, major and minor, which include the Damodar River Valley, Sone River Valley, Orissa river Schemes including the Mahanadi, the Chambal River Scheme and the schemes for the river of the Deccan³.

In 1943 he emphasised that, We must be prepared for the revaluation of the value. It will not be enough to make industrial development of India as a goal. We shall have to agree that any such industrial development shall be maintained at a socially desirable level. It will not be enough to bend our energies for the *production of more wealth in India. We shall have to agree not merely to recognise the basic right of all Indians to share in that wealth as a means for a decent and dignified existence, but devise ways and means to ensure him against insecurity*⁴. This view was emphasised in the formulation of an irrigation and hydroelectric policy for India. In October 1943, in his presidential address to the Policy Committee on electric power, Ambedkar pointed out the significance and the ultimate objective behind the need for electrical development in India and said: Before I conclude may I make a few observations pointing out the significance and the ultimate objective that lies behind the need for electrical development in India? It is necessary that those who are placed in charge of the subject should have the fullest realisation of the significance and its objectives. If you agreed with me in this I will request you to ask yourself a question, Why do we want cheap and abundant electricity in India? The answer is that without cheap and abundant electricity no effort for the industrialisation of India can succeed. Ask another question, Why is industrialisation necessary? and you will have the full significance made clear to you at once, for the answer to the question is, we want industrialisation of India as the surest means to rescue the people from the eternal cycle of poverty in which they are caught. Industrialisation of India must; therefore be grappled with immediately. He went on to add that India would have to tackle the problem connected with electricity in an earnest, statesman-like manner, thinking in terms of human life and not in terms of competing claims of the Centre versus the Provincial Government⁵.

A similar emphatic was accorded in planning to the development of irrigation. In his Presidential address to the Conference on Multipurpose Development of Damodar Valley Ambedkar stress that the project should get ensuring benefits not to the high level people but down to the grass roots i.e. everyone living in the vally and some of those in the vicinity as all have to share the prosperity of the project as it was being implemented⁶.

To uproar the view, he brought out the essentials of establishment of some agencies so that the agency can set about planning and the waterways becomes the solution to most of the poverty-stricken millions of the country.

The key elements of the new water policy as advocated by him constitutes (a) adoption of a multipurpose approach for water resources, development on the basis of river valley basin, (b) introduction of the concept of river valley authority and (c) Creation of technical expert bodies at the centre to promote development of water and power resources.

6. B.R. Ambedkar (1945), "Multi-Purpose Plan for Development of Orissa Rivers," Presidential Speech at Cuttack Conference, November 8, 1945, Indian Information, December 15, p. 304

On every aspects Ambedkar expressed his views in all the discussions and put everyone of them during his lecturers. Between November 15, 1943 and November 8, 1945 he addressed 5 conferences and two of which were on Damodar Valley Project both held at Calcutta (January 3 and August 23, 1945) one on the Mahanadi Valley Project and two on electric power. In the conference on Orissa rivers, Ambedkar expressed his views about the conservation and use of water resources. He referred to the recommendations given by the various committees starting from the first Committee in 1872 to the Orissa Flood Advisory Committee of 1945⁷.

Criticising the remedies suggested by these committees, he observed: *With all respect to the members of these Committees, I am sorry to say that they did not bring the right approach to bear on the problem. They were haunted by the thought that water in excessive quantity was an evil, that when water comes in excessive quantity, what needs to be done is to let it gush into the sea in an orderly flow. Both these views, are now regarded as grave misconceptions, as positively dangerous from the point of view of the good of the people*⁸.

In the Conference on Orissa Rivers (November 8, 1945) he observed: Navigation in India has had a very chequered history. During the rule of the East India Company, provision for international navigation occupied a very prominent part in public works budget of the Company's government. Many of the navigation canals we have in India today.... are remnants of that policy. Railway came later, and for a time the policy was to have both railways and canal navigation. By 1875, there arose a great controversy in which the issue was railways versus canals. The battle for canals was fought bravely by late Sir Arthur Cotton..... Unfortunately supporters of railways won. He added: I am not quite happy about this victory of railways over canals. Much more annoying is the opinion of supporters of railways that canals must go because they do not pay without knowing that if the canals do not pay it is not because they cannot pay but because their capacity to pay has been altered radically leaving them uncompleted. I am sure that internal navigation cannot be ignored in the way in which it has been in the past. We ought to borrow a leaf from Germany and Russia in this matter and not only revive reconstruction of our old canals but make new ones also and not to sacrifice them to the exigencies of railways¹¹.

Thus the storage scheme that Ambedkar emphasised would not only give voluminous approach to irrigation and electricity but also provide a long line of internal navigation. He proposed that the multipurpose use of water would convert the forces of evil into powers of good. He stated that the project could become a success if only it was treated as regional project. It need local treatment. The systematic approach towards the introduction of the concept of River Valley Authority for Projects on inter-state rivers and creation of two technical expert bodies at the centre namely the Central Waterways, Irrigational Navigation Commission and the Central Technical Power Board¹².

Conclusion

Ambedkar --- the visionary of future India, who wants his country and people to live forever advised the multipurpose use of water resources for the regional development of the entire river valley basin and the key factor of new water policy. The adoption of the concept of River Valley Authority and creation of two technical expert bodies at the Centre were means to achieve this objective.

He inculcated and solved the waterways problems as he approved the draft on the proposed Central Waterways, Irrigation and Navigation Commission. The response was overwhelmingly positive with nine out of eleven provinces and most of the States welcomed it except Madras and Bengal.

Hence, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar known widely for the contributions to the making of the modern India went one step ahead to solve the water problems and if he is to be alive the recent project the State of Tamilnadu --Cauvery-Gundaru river link would have taken a different curve as the young generation miss him greatly for the further development of India.

Contribution Of Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar Towards Improvements In Economical Sector

Dr. Mahendra Kailas Sonawane

(Vice Principal)

Institute of Science, Poona College of Computer Sciences Wakad Pune-57

I. Introduction:-

Dr. Bhim Rao Ambedkar is known as the father of Indian constitution as he was the foremost draftsman of Indian constitution which was adopted on 26th November 1949 and got implemented on 26th January 1950. Because of his noteworthy works and contributions in the various fields he is also known as a great leader of freedom movement, a high-calibre lawyer, a great dalit leader and a distinguished economist. Babasaheb was a highly intellectual person of his time. He was the first person to pursue PhD in economics from abroad. He was the first South Asian to have double doctorate degree in economics from London School of Economics and Columbia University. With such a strong background in economics still Babasaheb contributions in the field of economics are not so popular. The possible reason may be that his extraordinary work in sociology, law, religion and politics has overshadowed his contributions in economics. But this does not mean that his contributions in economics were diminished. The important contributions of Dr.B.R.Ambedkar in the form of thesis, dissertations and papers are “The present problem in Indian Currency”, “The Problem of Rupee: Its Origin and Its Solution”, “Ancient India Commerce”, “The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India: A Study in the Provincial De centralization of Imperial Finance”, “Administration and Finance of the East India Company”, “Small Holdings in India and their remedies”. The Department of Education, Government of Maharashtra has published many speeches and writings of Babasaheb in different volumes.

This paper discuss about the contributions of Bharat Ratna awardee Dr. B.R. Ambedkar in the field of economics. The major contribution of Babasaheb in the sub fields of economics like public finance, agricultural economics, problem of caste system in economic development, idea about new water and power policy are the few which is discussed in this paper. These remarkable contributions by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar are discussed under the following heads:

1. Problem of Rupee: Gold Standard versus Gold Exchange Standard
2. Contributions in Public Finance
 - a. Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India
 - b. Abolition of Khoti System
 - c. Ambedkar’s Canons of Public Expenditure
3. Contribution in Agriculture Economics: Problem of Small Holdings in India
4. Caste system as the major hurdle in economic development of India
5. Other Contribution in the Economic Development of India
 - a. New water and power policy
 - b. Contributions in labour laws
 - c. State Socialism

1. Problem of Rupee: Gold Standard versus Gold Exchange Standards:-

Before 1835 in India multiple coins were in circulation and this was quite confusing. East India Company (EIC) tried to solve this problem by unifying all the currencies. An act was passed to introduce the bimetalism (Gold & Silver). Due to the discovery of gold in various parts of Australia and California gold coins (Bad currency) were overvalued and drove the silver coins (Good currency) out of the market. In 1853, EIC stopped receiving any gold coins and tried to demonetize the gold currency. This led to liquidity crisis and at the same time demand for silver coins aggravated. Government of India was not in favour of introducing gold currency and preferred paper currency to improve the situation. So, in 1861 paper currency act was passed and paper currency was made the legal tender. But these paper and silver currencies were not enough to cope up with the increasing monetary demand. In 1870's silver metal was discovered in South America and Mexico, due to this in 1873 the value of silver drastically fell down in terms of gold. Consequently there was a fall in the exchange rate and British imports got expensive. Large scale minting of rupee at that time gave rise to high inflation. Suggestion was made to adopt the gold standard and stop minting of silver coins. In 1893, minting of silver coins was stopped and Indian rupee was adopted as the legal tender. In the period 1898 to 1916, gold exchange standard were adopted and more emphasis was given to the external stability i.e. exchange rate stability. In 1914-15, the exchange rate got weak and India was running out of gold to pay back its remittances. Leading to an increase in the demand of rupee, as a result government of India started minting rupee to tackle the situation.

Ambedkar questioned about what could be the right size of the land holding to increase the land productivity. He pointed out that land is only one factor of production, in order to increase the farm productivity other factors like capital and labour should be rightly mix with the land. Every factor is responsible for the low productivity of land. Because of insufficient capital, surplus labour, and deficient irrigation there is low agriculture productivity in India. Ambedkar in his paper on "Small Holdings in India and their Remedies (1918)" has suggested state owned cooperative farming and industrialization as the remedial measures. Cooperative farming is a consolidation of land holdings by the farmers who collectively are willing to cultivate the land, but it should be under the rule and regulation of the government. This kind of practice not only increases the productivity it will also reduce the cost of production. According to Ambedkar, industrialization can be an alternate solution for the vast disguised unemployment in Indian agricultural sector. Surplus labour in the agriculture sector can be transferred to manufacturing sector. This will not only increase the productivity in agricultural sector it will also increase the production of the capital goods. This will indirectly help in the reduction of poverty and inequality. In 1950's, Noble Laureate Prof. Arthur Lewis formulated a dual economy model in which he tried to explain the same concept of shifting the idle labour from one sector (capitalist) to another (non-capitalist) which Babasaheb had already discovered as a solution for the idle labour in agriculture sector in the year 1918.

2. Contributions in Public Finance:-2.1 Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India:-

In 1925, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar wrote a book on "The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India". In this book he has discussed about the origin, development and mechanism of provincial finance. He has also mentioned about the provincial finance under government of India act 1919. The period which he has covered in this book is from 1833 to 1921. Babasaheb has talked about the problem with the centralization of government finance in India from 1833 to 1871. He showed that in this period the fiscal system was defective with destructive taxes and the expenditure done by the government was unproductive. After 1858, it was noticed that imperial government as the law maker did not administer the country whereas provincial government who administered the country did not have the power to make the laws. Provincial government used to make the budgets and imperial government had the right to finance these budgets.

Practically speaking provincial government did not have power to raise its own funds and to create appointments in services. This gave the opportunity to the government of India to interfere in the provincial administrative works. By this Government of India started misusing its expenditures, as a result they came under a terrible financial strain. Ultimately, in 1871, it was decided that provincial government should prepare its own revenue and expenditure budget. There onwards from 1871 to 1876 provincial finance was introduced in the form of a budget. Under this Diarchy system financial responsibilities were divided among the provincial government and the centre. Ambedkar analyzed that this kind of scheme led to high taxation which was more dangerous. Period from 1877 to 1881 was considered as the second phase of provincial finance. In this period the provincial government used to produce the budget based on the assigned revenue. In the third phase of the provincial finance the budget was based on the shared revenue. According to Babasaheb earlier style of budgeting had a very little room for the expansion of revenue, but this new style of budgeting based on shared revenue does not possess this kind of drawback.

2.2 Ambedkar's Canons of Public Expenditure:-

In 1945, while discussing about the functions of Comptroller and Auditor General of India Ambedkar pointed out that government should responsibly spend the public funds. The revenue which is collected from the public should be spend according to rules & regulations and due respect should be given to faithfulness, wisdom and economy. These principles of spending the public fund are known as Ambedkar's Canon of Public Expenditure. The dictionary meanings of faith are duty, commitment and promise. It's the duty of the government to provide the basic amenities to the tax payers. We know that it is easy to deceive the public as the public investment has a long gestation lag period. So, every government should keep in mind that public has an immense faith in them and they should be committed to provide roads, medical facilities, law and order to its citizens. Ambedkar pointed out that even though the intention of spending the public funds may be correct but still if it is not used wisely then also the planning fails. In this context he has talked about wisdom of Government to spend the public money. By wisdom he was indicating about the knowledge and experience which should be used while spending the public funds in a better way. Another important principle of Ambedkar's canon was economy. By economy he didn't mean less public spending, it basically means how the government should spend the public funds so that they are used optimally.

3. Contribution in Agriculture Economics: Problem of small holdings in India:-

The major problem of Indian agriculture is low productivity of land. One of the main reasons of low productivity is the small land holdings by the farmers. In 1917, a committee was formed to give suggestions on the problem of small holding in the Baroda state. The committee gave a suggestion to consolidate the holding which can be cultivated by an individual farmer under the administrative measures. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was in favour of consolidation of land holdings but according to him it should be state owned. State should acquire all the agricultural land from the private players, owners, tenants or mortgagers and pay them the right compensation, after consolidating the acquired land it should allocate this land in a standard size to the original cultivators without any discrimination based on caste, creed and religion.

Ambedkar questioned about what could be the right size of the land holding to increase the land productivity. He pointed out that land is only one factor of production, in order to increase the farm productivity other factors like capital and labour should be rightly mix with the land. Every factor is responsible for the low productivity of land. Because of insufficient capital, surplus labour, and deficient irrigation there is low agriculture productivity in India. Ambedkar in his paper on "Small Holdings in India and their Remedies (1918)" has suggested state owned cooperative farming and industrialization as the remedial measures. Cooperative farming is a consolidation of land holdings by the farmers who collectively are willing to cultivate the land, but it should be under the rule and regulation of the government. This kind of practice not only increases the productivity it will also reduce the cost of production. According to Ambedkar, industrialization can be an alternate solution for the vast disguised unemployment in Indian agricultural sector. Surplus labour in the agriculture sector can be transferred to manufacturing sector. This will not only increase the productivity in agricultural sector it will also increase the production of the capital goods. This will indirectly help in the reduction of poverty and inequality. In 1950's, Noble Laureate Prof. Arthur Lewis formulated a dual economy model in which he tried to explain the same concept of shifting the idle labour from one sector (capitalist) to another (non-capitalist) which Babasaheb had already discovered as a solution for the idle labour in agriculture sector in the year 1918.

4. Other Contributions in the Economic Development of India:-

4.1 New water and power policy:-

Ambedkar's role as a Minister of public works has totally been forgotten. In 1942-46, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar initiated new water and power policy. The main purpose of this policy was to utilize the water resources of the country in an optimal way. Ambedkar had a vision about the projects keeping in mind the Tennessee Valley Scheme of USA. He was a great visionary and rightly perceived that it is only the multipurpose projects which can solve the problems of floods, famines, power shortage, and irrigation. For the development of the country Babasaheb initiated the idea of building the first multipurpose river valley project known as Damodar Valley Project in Bengal and Bihar. As a part of national water policy the objectives of this project was to control the floods in the surrounded regions, to help the farmers through irrigation, to control the famines and to solve the problem of power supply. This is not the single river valley project which was architected by Dr. B. R. Ambedkar the other projects were Bhakra-Nagal Dam (Highest gravity dam), Hirakud Dam (Longest major earthen dam) and Sone river valley project. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar wanted that water resources and their management should be controlled by the centre, so that the problem of water disputes, water starving etc could be resolved. To deal with the interstate river disputes he urged the provinces to cooperate with each other and purposed “Inter-State Water Disputes Act” with “River Boards Act” in 1956. The first one was to settle the dispute between the states and the second one is all about how to regulate and develop the interstate valley projects. When he was the member of an executive council of Viceroy for the period 1942 to 1946 he established two organizations “Central Water Commission” and “Central Electricity Authority”. These two organizations have largely contributed to irrigation and power supply in the country. He proposed the interlinking of major south Indian rivers. Dr. B.R.Ambedkar was the person behind the development of the National Power Grid, which is still proudly working.

Conclusion:-

Dr. B.R.Ambedkar with double doctorate degrees was the highest intellectual person of his time. He was a highly trained economist but his contributions in the economics were not recognized in the main stream economics. The reason behind this was that Babasaheb stopped practicing economics after India got independence and devoted most of his time in politics and law. Therefore he was more popular as a political leader rather than an economist. But whatever he has contributed to the field of economics is remarkable. This paper has discussed the important contributions made by Ambedkar in the field of economics. Babasaheb supported modified gold standard to curb the inflationary pressure in India. He discussed about the evolution of provincial finance under the British rule. While discussing about how to spend the public funds he said that the spending should be based on the rules and regulations. Public has an immense faith on government thus it should wisely use these funds in order to achieve the optimal results. Babasaheb was in favour of consolidation of small land holding in India by the state and without any discrimination it should distribute this consolidated land into a standard size to the original cultivators. He pointed out the land is only one factor of production, it the mix of all the factors which is responsible for the low production of land. He wanted that heavy industries should be owned by the public sector and private sector should only fill the gaps. He was a strong supporter of State Socialism. Caste system according to him acts as a barrier to the labour mobility from one sector to another. This hindrance in the mobility of labour due to caste system directly impacts the economic development of India. Other contributions of Babasaheb whether it was the development of multipurpose water and power projects, restructuring the labour laws, women empowerment, all are imperative in the economic development of India.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar as a Leader of the Marginalized Group

Dr. Sunil Choudhary

Assistant Professor

Udaipur School of Social Work, JRN Vidyapeeth University, Udaipur

Abstract

Eradication of caste discrimination and untouchability were the most remarkable contributions of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar in doing away with social evils. He was strictly against the Chaturvarna system followed in Hindu religion in which Dalits occupied the lowest position whereas Brahmins the highest. Dr. Ambedkar fought as a leader for the rights and entitlement of socially marginalized classes. He himself was a survivor of caste discrimination as he belonged from Hindu Mahar, the caste among the lowest rung of the varna system, and hence was well aware of the plight of the marginalized. He believed in upliftment of the marginalized through education and began conducting campaigns, organizing conferences and publishing journals and newspapers for apprising them about their rights to claim their dignity and self-respect. This paper is an attempt to understand Dr. Ambedkar's role as a leader in empowerment and upliftment of marginalized classes of the society.

Keywords: Marginalized, Caste Discrimination, Dalits, Leader, Empowerment, Untouchability

Introduction

Dr. Ambedkar's great work for the rights of untouchables and Dalits in India has resulted in Dalit consciousness. He was a social reformer, politician and a jurist who was fondly known as Babasaheb Ambedkar. He put great efforts in eradicating social evils like caste restrictions and untouchability which helped in improving the status of the Dalits and untouchables who belonged from marginalized classes of Indian society. Dr. Ambedkar was an acclaimed jurist and a distinguished politician who was also called as the Father of Indian Constitution.

Dr. Ambedkar had a difficult childhood in which he had to face plenty of stigma associated with his caste. His family was seen as 'untouchable' as they hailed from Mahar caste which is the lowest caste among the social stratification of the Indian caste system. Despite being born in lower castes who weren't allowed to read, Dr. Ambedkar completed his studies till PhD and became the world renowned jurist, economist, politician and social activist.

He edged the consciousness of the marginalized classes and tailored them to become powerful in the contemporary political system. He gave a political identity to the voiceless marginalized classes contributing literary and political texts. Dr. Ambedkar linked political and social aspiration of the Dalits. He believed that Hindu imperialism to untouchables was similar to the British imperialism to India. He opposed imperialism and injustice in all their forms.

Dr. Ambedkar urged the untouchables to embrace the religion of Buddhism in order to liberate themselves from the subjugation of Caste Hindus. He extensively wrote about the ideas of fraternity, equality and liberty from the French revolution as according to him philosophical justification was lacking in the Dalit movement.

Various constitutional provisions have been provided by Dr. Ambedkar as a Chairman of Indian Constitution's Drafting Committee for protecting the social, political, and educational and employment rights of the Dalits in the form of reservation policy, positive discrimination and/or preferential treatments.

He made great efforts in bringing educational awareness among the marginalized leading to their improved sensitization about the situations and social problems of caste discrimination and untouchability faced by them. He also launched a movement for social liberation of the Dalits for opportunities and social rights of the marginalized sections of the society

Testimony before Southborough Committee in 1919

Dr. Ambedkar demanded for a separate electorate for untouchables when Government of India Act was being prepared before Southborough Committee . He argued that had there been a majority of Dalit votes in a particular constituency, he wouldn't have asked for a communal representation. But since untouchables were in minority and would stay with the same status forever, it was important to ask for a separate electoral system. He opposed the idea of choosing a representative of depressed classes from other castes. He said that the untouchables were deprived of the property, they weren't allowed to trade and even if they did no one bought from them. Untouchables were defined as people whose mere touch would pollute the other person. It wasn't such that some castes belonged to untouchable in some districts while touchables in another. The ones who were untouchables have been the same in the entire country which made the testimony of Dr. Ambedkar before the committee satisfactory.

Newspapers and Magazines edited by Dr. BR Ambedkar

Various magazines and newspapers have been launched and edited by Dr. Ambedkar for sensitizing the Dalit community. These periodicals played a crucial role in elevating his movement for the upliftment and empowerment of untouchables and launched the foundation for Dalit journalism. Dr. Ambedkar was the first editor as well as publisher of these journals. He launched 'Mooknayaka' in 1920 along with Shahaji II and the Maharaja of Kolhapur, 'Bahishkrit Bharat' in 1927, 'Samta' in 1928 and 'Janata' in 1930.

1. Mook Nayak – Dr. Ambedkar was the driving force behind the publication. Its editor was from Mahar caste, named Panduram Nandram Bhatkar. The publication meant the voice of the voiceless Dalits which put forth their pain, urged agitation among them and served for creating a new conscious among the Dalits. It didn't last much because of the financial constraints but it successfully created consciousness among the untouchables.
2. Bahishkrit Bharat – With the discontinuation of Mook Nayak, another fortnightly was launched by Dr. Ambedkar on 3rd April, 1927. This newspaper was edited and published by Dr. Ambedkar himself which highlighted the complaints and problems faced by the untouchables. Even Dr. Ambedkar utilized this platform to give replies to his critics. A seminal role was played by this newspaper in the awakening of the Dalits.
3. Samata – This newspaper was the organ of the Samta Sangh which was Dr. Ambedkar's organization for social reforms. Devarao Vishnu Nayeek was the editor if this publication which began from 29th June 1928.
4. Janata – Dr. Ambedkar started Janata after the shutdown of Samta whose 1st issue was published on 24th November 1930. Problems of Dalits was highlighted through this newspaper which had a life of 26 years, i.e. till February 1956.

5. Prabuddha Bharat – With the embracement of Buddhism, Janata was renamed as Prabuddha Bharat by Dr. Ambedkar. This was the organ of Akhil Bhartiya Dalit Federation.

Since Marathi was the mother tongue of the people for whom these papers were published, all the newspapers by Dr. Ambedkar were written in that language. Though Dr. Ambedkar had remarkable command over English language because the Dalits in Maharashtra were unable to read and understand English as they were not educated.

Bahishkrit Hitkarni Sabha

Dr. Ambedkar formed a central institution called Bahishkrit Hitkarni Sabha for the purpose of placing the grievances of the untouchables before government and removing the difficulties they face. It was established for bringing fresh socio-political awareness among Dalits on 20th July 1924 in Bombay. 'Educate, Organize and Agitate' are the founding principles of the Bahishkrit Hitkarni Sabha whose objectives include promoting and spreading education among the untouchables by opening hostels and providing them the employment, representing their issues and improving their economic conditions.

Full-fledged movement for Dalit rights in 1927

Dr. Ambedkar launched active movements by 1927 against untouchability. He started with marches and public movements for opening water resources available for public use. He also initiated a struggle against the restriction imposed on untouchables for entering Hindu temples. A satyagraha was led by him in Mahad for fighting for the rights of the Dalit community for drawing water from the town's main water tank. Manusmriti, the classic Hindu text, has been publicly condemned by Dr. Ambedkar during a conference in second half of the year 1927 because it ideologically justified the practice of untouchability and caste discrimination. He burned several copies of Manusmriti which was followed by thousands of his followers on 25th December 1927 which is now celebrated as Manusmriti Dahan Din by Dalits an Ambedkarites.

Poona Pact in 1932

Poona Pact was negotiated by Dr. Ambedkar with Mahatma Gandhi in 1932. It was the Communal Award of 1932 August and its background created a separate electorate for the Dalit communities. The pact reflects a solution which is derived by mixing two separate ideologies of Gandhi's social approach and Dr. Ambedkar's political approach for achieving a usual goal for the emancipation of untouchables.

The history of Indian polity and fate of millions of untouchables has been changed by the Poona Pact. With the help of this pact, untouchables became the formidable political force in Indian history for the first time. Dr. Ambedkar believed that the question of caste was a political issue which needed a political solution. He held the view that if the untouchables weren't provided with equal participation in the nation, political democracy was meaningless.

Founder of three Political Parties

Dr. Ambedkar founded three political parties which significantly raised the voices in favor of the untouchables and organized their community. These parties are Independent Labor Party (ILP), All India Schedules Caste Federation and the Republican Party of India.

In 1936, Dr. Ambedkar formed Independent Labor Party (ILP) with the idea of bringing a program which meets the grievances and needs of the poor, landless tenants, workers, and agriculturists. The first elections in 1937 after newly formed Government of India Act, 1935 saw spectacular success of ILP which won 15 seats out of 17 for Bombay Legislative Assembly. Under the party, Dr. Ambedkar introduced a bill demanding abolition of the Khoti system in Konkan on land tenure and also opposed Industrial Disputes Bill, 1937 as it curbed the rights of workers to strike.

Chairman of Drafting Committee

Dr. Ambedkar played an eminent and leading role in framing the Constitution of India. Being a Chairman of the Drafting Committee, he appropriately tossed the idea of removing inequalities from the Indian caste system. He was a constitutional expert who studied constitutions of more than 60 countries. He is renowned as the 'Father of the Constitution of India'. Constitutional guarantees and protection against civil liberties to individual citizens, including freedom of outlawing all discrimination and religion are mentioned in the constitution. He extensively advocated for the social and economic rights of women and won Assembly's support in introducing a reservation system for scheduled castes, tribes and other backward classes in colleges, civil services and schools. He emphasized on caste, religious and gender equality. He also recommended to adopt Universal Civil Code for bringing reform in the society.

Conclusion

Dr. Ambedkar wrote and advocated to a great extent for the marginalized classes between 1920 and 1956. Being a perfect democrat at heart, he launched an ardent crusade against untouchability and caste system. He wished to recreate the Indian society on the values of equality, liberty and fraternity. He believed in building an egalitarian and just society by questioning the social order of Indian society. His efforts, speeches, message and statements in setting up educational institutions and organization for sensitizing and educating the marginalized sections empowered the downtrodden to realize self-confidence, self-respect and self-dignity helping them to root out the inferiority complex. The main mission and aim of his life involved leading the marginalized towards a higher economic, social and political status and liberate them from the Dark Ages. As a Chief Architect of independent India's constitution he wanted to equip the Dalits with appropriate education, cultural conditions and political rights by providing various constitutional safeguards for their upliftment and abolition of inequalities and discrimination in all forms.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar and Untouchability

Dr. G. Sheela Edward,
Asst. Professor of History,
TBML College, porayar, Tamilnadu, India

Religion must mainly be a matter of principles only. It cannot be a matter of rules. The movement in degenerates into rules, it ceases to be a religion, as it kills responsibility which is an essence of the true religious act”- Dr. Ambedkar Untouchability is the Achilles' heel of the Indian society. Many leaders have tried to destroy the untouchable subject from this country but unsuccessful. Even today, some peoples have been followed untouchability in India, even though India is the birthplace of the 'Father of modern India' Raja Ram Mohan Roy. In India, circumstances such as 'untouchable' or 'harijan' were replaced by the word 'Dalit' since the 1970s. The new term was earlier used by Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar.

Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar reminded the Indian population that only political clearness or organizational reforms could not form a country that is so varied in culture and social diversity. While Mahatma Gandhi was uniting India to go up in opposition to the cruel British government, Babasaheb Ambedkar was guiding the Indians towards a spiritual growth. Bear into a pitiable, low Mahar caste family on April 14, 1891, in Mhow, in the Central Provinces, at the present Madhya Pradesh, Babasaheb Ambedkar had hard-hitting early days. His family was treated as untouchables and was subjected to socio-economic bias. Hailing from the 'untouchable' caste of Mahars in Maharashtra, Ambedkar was a communal recluse in the early hour's days. Even in his school, he was treated as an 'untouchable'.

His schoolmates would not eat beside him. His teachers did not touch his copies as he came from a family that was considered 'unclean' by the orthodox Hindus. Later in time, Ambedkar became the representative of the backward classes and castes in India. Much like African-American reformers such as Martin Luther King Jr and Frederick Douglas in the United States, Ambedkar expounded the significance of a social transformation that would stop caste unfairness and the idea of untouchability in India. He too connected hands with Gandhi in the Harijan movement, which protested against the social injustices faced by people belonging to backward castes in India. Babasaheb also keen out that the major difficulty of the Indian people was the permanent clash among Buddhism and Brahmanism.

Next to Ambedkhar was chosen as the military secretary to the Gaekwar of Bradoda after getting PhD from Columbia University he was treated as an untouchable. Peons chose to hurl files at his desk instead of handing them over to him while denying him drinking water. India's caste system did not care about his American doctoral thesis on financial federalism.

He wrote doctoral dissertation the “problem of the rupee” after all the humiliations. He was evidently amongst the most educated in the freedom movement. Nevertheless he had not beyond his experience at school in Dapoli and Bombay where untouchables were segregated in the class like American Negro. The view of learning Sanskrit was denied to Ambedkhar. Satyagraha became an expected decision.

Ambedkar had been invited to swear before the Southborough Committee, which was preparing the Government of India Act 1919. At this trial, Ambedkar argued for creating separate electorates and reservations for untouchables and other religious communities. In 1920, with the help of Shahu of Kolhapur he began the publication of the weekly Mooknayak (Leader of the Silent) in Mumbai.

Ambedkar led the march to the Chowdhary tank in Mahad, which saw a violent clash over caste. Ambedkar pursued and burnt copies of the Manusmriti before campaigning for an entry into the temple at Nasik in 1930 and supporting the campaign in Daulatabad in 1934. Meanwhile, questions of critical significance were being raised across the country. Ambedkar went on to work as a legal professional. In 1926, he effectively secured three non-Brahmin leaders who had accused the Brahmin group of people of ruining India and were then consequently sued for vilification. Dhananjay Keer notes that "The victory was resounding, both socially and individually, for the clients and the doctor".

While practicing law in the Bombay High Court, he tried to encourage education to untouchables and boost them. His primary organized effort was his organization of the central institution Bahishkrit Hitakarini Sabha, planned to encourage education and socio-economic development, as well as the welfare of "outcastes", at the time referred to as depressed classes. For the defense of Dalit rights, he started a lot of periodicals like Mook Nayak, Bahishkrit Bharat, and Equality Janta.

He was selected to the Bombay Presidency Committee to work with the all-European Simon Commission in 1925. This commission had sparked huge protests across India, and while its statement was disregarded by the majority Indians, Ambedkar himself wrote a separate set of recommendations for the future Constitution of India. By 1927, Ambedkar had strong-willed to initiate vigorous actions in opposition to untouchability. He began with public actions and marches to open up public drinking water resources. He also began a resist for the right to go into Hindu temples. He led a satyagraha in Mahad to struggle for the right of the untouchable people to draw water from the main water tank of the town. In a conference in late 1927, Ambedkar openly condemned the classic Hindu text, the Manusmriti (Laws of Manu), for ideologically justifying caste unfairness and "untouchability", and he ceremonially burned copies of the ancient text. On 25 December 1927, he led thousands of followers to burn copies of Manusmriti. Thus annually 25 December was celebrated as Manusmriti Dahan Din (Manusmriti Burning Day) by Ambedkarites and Dalits.

In 1930, Ambedkar launched the Kalaram Temple movement after three months of preparation. About 15,000 volunteers assembled at Kalaram Temple satyagraha making one of the greatest processions of Nashik. The procession was headed by a military band and a batch of scouts; women and men walked with discipline, order and determination to see the god for the first time. When they reached the gates, the gates were closed by Brahmin authorities.

Ambedkar's political demands were prominent at the Round Table conference. Ambedkar had asked the Simon Commission for joint electorates but raised the demand for separate electorates at the Round Table conference. The Congress declared its position by asking for joint electorates during the Rajah–Moonje pact of 1932. In 1932, the "Communal Award" gave separate electorates to untouchables with Gandhi deciding to go on a fast against the decision. Ambedkar faced the choice to either capitulate or be responsible for Gandhi's death. He wrote to the Times of India that Gandhi was "not playing the honest foe". Ambedkar eventually went back to his earlier stance of joint electorates. There is an alleged blot on Ambedkar. Unable to trust the Congress on minorities, in 1940 he advocated partition in his Thoughts on Pakistan. However, he realized India was left with a significant minority population and went on to strongly protect the interests of minorities while piloting the Constitution.

The British colonial government announced the formation of a separate electorate for "Depressed Classes" in the Communal Award in 1932. Gandhi violently opposed a separate electorate for untouchables, saying he feared that such an arrangement would separate the Hindu society. Gandhi protested by fasting while locked up in the Yerwada Central Jail of Poona. Subsequent to the fast, congressional politicians and activists such as Madan Mohan Malaviya and Palwankar Baloo organized joint meetings with Ambedkar and his supporters at Yerwada. The Poona Pact was signed between Ambedkar and Madan Mohan Malaviya on 25th September 1932. The agreement gave reserved seats for the depressed classes in the Provisional legislatures within the general electorate. Due to the agreement the depressed class received 148 seats in the legislature instead of the 71, as allocated in the Communal Award planned prior by the colonial government under Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald. The text used the term "Depressed Classes" to indicate Untouchables among Hindus who were later called Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes under the India Act 1935, and the later Indian Constitution of 1950. In the Poona Pact, a united electorate was in principle formed, but primary and secondary elections allowed Untouchables in practice to choose their own candidates.

In 1935, Ambedkar was selected principal of the Government Law College, Bombay; also he served as the chairman of Governing body of Rajas College, University of Delhi, after the death of its Founder Shri Rai Kedarnath. Ambedkar oversaw the construction of a house, and stocked his personal library with more than 50,000 books. His wife Ramabai died after a long illness the same year. It had been her long-standing wish to go on a pilgrimage to Pandharpur, but Ambedkar had refused to let her go, telling her that he would create a new Pandharpur for her instead of Hinduism's Pandharpur which treated them as untouchables. At the Yeola Conversion Conference on 13 October in Nasik, Ambedkar announced his intention to convert to a different religion and exhorted his followers to leave Hinduism. He would repeat his message at many public meetings across India.

In 1937, when the British government agreed to hold elections on the provincial strength, Dr Ambedkar's Independent Labor Party won in the Bombay province with a thumping majority. Dr Ambedkar led a lot of social, labor, and agricultural reforms in the region in the years that followed. Post-independence, Dr Ambedkar was invited by Congress to provide as the nation's first Law Minister, which he accepted. He was soon appointed the Chairman of the Drafting Committee formed to write India's new Constitution. Article 11 of the Constitution abolished untouchability in every form. Granville Austin in his famous book The Indian Constitution: Cornerstone of a Nation (1964) described the Constitution of India as one of the most progressive and revolutionary political documents of its time. Ambedkar published his book Annihilation of Caste on 15 May 1936. It strongly criticized Hindu orthodox religious leaders and the caste system in general, and included "a rebuke of Gandhi" on the subject. Later, in a 1955 BBC interview, he accused Gandhi of writing in opposition of the caste system in English language papers while writing in support of it in Gujarati language papers. Ambedkar served on the Defense Advisory Committee and the Viceroy's Executive Council as minister for labor.

In 1940 after the Lahore resolution of the Muslim League demanding Pakistan, Ambedkar wrote a four hundred page tract titled Thoughts on Pakistan, which analyzed the concept of "Pakistan" in all its aspects. Ambedkar argued that the Hindus should concede Pakistan to the Muslims. He planned that the provincial boundaries of Punjab and Bengal should be redrawn to separate the Muslim and non-Muslim greater part parts. He interest the Muslims could have no opposition to redrawing provincial boundaries. If they did, they did not fairly "understand the nature of their own demand". Venkat Dhulipala states that Thoughts on Pakistan "rocked Indian politics for a decade". It strong-minded the lessons of discussion between the Muslim League and the Indian National Congress, paved the structure for the Partition of India.

Dr Ambedkar in his fifties he left from politics. His writings at this point show to be addressing the fair void Mahatma's murder had created in the Indian politics. A supporter of non-violence, satyagraha, and dhamma, Dr Ambedkar was deeply motivated by the thoughts of Buddhism. He travelled to Sri Lanka and Rangoon to be present at conferences of the World Fellowship of Buddhists. He completed his last book The Buddha and His Dhamma (1956), which existed posthumously. As promised, he converted to Buddhism after writing the book. Dr Ambedkar was a reformer whose heritage and importance continues to rise. His memorandum of social justice continues to reverberate and resound with fleeting minute.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has tried all kind of strategies during his life for eradicating caste and more particularly, for emancipating the Dalit from this cruel social systems. In the political sphere, he promoted separate electorate, party building and public policies like reservations and did not hesitate to work together with the leader of the time exist it the British or the Congress for having things done. In the social sphere, he militated in favor of reforms at the grass root level education being his primary target and reforms by the state as clear from the Hindu code bill. not any of his strategies actually succeeded through his life moment .

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar did not acquire retreat in religion, but looked equal opportunity and social reform in religious conviction since Buddhism was to be expected to bestow the Dalits with an original individuality and a sense of self-respect. More than sixty years later, his contribution to the making of modern India is possibly more considerable than that of any other person in charge of his generation. He has not merely geared up the view for a silent uprising, but has also played a major task in the drafting of the Constitution of India which has set the provisions for the progress of the world biggest democratic organization.

Prior to independence the social, economic and political situation of Dalits were very miserable. Nowadays we get all round development of deprived peoples in India. Untouchability has decreased also improved their socio- economic and political situation. Today Dalits have turn into a authoritative political strength in India and enjoy better way in to learning and financial system than ever before. The reservation strategy of India brought absolute transform in Dalits as they capable to reside in privileged positions in the Government sector and enjoy liberty to employ without panic discrimination. They are exercising their voting privileges. Their political awareness and consciousness about different political activities and contribution in these activities have improved greatly. Due to these facts now-a-days the Govt. is also building various decisions connecting to their privileges and constitutional rights.

Dr. B.R Ambedkar's Views on Caste, class and labour

Abstract:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a Dalit who assumed the role of social, political, and spiritual leader, first for the Dalits, and subsequently for the whole nation. He gave the country a democratic constitution, as a spiritual leader, he revived the legacy of Buddha. Ambedkar drew attention to the rigidity of the caste system and its essential features. He argued that the principle of graded inequality as a fundamental principle is beyond controversy. The four classes are not only different but also unequal in status, one stands above the other. Ambedkar analyzed the complex caste system and its essential features. He explained that the Hindu social order doesn't recognize equality, liberty, and fraternity. The Second feature of the Hindu social order is that the occupations of people are inherited. The third principle is that interaction of people is limited to the people that belong to the same caste. Inter-dining and inter-marrying are not allowed among different castes. According to Ambedkar, the basic unit of social order is neither the individual nor the family. The unit of Hindu society is the caste. If an individual suffers discrimination, it is not due to his or her conduct, but it is due to the class he or she belongs to. Hindus believe that the different castes are born from different parts of the god. The main problem is that the value of caste is associated with the location of the divine body from which it is born.

Key Words: Caste, Dalits, social order, value, democratic constitution, divine body, etc.

Introduction:

"IF I FIND THE CONSTITUTION BEING MISUSED,

I SHALL BE THE FIRST ONE TO BURN IT" – DR. BHIM RAO AMBEDKAR

Babasaheb Ambedkar (1891-1956) was a Dalit who assumed the role of social, political, and spiritual leader, first for the Dalits and subsequently for the whole nation. He gave the country a democratic constitution; as a spiritual leader, he revived the legacy of Buddha. On the other hand, Ram Manohar Lohia (1910-1967), socialist by ideology, championed the cause of the disadvantaged of India including minorities and women. Ambedkar was in touch with Lohia exchanging views through letters. In fact, both of them wanted to launch a political party with scheduled castes, scheduled tribes, women, and minorities as their base constituency.

This paper consists of the view of Babasaheb Bhimrao Ambedkar and Ram Manohar Lohia on the caste system of Indian society. It starts with a brief introduction to Ambedkar's interpretation of the Hindu social order based on the varna theory and goes on to explore his views of the genesis and spread of the caste system. The paper presents the views of Ambedkar on caste consciousness and its dysfunctional aspect. It also deals with the ideas of Ram Manohar Lohia on the dysfunctional aspects of the caste system and his vision to annihilate it.

Objectives of the Study:

1. The study will emphasize the various importances of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's views on caste.
2. To highlight various ways to create such awareness towards B. R. Ambedkar's views on caste, class.

3. The study will elaborate on the problem of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's views on caste and class.
4. The study will discuss the various factors associated with Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's views on caste and class.
5. The study will conduct how we can promote Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's views on caste and class.
6. The study will focus on the Genesis of the Caste System in India.
7. The study will explain the Socialists and the Caste System.

B.R. Ambedkar's views on Caste:

“A great man is different from an eminent one in that he is ready to be the servant of the society.” —
Dr. Bhim Rao Ambedkar

Ambedkar drew attention to the rigidity of the caste system and its essential features. He argued that the principle of graded inequality as a fundamental principle is beyond controversy. The four classes are not only different but also unequal in status, one stands above the other. In the scheme of many, the Brahmin occupies the uppermost rank, followed by the Kshatriya, Vaishya, and shudra. Below the Shudra is the Untouchable. This principle regulates many spheres of life. Officer distributing money and/ or other relief material to famine-stricken people, for example, would give a larger share to a person of high birth than he would to a person of low birth. The Hindu social order does not recognize the equal need, equal work, or equal ability as the basis of reward for labor. It favors the distribution of the good things of life among those who are reckoned as the highest in the social hierarchy.

The second principle on which the Hindu social order is founded is that of prescribed guarded occupations that are inherited from father to son in each class. The third feature of the Hindu social order according to Ambedkar is the confinement of interaction of people to their respective classes. In the Hindu social order, there is a restriction on inter-dining and inter-marriages between people of different classes. According to Ambedkar, there is nothing strange or peculiar in that the Hindu social order recognizes classes. There are classes everywhere and no society exists without them even a free social order will not be able to get rid of the classes completely. A free social order, however, aims to prevent isolation and exclusiveness because both make the members of the class inimical towards one another. (Ambedkar, 1987)

Genesis of Caste System in India:

Ambedkar studied the definitions of caste proposed by Senart, Nesfield, Risley, and Ketkar closely. According to Senart, “a caste is a close corporation, in theory at any rate rigorously hereditary; equipped with a certain traditional and independent organization, including a chief and a council, meeting on occasion in assemblies of more or less plenary authority and joining together at certain festival: Bound together by common occupation, which relate more particularly to marriage and food and to questions of ceremonial pollution, and ruling its members by the exercise of jurisdiction, the extent of which varies, but which succeeds in making the authority of the community more felt by the sanction of a certain penalties and above all by final irrevocable exclusion from the group”. Nesfield defines a caste as, “a class of the community which disowns any connection with any other class and can neither intermarry nor eat nor drink with any but persons of their own community”. Ambedkar quotes Risley, according to whom, “a caste may be defined as a collection of families or groups of families bearing a common name which usually denotes or is associated with specific occupation, claiming common descent from a mythical ancestor, human or divine, professing to follow the same professional callings and are regarded by those who are competent to give an opinion as forming a single homogenous Community". Finally, Ambedkar took note of Ketkar's definition of caste. According to Ketkar caste is, "a social group having two characteristics— I) membership is confined to those who are born of members and includes all persons so born. II), the members are forbidden by an inexorable social law to marry outside the group".

Ambedkar analyses only those elements from the definitions of castes which he regards peculiar and of universal occurrence. For Senart, the "idea of pollution" was characteristic of caste. Ambedkar refutes this by arguing that by no means it is peculiar to caste. It usually originates in priestly ceremonialism and in the general belief in purity. Its connection with caste as an essential element may be ruled out because even without it the caste system operates. He concludes that the idea of pollution is associated with caste only because priesthood and purity are old associates and it is the priestly caste, which enjoys the highest rank in the caste hierarchy.

Caste and the Division of Labour:

Ambedkar says that the caste system assigns tasks to individuals on the basis of the social status of the parents. Looked at it from another point of view, this stratification of occupations that is the result of the caste system is positively pernicious. Industry is never static. It undergoes rapid and abrupt change. With such changes an individual must be free to change his occupation. Without such freedom to adjust to changing circumstances, it would be impossible for a person to earn a livelihood. Now, the caste system does not allow Hindus to adopt occupations that do not belong to them by heredity. By not permitting readjustment of occupations, caste becomes a cause of much of the unemployment in the country. Furthermore, the caste system is based on the dogma of predestination. Considerations of social efficiency would compel us to recognize that the greatest evil in the industrial system is not so much poverty and the suffering that it involves as the fact that so many people's have callings that hold no appeal to them. Such callings constantly evoke aversion, ill will and the desire to evade. The occupations that are regarded as degraded by the Hindus such as scavenging evoke aversion for those who are engaged in them. Given the fact that people pursuing such occupations out of some compulsion want to give them up, what efficiency can there be in a system under which neither people's hearts nor their minds are in their work.

Socialists and the Caste System:

Ambedkar further analyses the steps taken by the socialists to annihilate the caste system through economic development and reforms. Ambedkar questions the wisdom of socialists who professed that acquiring economic power is the only motive by which man is actuated and economic power is the only kind of power that one can exercise effectively over others. He opined that social status of an individual by itself often becomes a source of power. He suggests that religion, social status, and property are all sources of power and authority that come into play in different situations. Ambedkar feels that without bringing reform in social order one cannot bring about economic change. He also cautioned the socialists that the proletariat or the poor do not constitute a homogeneous category. They are divided not only on the basis of their economic situation but also on the basis of caste and creed.

Annihilation of Caste:

Ambedkar explains that caste is not a physical object like a wall of bricks or a line of barbed wire that prevents the Hindus from free social interaction. Caste is a notion; it is a state of the mind. If someone wants to break the caste system, he/she has to attack the sacredness and divinity of the caste. Ambedkar believed that the real way to annihilate the caste system is “to destroy the belief in the sanctity of the shastras. How do you expect to succeed, if you allow the Shastras to continue to mould the beliefs and opinions of the people? Not to question the authority of the Shastras, to permit the people to believe in their sanctity and their sanctions and to blame them and to criticize them for their acts as being irrational and inhuman is an incongruous way of carrying on social reform. Reformers working for the removal of untouchability including Mahatma Gandhi, do not seem to realize that the acts of the people are merely the results of their beliefs inculcated upon their minds by the Shastras and that people will not change their conduct until they cease to believe in the sanctity of the Shastras on which their conduct is founded” (Ambedkar, 1978).

Ambedkar further added that the caste system has two aspects, it divides men into separate communities; and it places the communities in a graded order one above the other as discussed earlier. The higher the grade of a caste, the greater is the number of religious and social rights. Now, this gradation makes it impossible to organize a common front against the caste system. Castes form a graded system of sovereignties, high and low, which are jealous of their status and which know that if a general dissolution happened, some of them would lose more prestige and power than others. It is, therefore, not possible to organize a mobilization of the Hindus.

Can you appeal to reason and ask the Hindus to discard caste as being contrary to reason? Here, Ambedkar quotes Manu “So far as caste and varna are concerned, not only the Shastras do not permit the Hindu to use his reason in the decision of the question, but they have taken care to see that no occasion is left to examine in a rational way the foundations of his belief in caste and varna”(Ambedkar, 1978). Ambedkar argues that if one wanted to dismantle the caste system then one would have to implement law(s) to change the caste system. He proposes the following reforms within the the Hindu religion in order to dismantle the caste system. (i) There should be one and only one standard book of Hindu Religion, acceptable to all Hindus and recognised by all Hindus; (ii) it would be appropriate if priesthood among Hindus was abolished, failing which the priesthood should at least cease to be hereditary.

Conclusion:

We have come to realize that the caste situation at the grass roots presents several dimensions that are not contained in the sacred scriptures. The view from the field lays emphasis on the secular, day-to-day interactions between people belonging to the same caste. Now, while the paper classifies people into four varnas (1. Brhman, 2.Kshatriya, 3. Vaishya, 4. Shudra,) based on a theory of their origin from different parts of the body of the creator (Later the fifth varna comprising those is that presently

Having analyzed the exploitative nature of Hindu social order born out of varnas, castes and sub-castes, Ambedkar gives his own vision of an ideal social order. He looked forward to a society based on liberty, equality and fraternity. Fraternity creates more channels for association and sharing experiences. This helps in establishing an attitude of respect and reverence among the individuals towards fellowmen. For Ambedkar, liberty benefits the people by giving them freedom of choice of occupation. Lastly, it is a fact that all men are not equal in terms of their physical and economic endowment people alike these elements were absent in a caste-ridden society.

Abstract

Covid 19 pandemic has made India realize that nothing much progress has taken place with regards to health and social policies and that the migrant labourers were the worst sufferers. To set up the principles of equality and justice as advocated by Dr B.R Ambedkar, education needs to infiltrate to all the sections of the society because he believed that 'Knowledge is Power in every Field of Life'. Education and health are inextricably linked and important components of social infrastructure. Dr Ambedkar thought of equitable access and rights on public goods like education and health is the need of the day. It is still in the process of execution. Historical and analytical approach is used as methodology for this study which is based on secondary sources. This paper will highlight the thoughts of Dr Ambedkar on education and labour welfare and will try to understand its relevance in the present social and economic scenario.

Keywords: Education, health, labour welfare, pandemic

Introduction

Covid 19 pandemic has made India realize that nothing much progress has taken place with regards to health and social policies and the migrant labourers were the worst sufferers. A telephonic survey was conducted on more than 3000 migrants by Jan Sahas (2020) which was documented in 'The Covid 19, Migration and Livelihood in India' and it was found that majority of them were daily wage earners and during lockdown, 42% were left with no ration, one-third of them had to stay back in their place of work with no access to food, water and money. 94% of them did not even have their identity card. Jadumany Mahanand in 24th August 2020 commented that 'Besides migrants, the lockdown proved to be a period of struggle for farmers, Scheduled Caste and Scheduled Tribe communities, as well as women and religious minorities. Thus, the condition of the 'depressed', 'downtrodden' are still the worst for whom Dr Ambedkar revolted throughout his life. 'Dr Ambedkar wanted to establish a new social order based on lofty principles of social, economic and political justice'.

To him education would enable students to 'learn and lead'. To set up the principles of equality and justice, education needs to be infiltrated to all the sections of the society because he believed that 'Knowledge is Power in every Field of Life'. Education has not been imparted to propagate knowledge though the rate of literacy has progressively increased in India since Independence. If these migrants would have been educated, they could have handled the pandemic crisis in a much better way. Education and health are inextricably linked and important components of social infrastructure. One cannot progress without the development of the other. To establish a just and equitable society we need to reflect on the thoughts and principles of Dr Bhimrao Ambedkar on education and labour welfare.

Objectives

The objectives of the present study are

- To highlight the contribution of Dr B.R Ambedkar towards development of Education
- To understand the steps taken by Dr B.R Ambedkar for the Labour welfare and Social Security of labourers.
- To analyse the relevance of his doctrines on education and labour welfare in the current pandemic situation.

Methodology

The study was conducted by referring to secondary sources of existing literatures through historical and analytical approach. Ideas and evidences were referred from different secondary sources. Agreements were analysed and opinions expressed. The study is based on Volumes of 17 Part Series of Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar Writing and Speeches.

Discussion

Dr B.R Ambedkar, commonly known as Babasaheb by the Dalit communities, advocated for education of masses without discriminating any section of the society. He actively participated in the discussions on Bombay University Act and Primary Education Amendment Bill. In the 'On Grant for Education' he highlighted the 'very very slow progress in the matter of education of our children' and went on to say that it would take '40 years for boys and 300 years for girls of school-age children' to be educated showing the great disparity in education that existed between boys and girls. On budget allocation to Education, he asks 'Is there any hope for us to feel that money for spending on all these items will be available to us next year or the year after?' Dr Ambedkar emphasised that increase in the number of pupils does not balance with the increase in the expenditure on education which was around 39 lakhs and pleaded for spending equally on education the same amount as taken as revenue from people by the Department of Excise, thus pointing that education is the most vital and important right of common people. According to Dr Ambedkar, the objective of Primary education should be 'to see that every child that enters the portal of a primary school does leave it only at a stage when it becomes literate and continues to be literate throughout the rest of his life' which is thus the stage of foundation for a lifelong education. He also highlighted the huge wastage of educational effort and supported for spending more on primary education. He wanted every child to reach the fourth standard in schools. He advocated that 'Education is something which ought to be brought within the reach of everyone' and could visualize the current trend of the commercialization in education. In wanting to support the lower and middle orders of society he proposed that higher and middle school education should be provided at the cheapest rates as possible by the Government. He portrayed the disparity of different sections of society towards educational attainment. With respect to college education, he concluded that ‘the different communities are not on a par in the matter of education.’

Dr Ambedkar also thought that the transfer of education to local bodies ‘is a wrong and mass education should be handled by the Council. He also proposed for an ‘inspecting agency ‘which would take care of the ‘depressed classes’ and scholarship schemes for the depressed class students should be monitored.

Further regarding University Education, in the Bombay University act, Amendment Bill, he emphasised the role of university by stating that university can never expand if it restricts itself only to the activities of examinations. He also observed that the relationship between college and university professors ‘are not as cordial’ and no research or knowledge can develop in such a scenario. He highlighted the overburdening situation of the then college teachers and have seen the system as ‘absolute waste’ and encouraged concepts like lecture pools which would help to better organize the teaching learning scenario. Thus, according to him to promote research and higher education, ‘the best method would be not to separate the colleges from the university’.

Dr Ambedkar was aware of India as a multi lingual country and he was in favour of linguistic states because it would help in the representation of people from all states which would reduce inequality and foster democratic principles. But to maintain the feeling of nationality he proposed not to declare regional language and said ‘One language can unite.’ He wanted to set up separate institutions for the untouchables and established People’s Education Society in July,1945.

Dr Ambedkar was one of the pioneers who introduces labour welfare measures. He emphasised on technical training and upgradation of skills. He put in great efforts to bring all the workers ‘under the protective umbrella of social security’ which is reflected in the discussions on Workmen’s Compensation Act, Maternity Benefit Act etc. On Workmen’s Compensation Bill discussion, he mentioned the Bill as ‘rectifying the injustice done to a particular class of workmen’ which needs to cover ‘State insurance, which will include sickness insurance, workmen’s compensation, maternity benefit’ and are the major social security measures. He also proposed for a same labour law for all classes of labour irrespective of Government and Private employers. He reminds that Government of India is responsible for all labourers. He proposed for a unified wage system following declared underlying principles. He also thought that all revenues whether from commercial sources or public sources earned by the government is government earning and no department has greater right which should thus be equally divided amongst all the employees. In the Mica Mines Labour Welfare Fund Bill, Dr Ambedkar proposed for a fund to promote the welfare of labour employed in mica mining industry. During the discussion in the Bill, he highlighted the lack of latrines, good drinking water, proper housing facilities, occupational hazards and diseases like silicosis, dyspepsia, rheumatism, bronchitis, malaria and a total absence of welfare activities. The Report of Prof. Adarkar further mentions 'canteens, creches, entertainments and washing or any other facilities are things entirely unheard'. No provision was made for child or adult education. Dr Ambedkar proposed that Government of India should take up this responsibility 'to compel the employer to pay the cost of these welfare measures. The Rege Committee Reports on Social security of Labour was compiled by the Labour Investigation Committee on February12,1944, would help for future planning of social security for labour force.

Dr Ambedkar's contribution to education and labour welfare is immense and is extremely relevant in the present pandemic scenario. If quality educational opportunities would have been made accessible and equitable as voiced by Dr Ambedkar, such large differences and segregation between the labour classes would not have existed even after seventy-four years of independence. Education in true sense as means to attain skills and knowledge have not reached to all sections of the society equally. As a result, large scale migrant labourers are the reality. Even the labour welfare schemes have not been implemented because of which this large-scale migration of labour force throughout the country was observed during the lockdown. As because labourers do not get their basic needs fulfilled and in this scenario Dr Ambedkar's advice to provide periodic payments instead of lump-sum payment would have really made a difference. Most of the migrants were daily wage earners which made their conditions more deplorable.

Conclusion

We have much to learn from Dr Ambedkar's view of life and living. On Budget 1 he said regarding his opinion on retrenchment that ' I have no hesitation in asking, having regards to the needs of this Province, having regards to illiteracy, having regard to the poor health, having regard to malaria, having regard to gonorrhoea and syphilis and the other diseases that are prevalent in this Province, whether it connotes a sense of responsibility, whether it connotes a sense of adequency on the part of this government to come forward with nothing more than a paltry budget of Rs 3711000'. Through his work he has provided us an insight of all round development of life which does not differentiate between the caste, creed, race, religion, language, social classes etc. He had dreamt of an independent, equal, classless and democratic country which is yet to be fulfilled in its true sense.

Relevance Of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar's Ideology And His Contribution To The Suppressed People

Abstract of the Paper

Dalit and suppressed people a modern term for untouchables in India, are underprivileged people in all social, economic, cultural and political fronts of our society which led to their misery, discrimination, exploitation and oppression by the caste dominated social stratification of India. The Constitution of India classifies Dalits as Scheduled Castes (SCs). They are the people who cultivate the land, mend the shoes, wash the clothes, clean the toilets, scavenge the dead animals or unknown human bodies and do all types of menial works, but share the stigmas of untouchability and are frequently denied the chance to eat, smoke and even seat with the members of upper castes. They often use separate wells and tube wells from those maintained for others. These pitiable conditions of Dalits were seen and addressed by some eminent social and political philosophers like Jyotiba Phule, Mahatma Gandhi, Dr. Bhim Rao Ambedkar and others. This is all due to the provisions of the Constitution drafted by Dr. Ambedkar. Therefore, he may be regarded as the God Father of Suppressed People in true sense.

Statement of the People

*A great man is different from an eminent one in that he is ready to be the servant of the society. --
Dr. B.R. Ambedkar*

Main aim of Dr. BR Ambedkar is to uproot the evil of deep rooted caste system and to transform this country from uncivilized state to civilized state. The Indian constitution is evolved as a result of Dr. BR Ambedkar's relentless efforts and strategic approach to the system. The provisions made by Dr. BR Ambedkar by fighting against British rulers and the articles included in the constitution of free India enabled Dalits and Women to present day developed state. The all round development of disadvantage groups in India is only because of Dr. BR Ambedkar.

Life of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar

Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, also known as Babasaheb, was an Indian jurist, political leader, Dalit leader, philosopher, thinker, anthropologist, historian, orator, prolific writer, economist, women emancipator, human rights profounder, an eminent and erudite scholar, editor, revolutionist and a revivalist for Buddhism in India. He was also the chief architect of the Indian Constitution. Dr. Ambedkar made a frontal assault on caste using the brilliance of his legal expertise and his access to the political negotiating tables in London and New Delhi in the days preceding the transfer of power from imperial Britain to independent India. Dr. Ambedkar was an intellectual giant and India's great reformer. Born in a poor Mahar, then Untouchable, family, Ambedkar spent his whole life fighting against social discrimination, the system of Chaturvarna the categorization of Hindu society into four varnas and the Hindu caste system. The leader, throughout his life, fought for the rights of the dalits and other socially backward classes untiringly. His efforts to eradicate the social evils and for the upliftment of the deprived classes were remarkable. He was appointed as Law Minister in the first Cabinet of Jawaharlal Nehru. He was also known as the “Father of Indian Constitution”. Many Indians and even people from other countries revere him as a great social revolutionist.

Situation of Downtrodden after 72 Years of Independence

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar had a real visionary towards the upliftment of Dalits. His main aim was to uproot the evil of the deep-rooted caste system, uplift the status of downtrodden society, create honour amongst so called upper castes and to transform this country from uncivilized state to a civilized state. By fighting against English rulers and including Articles in the constitution, he tried his best to enable Dalits and women of the present day developed state. Before independence the social, economic and political conditions of Dalits and women were very grim. Today we find all round development of disadvantaged groups in India. Untouchability has reduced, their socioeconomic and political status has improved. Today Dalits have become a powerful political force in India and enjoy greater access to education and economy than ever before. They are exercising their voting rights. Their political consciousness and awareness about various political activities and participation in these activities have increased very much. Due to these facts now-a-days the Government is also making various decisions relating to their rights and privileges. Efforts are still going on to remove different discriminatory practices against them. Now votes of the Dalits have become one of the major deciding factors for winning of a candidate or a political party in elections. The honours for Dalits in high caste society have also increased. Today we are not asking the person sitting beside us which caste he belongs to? Today, at least in towns both Dalits and non-Dalits enjoy the same tea stall, hotel and cinema hall but usually nobody bothers about knowing the caste identity of a person. This is all due to the un-tired and intelligent efforts of Dr. Ambedkar. But it does not mean that the untouchability has totally abolished. Still, it is maintained in offices, colleges, ceremonies, etc. Today's tragedy is that the rulers of our nation do not want the effective implementation of constitution. There is a far gap in between their sayings and workings. Manu introduced the caste system in India. Dr. Ambedkar introduced a caste annihilation system in India. Indian, Hindu orthodoxy stood by Manu. Ambedkar stood for Dalits and women developments in India. Ambedkar defeated Manu through the Constitution by incorporating several Articles in it. Ambedkar was successful in fixing the Hindu orthodox people's attitude and behaviour as enshrined in their holy books towards others as unjust and punishable through various provisions in the India's Laws and Constitution. Recently an eminent sociologist, Prithvi Nanda in Jaipur Literature Festival, 2013 blamed that SCs and STs were mainly responsible for corruption in India. This is a totally irrelevant, irresponsible and unjust statement which caused a great controversy between Dalits and non-Dalits. This shows the prejudiced mentality of the so called elite society people. Are the people of Upper Caste are not corrupt? The question arises, who is making SCs and STs corrupt? Who have taught the lessons of purchase – sail to the leaders of SCs and STs? The rulers of Upper Caste people are basically responsible for corruption in the society because all the dominating administrative powers and forces of society are retained within them. However, unfortunately sometimes the Sc and ST peoples, who are duly established in the society, misuse the rights given to them. A special type of power demonstration is expressed indirectly by them. They try to demonstrate their special power and unity in the society due to the privileges which they obtain from the laws, sovereignty, rules and administration.

Anti Caste Movements

In this kind of society, many reformers right from the Gautama Buddha, have worked against the caste system and untouchability. He challenged the validity of caste and Brahmanism. Mean while other social reformers like Mahathma Jyothi Rao Phule, Sahumaharaj, Periyar, Kabeer , Santh Ravidas, Sri Narayanaguru in Andhra Pradesh Vemana and Pothuluri Vera Brahman are the social reformers who fought against the evils of Hinduism. The movement they led was not given required relief to the victims of the caste system and patriarchy. After studying all these experiences, Dr Ambedkar declared that it is not possible to eliminate untouchability in isolation without destroying the caste system, which in turn means destroying Hinduism, and embraced Buddhism on 1956 October 14 along with his more than 5 lakhs followers in Nagpur.

Upliftment of Suppressed People

In May 1943, Indian labor conference discussed about modalities to set up constitutional body related to minimum wages in its third convention. After 1944 and 1945, Dr. BR Ambedkar (labor member in Government of India) recognized importance of special act, introduced minimum wages bill on 11th April 1946. The minimum wages act got approval after delay due to constitutional obligations to transform from bill to an act. According to this act, minimum wages can be defined as the wages which are not only fulfilling a laborers needs but also to live with dignity, to feed his family, to meet the expenses of health and protection and education of the children gathered all together can be considered as “Minimum wages.”

Article – 17 Abolition of Untouchability

“Untouchability” is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden. The enforcement of any disability arising out of “Untouchability” shall be an offence punishable in accordance with law. Based on this article, the Civil rights Protection Act 1965 and the Prevention of Atrocities (Scheduled castes Scheduled tribes) Act 1989 was enacted by the Parliament for the protection of Dalit rights.

Article 13(2)

Dr. B. R Ambedkar is a great visionary towards the fundamental rights of Indian citizens. He made a provision in the constitution of India in 13(2) as Laws inconsistent with or in derogation of the fundamental rights.— The State shall not make any law which takes away or abridges the rights conferred by this Part and any law made in contravention of this clause shall, to the extent of the contravention, be void.

Hindu code bill

In 1948 when the Hindu Code Bill was introduced in parliament and debated on the floor of the house, the opposition was strong against the Bill. Ambedkar tried his level best to defend the Bill by pointing out the drawbacks of Indian society and arguing that the ideals in the Bill are based on the Constitutional principles of equality, liberty and fraternity and that in the Indian society characterized by the caste system and the oppression of women since women are deprived of equality, a legal frame work is necessary for a social change in which women have equal rights with men. He also pointed out that the aim of the Bill was “to codify the rules of Hindu Law which are scattered in innumerable decisions of High Courts and of the Privy Council which form bewildering motley to the common man”. However, the Bill could not withstand the opposition from the Hindu orthodoxy. Their major argument was that the Bill was an attempt at the “demolition of the entire structure and fabric of Hindu Society. The very foundations not only of one pillar but of all the pillars on which the Hindu society rests are shaken". In reality, the Bill was a threat to patriarchy on which traditional family structure, was bounded and that was the major reason behind the opposition. Therefore, on the eve of the first elections in 1951 Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru dropped the Bill by saying that there was too much opposition. On this issue, the then Law Minister Dr.Ambedkar resigned. Even he is ready to give up the status for the cause of disadvantaged.

Summing Up

The Constitution of India provides equal rights to all its citizens' right to live with equality, honour and dignity. But the caste system and untouchability somehow and others are still playing negative roles from different parts of the society. Untouchability is a crime against humanity. Untouchability against mehtar/dom sub-caste of Dalits is still prevalent in our society which is inhumane. Hence it is the right time to adopt the principles of Dr. Ambedkar. The Constitution of India is designed in such a way that all its citizens are equal before it. Our nation is facing different sorts of socioeconomic, educational and political evils in the society and only the effective implementation of the Constitution in its real spirit can overcome them. The Dalits also will have to come forward and to labour hard in all social, economical, educational and political fields to compete with the other members of the society. They should avoid power demonstration and enjoy their rights properly. Each Relevance of Dalit member will have to try to become a Second Ambedkar. God has created the entire creature, including human beings without caste identity. It is we who make all these discriminations. So the people of advanced classes will have to change their mentality. They will have to be more generous towards the Dalits regarding untouchability and the upliftment of their socio-economic, educational and political status etc. by accepting them as equal humans like themselves. The social structure of our society is based primarily on them because they are the people who perform all types of menial works which are usually avoided by the people of elite class. Without them no society has run previously, not running now and will not run in future.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's views on Social & Dalit Movement

Assist Prof. Jaswinder Singh
Doaba College Jalandhar

Abstract:

Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar fought against hijacking, discrimination, casteism and therefore the destruction of ships in India. He began to know the painful reality of birth as untouchable. He's best referred to as the pioneer who founded the liberation movement of 66 million people in India. Dr. Ambedkar was of the opinion that only by creating a constitutional system could volatile human rights be protected. He was a scholar as a "scholar" who instilled the inspiring faith of the Dalit's. He loved education and equal rights for people. DR. Ambedkar attended appalling conferences in London and, whenever, severely publicized his ideas by targeting the 'untouchables'. He involved raising the living standards of the downtrodden and gaining more political power. He was of the opinion that there was no alternative to Hinduism which he should change his religion if necessary. In 1935, he openly declared that i born as Hindu because I had no control over it, but i might not die as a Hindu.
Key Words: Dr. B.R Ambedkar, movement, follower, search, Devadasi religion and rights.

Introduction

Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar, popularly referred to as Baba Saheb, was an Indian politician, writer, economic adviser, women's liberator, eminent scholar and prominent figure within the Indian Constitution. He visited North Karnataka several times; all his travels are an excellent impetus for change and development among poor groups, vulnerable areas and therefore the downtrodden. He encourages people to beat many social and economic barriers and to urge an education and study their rights. Dr. Ambedkar may be a symbol of understanding; He was little questioning the primary charm. He was a part of the oral tradition of the grassroots until he succumbed to his last and continuous efforts for the welfare of the downtrodden in Procession India. Also, his visit to Vijayapura district in Karnataka has brought tons of changes within the lives of his fans, said Dayanand Mane. When Gandhi joined the Indian subcontinent. The lucky a part of the Vijaypur region, the 2 national leaders visited the region just 4 years apart, Gandhiji came in 1933 and Dr. Ambedkar visited Vijaypur in 1937. Leaders spread and propagated the ideas of a balanced society within the region. His journey yielded many results, and Dr. Ambedkar's visit created a spark within the lives of the poorer sections of the society and Dr. The Ambedkar era began.

Objective

1. Impact of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar movement on the development of present Dalit.
2. To find out present Socio-economic and political status of Dalit's
3. To known awareness of Human Rights of Dalit 's in present time.

Ambedkar's approach to social change creates an Indian character

Ambedkar's great achievements were within the fields of ideology, politics and social change, which shaped the whole culture of the country, India and democracy.

Ambedkar's great achievements were within the fields of ideology, politics and social change that shaped the character of the country. (PTI)

History has produced some who have left their mark on society and whose lives became a logo of freedom, a logo of progress and alter. Dr. BR Ambedkar is one among these people with great knowledge, unique political power and unwavering commitment to social change.

Trained as an economist and lawyer, he's mentioned because the favorite factory in Indian-backed organizations like the Federal Reserve System Bank of India (based on ideas submitted to the Hilton Young Commission) and under which there's no national structure - the Constitution of India - he writes about it.

However, his great achievements were within the fields of ideology, politics and social change, which built the character of the state, India and democracy round the world. On the occasion of the 125th anniversary of Bhim Rao Ambedkar, popularly referred to as Baba Saheb Ambedkar in India, it's pertinent to understand his add the sector of ideology, politics and social change in order that during this perilous time, we are inspired by the source of equality and justice and to form this world a far better place.

Make peace with Solan Kalra: don't stop the incapacity. There could also be a true, fair story here, Bengal politics has changed forever.

If this is often not provided ideologically, the town makes no sense, placing Ambedkar during a left-wing culture, albeit it's not within the traditional ways. He was one among the few who developed the growing sort of Marxism and Ambedkar's homeland in modern India, and compared it to Buddhist ideas - a singular but profound combination of Indian philosophy. In his speech entitled "Buddha or Karl Marx", Ambedkar compared the overall ideas of Buddha thereupon of Marx and provided a comprehensive analysis of how one can support socialism as long as one follows the trail laid down by Buddha. Is. consistent with him, Buddhism was an excellent help in "defending power when it withdrew" and thus criticized Lenin for failing to bring "freedom and brotherhood" within the pursuit of equality. He declared: "Equality can't be achieved without organization or freedom. It seems that these three can live together as long as they follow the symbol of Buddha. Communism can provide one but not all."

It is Dr. Ambedkar's contribution that the commitment to freedom, solidarity and equality through non-violence and democratic means may be a part of our Constitution. "Political democracy doesn't exist without a ideology, that is, how of life that considers freedom, equality and fraternity due to the principles of life," he addressed the conference (November 25, 1949). This is a thought given to education institutions, which absorbs water even when it's sucked from a fertile soil well. Especially with whom Dr. Elphinstone College and Sydenham College in Mumbai, Ramjas College at the University of Delhi and round the world, Columbia University and hence the London School of Economics, Dr. Ambedkar celebrates knowledge. Days associated with them. Everywhere on the earth, when student liberal activism is related to politics, Dr. Ambedkar is usually remembered because the source of lasting inspiration.

In the political sphere, Dr. P. Keshav Kumar stated that "Ambedkar's affiliation with Ambedkar's main political currents was independent, strong, or consonant together with his writings ... at an equivalent time separating himself from these three political positions".

A summary of Ambedkar's political thinking is contained in two of his statements:

1. "Rights are protected by social and moral discretion instead of by law", and
2. ". To him, it's not surprising that society is primarily political. Why did Ambedkar not find himself so often with the Nationalists of the Indian National Congress. Continued his tenure without "classes." Political equality can't be achieved. Those that are frustrated within the political sphere won't tend equal status.

Gandhi protested while serving his sentence within the Yerwada Central Jail in Poona, but eventually had to succumb to Ambedkar's demands (which was very unusual for a Gandhi man), and led to stressful courses within the legislature. The 'Poon Agreement' was approved to offer 148 seats. In fact, organized cash heads in modern Indian history and therefore the political emancipation of organized nations depend upon Ambedkar's determination and commitment to his cause.

However, a really powerful image of DR. BR Ambedkar is usually seen in his role as a social reformer and at an equivalent time his fundamentalism often lacks ideas and freedom. After the President addressed the annual meeting of the Jat-Pat Todak Mandal, a Hindu party, he published "The Extrusion of the Cattle" at his own expense - as reflected in his untrained speech. History of Indian Civilization. Here again, he accepted only a part of the Gandhian mantra of 'eat and marry'. He found that food during a particular group was "not enough" because he agreed that "there are tons of individuals who eat together ... but eating together may be a concept of race and ethnicity". Didn't achieve killing the spirit of caste and the consciousness of caste.

According to him, the paradox is that "only a transfusion can create how of going to know one another, and until the thought of the opposite comes, it creates a sense of loneliness." "However, on further analysis, he found that the wedding proposal was also an impossible idea." The caste isn't a brick wall or an obstacle to stop the Hindus from advancing and needs to tear it down. . Caste is an idea; it's a state of mind. So destroying the caste doesn't mean destroying the physical barrier. This suggests big change. "

Finally, Ambedkar presented that "the real solution is to urge obviate the thought within the sanctity of scripture." Thus, in 1927, he took copies of the normal manuscript of Manusmriti, expressing Sir Moore's anti-Catholic stance, which was reformed by British Chancellor within the 1500s to guard Catholics.

His message to his followers was, "Teach, teach and resist!" The social and political corridors of the country extend from Central Hyderabad to the districts of Uttar Pradesh, Haryana and Rajasthan, where discrimination is administered with organized councils and in separate districts. Parts of his "eternal transformation" described in his various writings still burn in our minds as we plan to keep his teachings alive in both spirit and behavior.

Dr. Ambedkar fought fiercely for Dalit rights

Dr. Ambedkar adopted various means to guard and defend Dalit-Hanuman rights in India. Dr. B. R Ambedkar began to create popular opinion through his creations initiated for the protection of Dalits, which at various times began to guard Dalits in places like Muknayak, Bahisht Bharat, John Balan. Dr. B.R. In 1869, Mahad's ammunition supply tank was made a public tank. In 1923, the Bombay legislature passed a resolution. The municipality passed a resolution on January 5, 1927 stating that the municipality had no objection to the utilization of the tank by Dalits. Baba Saheb Bhimrao Ambedkar fought for the rights of workers and farmers. When he founded his own independent Labour Party within the late 1920s and particularly within the 1930s, he took the explanation for tenants (from Dalit Mahars and caste Hindu Kunbi) within the Konkan region of Maharashtra. With the support of the then Radical Congress Socialist Party, the Swatantra Sramik Dal organized a huge march of 20,000 farmers in Mumbai in 1938, the most important independent peasant organization within the region. Within the same year, Dr. BR Ambedkar proposed that British government continue strike in protest of a bill to strike textile workers in Mumbai with the Communists. Dr. Ambedkar vowed to condemn the bill within the Assembly and argued that the proper to strike was another name for Assembly independence.

Conclusion:

Actually Baba Saheb Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was an excellent human rights leader. I desire the best Indian of the millennium, fighting not just for the foremost oppressed sections of the Dalits, but also for the human rights of all Indian Dalits for workers and peasants and ladies. Dr. Ambedkar was a number one human rights activist in India within the 20th century. He was a liberator, scholar, extraordinary social reformer and true champion of human rights. Dr. Ambedkar the Constitution of India gives equal rights to all or any citizens. Untouchable groups spreading caste still play a negative role from different sections of the society. Untouchability may be a crime against humanity, and therefore the Constitution of India was drafted before all citizens became equal. Our country is facing many socio-economic, educational and political evils within the society and this will only be implemented with the effective spirit of the Constitution. Dalit communities should come to the fore and add all social, economic, educational and political spheres to cater to other members of the society.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar – A harbinger of Social Justice

Baruna Kumar Behera,

Assistant Professor in Political Science,

Khallikote Autonomous College, Berhampur, Ganjam, Odisha – 760001.

Introduction:

“Democracy is not merely a form of Government. It is primarily a mode of associated living, of conjoint communicated experience. It is essentially an attitude of respect and reverence towards fellowmen” --- B.R Ambedkar.

On the basis of superiority and inferiority, Indian society is divided into castes and cultures, which build walls and barriers of exclusivity within the society. In India, social justice is a product of the caste system, which believes in social inequality and hierarchy. Such inequalities endanger not only society but also Indian democracy. Backward communities and women have suffered for centuries as a result of the traditional Hindu caste system, which has denied them freedom, education and other opportunities for advancement in life. In Indian culture, social justice entails providing benefits, amenities, concessions, privileges and special rights to those who have been denied such basic things for decades. If they are not given opportunities to grow their underutilized abilities, social imbalance would persist in Indian society.

The idea of social justice, according to B. R. Ambedkar, meant liberty, equality and fraternity for all human beings. He called for a social structure focused on individual equality in society in all facets of life. He gained extensive experience of every area of human behaviour as a result of his training as a social scientist and he went on to found his own independent philosophy. He was aware of the social, political, religious and economic issues that were linked to caste and the status of women in Indian society. His ideology and principles are critical for Indian society's social development and stability.

The term social justice encompasses a broader definition than justice. The term social is associated with the term society. It has a broad scope, encompassing social concerns, challenges and changes as well as social and economic progress. Steps taken for the benefit of society's depressed and deprived groups are referred to as social justice. As a result, it necessitates social modification, which is an effort to alter culture in order to address social issues. Law can bring about such socioeconomic changes. The aim of social justice is to achieve political, economic and social democracy by eliminating class and caste divisions/distinctions. It blends socialism's ideals with democracy's guarantee of personal liberty (Kataria, Kanta., 2015).

The conception of Justice:

Various views may be used to describe the definition of justice. Justice, according to the Greek philosopher Plato, is the true concept of social life. Justice was the pivot of Plato's thoughts. Plato explores the philosophy of justice in his book “The Republic” in a conversation with friends namely Cephalus, Polemarchus and Glaucon. Justice, according to Cephalus, consists of speaking the truth and paying one's debts, while justice, according to Polemarchus, consists of giving each man what is proper for him. “Justice is the art of bestowing good upon friends while wreaking havoc on enemies.” Justice, according to Glaucon, is in the “interest of the weaker.” Justice, according to Thrasymachus, an ancient Greek sophist, is the interest of the stronger. These concepts were rejected by Plato because they viewed justice as something external and artificial. Justice, according to Plato, is the most important moral principle and it is inextricably connected to other necessary and moral attributes (IGNOU, n.d.).

Aristotle, another Greek philosopher, proposed the idea of 'distributive justice.' The theory of distribution by which goods, services, honour and offices are distributed among the people of the state is known as Aristotle's distributive justice. However, the theory of distribution is founded on an individual's worth or virtue. The theory acknowledges and maintains the distinction between the deserving and the undeserving. It prevents unjust representation and guarantees that a man's rights, responsibilities and rewards are proportional to his merit and social contribution. As a result, Aristotelian distributive justice may also be referred to as proportionate equality. The term justice refers to fair treatment of individuals as well as law founded on the principles of justice and rationality, i.e., equal rights and justice for all, regardless of class, gender, race or caste (Kataria, Kanta., 2015).

Idea of Social Justice:

The term social justice is made up of two words: social and justice. Each has a distinct meaning, and when combined, they express a distinct meaning.

- The principle of social justice, according to John Rawls, is that all social primary goods – liberty and opportunity, income and wealth, and the foundation of self-respect – should be distributed equally.
- The idea of social justice is multifaceted and scholars of law, philosophy and political science have all taken various approaches to it. The concept social justice encompasses a wide range of issues and functions as a balance wheel between the haves and the have-nots.
- The equal distribution of social, material and political capital among all people is referred to as social justice.
- It aims to eliminate all social, economic and political disparities and discriminations and to give all men and women equal opportunities in social and economic activities.
- Social justice is the result of social injustice; it aims to ensure that everyone has the same status and opportunities. It is generally described as the right of the weak, poor, elderly, destitute, children, women and other disadvantaged members of society (IGNOU, n.d.).

Ambedkar’s idea of Social Justice:

According to Ambedkar, social justice is a way of achieving an ideal society. A just society is a casteless society founded on the values of social justice and a mixture of three components namely liberty, equality and fraternity are the guiding principles of such just society. Two basic concepts underpin Ambedkar's ideal society.

The first is that the individual is an end in himself and that society's goal and object is the individual's growth and development of personality. Society is not above the individual and if the individual has to subordinate himself to society, it is because such subordination is for his betterment and only to the extent necessary. The second requirement is that the terms of associated life between members of society should be judged on the basis of liberty, equality and fraternity. Liberty, equality and fraternity are central to Ambedkar's philosophy of social justice (Maharashtra. Government, 1987).

The first element is liberty. According to Ambedkar, who was quoting Laski, for liberty to be genuine, it must be followed by certain social conditions. First and foremost, there must be social equality. Presence of privilege denotes favoured social action in favour of those who possesses power. Equality is vital for the enjoyment of true freedom. People would be better able to use their democracy if their social rights are more equal. Without equality, liberty has no value particularly for the depressed sections of the society (IGNOU, n.d.).

All people should have access to education. Man lives at risk in today's dynamic environment and must navigate it without sacrificing his independence. There can, under these conditions, be no freedom that is worthwhile unless the mind is trained to use its freedom. The right of man to education becomes fundamental to his freedom. Deprive a man of knowledge and you will make him inevitably the slave of those more fortunate than himself. Deprivation of knowledge is a denial of the power to use liberty for great ends. An ignorant man may be free, but he cannot employ his freedom, so as to give him assurance of happiness (IGNOU, n.d.).

According to Ambedkar, three essential conditions that make liberty substantial are social equality, economic equality and access to education. Since these three conditions are missing in ancient Hindu societies, he believes that there can be no true liberty.

Equality is the second aspect of social justice. It means that all men have the same spirit, are equal and are entitled to the same basic rights and freedoms. The system of rank and gradation is simply another way of expressing the concept of inequality, allowing Hinduism to genuinely be defined as an anti-equality religion. It should be remembered that there is no equality in ancient societies since they are founded on the concept of gradation and rank. Because of the rejection of social and religious freedom, both antique culture and Hinduism contribute to the deterioration of human personality. Ambedkar believed that a new society must be based on social justice and equality.

Fraternity is the third dimension of social justice. When discussing the role of fraternity in a society, Ambedkar writes, only fraternity, according to Ambedkar, can prevent anarchy and help to maintain moral order among men. Anarchy is the product of individualism. An ideal society is impossible to imagine without fraternity, which is a crucial component of social justice. According to Ambedkar, the fundamental components of social justice are liberty, equality and fraternity. Social justice entails a complete shift in our perspective and mindset toward men and objects, as well as a complete shift in our fundamental notions of human existence (IGNOU, n.d.).

According to Ambedkar, "you cannot build anything on the foundations of caste. You cannot build up a nation; you cannot build up a morality. Anything you will build on the foundations of caste will crack and will never be a whole" (Gaub, O.P., 2018).

Ambedkar was well aware of Indian society's patterns and problems. Ambedkar's philosophy of social justice has the following values:

- Unity and equality of all human beings
- Equal worth of men and women
- Respect for the weak and the lowly placed individuals
- Regard for human rights

- Benevolence, mutual love, sympathy, tolerance and charity towards associate human beings
- Humane treatment in all cases
- Dignity of all citizens
- Abolition of caste distinctions
- Education and property for all
- Good will and gentleness (IGNOU, n.d.).

He put a greater emphasis on fraternity and emotional integration. His approach to social justice was to use law, morality and public conscience to eliminate all forms of man-made inequity. He advocated for social justice in order to create a more prosperous world (Purohit. B.R., 2003).

Ambedkar was of the opinion that the caste system in Hindu society was the root cause of social inequality against Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes. He found that castes are closed units. He went on to say that the caste system was the origin of un-touchability; the caste system emerged from religion; the religion derived its roots from varnashram; the varnashram's foundation was Brahminism and the root of Brahminism was political force (IGNOU, n.d.).

In his own words, Ambedkar expresses his social vision. Untouchability is not just a system of unmitigated economic exploitation, but it is also a system of unregulated economic exploitation as an economic system that permits exploitation without obligation. That is because there is no unbiased public opinion to denounce it and no neutral administrative machinery to restrain it; there is no check from the police or the courts because they are all Hindus who side with the exploiters. (IGNOU, n.d.)

B. R. Ambedkar was well aware of the pitiful and pathetic condition of women in Indian society, as well as their low status. He made an effort to empower women in general and Hindu women in particular. Women were seen as mere instruments to bear the burdens of the family, according to Ambedkar, and were limited to the roles of bearing children and performing the duties of a wife or mother. Since the division of labour does not favour them, Indian women have lost their identity. They are subjected to discrimination based on gender and equal opportunity remains an illusion for them. Poverty, illiteracy, a lack of sanitation, deprivation and powerlessness are among the challenges that women face in daily life. Traditional views hold them to be biologically, mentally, and socially inferior to men, subjecting them to male abuse and unjustified labour division. Women have no power over material and social wealth, which has resulted in a society where women, who account for half of the population, have a low status. This is exacerbated by the lack of resources for women to participate in the family decision-making process (IGNOU, n.d.).

The Indian Constitution recognizes the principle of social justice. The founders of the Indian Constitution envisioned a new social, economic and political order, with social justice at its core. The Indian Constitution was drafted by Ambedkar, who was also its chief architect. He was well aware of the Indian society's trend and issues as well as the competing interests. The Indian Constitution makes no mention of social justice. It's a relative term, with time and circumstance, people and their backwardness, blood, sweat and tears all playing a role in defining it. It is said that the Preamble, fundamental rights and directive principles of state policy together constitute the commitments towards social revolution. The Preamble, the directive principles of state policy and the fundamental rights all clearly demonstrate the ideology of social justice, despite the fact that it is not specified in the Constitution. These three parts are crucial for social change and social transformation in India. Social justice is crucial for the operation of social harmony, social stability and patriotic feelings (IGNOU, n.d.).

The time of adaption of Indian constitution, in his last speech in Constituent Assembly debates, Ambedkar cautions that political democracy alone is not sufficient for India. India needs to be transformed into social democracy in order to survive as a nation. He opines that political democracy should comprise of social democracy as well. For him, social democracy means a way of life which recognizes liberty, equality and fraternity as the principles of life. In his final speech in the Constituent Assembly, Ambedkar said that political democracy alone will not suffice for India. In order to achieve substantial democracy in India, political democracy must accompany with social and economic democracies. Social democracy is the most pre-requisite condition for the implementation of ideal of social justice. Social justice denotes the trinity of liberty, equality and fraternity. Separation of one part from the other is equal to the negation of democracy. According to former Chief Justice of India, P.B. Gajendragadkar, Ambedkar is the lawmaker of the twentieth century and is regarded as modern Manu, however unlike old Manu, this new Manu favoured human equality and social justice (Raghavendra R.H., 2016).

Conclusion:

To Ambedkar, social justice is the foundation, upon which other super structures of the society should be created. Social justice is synonymous with the prevalence of social democracy, where there will be no discrimination on any grounds among fellow human beings. Political democracy without social democracy cannot be considered as a substantial form of democracy. Social justice is a means for the achievement of social democracy. We need a regime of democracy, where values of equality, liberty and fraternity will be supreme in letter as well as in spirit. To achieve this ideal, Ambedkar's philosophy of social justice is the only practical solution.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar And Social Reformation

Asst. Prof.,

Govt. College Bichhua District Chhindwara

We are also known as Babasaheb Ambedkar was an Indian jurist, economist, politician and social reformer, who inspired the Dalit Buddhist movement and campaigned against social discrimination towards the untouchables (Dalits). He was a member of the Constituent Drafting committee. He was independent India's first Minister of Law and Justice, and considered the chief architect of the Constitution of India.

In 1990, the Bharat Ratna, India's highest civilian award, was posthumously conferred upon Ambedkar. Ambedkar's legacy includes numerous memorials and depictions in popular culture.

As Ambedkar was educated by the Princely State of Baroda, he was bound to serve it. He was appointed Military Secretary to the Gaikwad but had to quit in a short time. He described the incident in his autobiography, Waiting for a Visa. Thereafter, he tried to find ways to make a living for his growing family. He worked as a private tutor, as an accountant, and established an investment consulting business, but it failed when his clients learned that he was an untouchable. In 1918, he became Professor of Political Economy in the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics in Mumbai. Although he was successful with the students, other professors objected to his sharing a drinking-water jug with them.

Ambedkar went on to work as a legal professional. In 1926, he successfully defended three non-Brahmin leaders who had accused the Brahmin community of ruining India and were then subsequently sued for libel. Dhananjay Keer notes that "The victory was resounding, both socially and individually, for the clients and the doctor".

While practising law in the Bombay High Court, he tried to promote education to untouchables and uplift them. His first organised attempt was his establishment of the central institution Bahishkrit Hitakarini Sabha, intended to promote education and socio-economic improvement, as well as the welfare of "outcastes", at the time referred to as depressed classes. For the defence of Dalit rights, he started many periodicals like Mook Nayak, Bahishkrit Bharat, and Equality Janta.

He was appointed to the Bombay Presidency Committee to work with the all-European Simon Commission in 1925. This commission had sparked great protests across India, and while its report was ignored by most Indians, Ambedkar himself wrote a separate set of recommendations for the future Constitution of India.

By 1927, Ambedkar had decided to launch active movements against untouchability. He began with public movements and marches to open up public drinking water resources. He also began a struggle for the right to enter Hindu temples. He led a satyagraha in Mahad to fight for the right of the untouchable community to draw water from the main water tank of the town. In a conference in late 1927, Ambedkar publicly condemned the classic Hindu text, the Manusmriti (Laws of Manu), for ideologically justifying caste discrimination and "untouchability", and he ceremonially burned copies of the ancient text. On 25 December 1927, he led thousands of followers to burn copies of Manusmriti.

Thus annually 25 December is celebrated as Manusmriti Dahan Din (Manusmriti Burning Day) by Ambedkarites and Dalits. In 1930, Ambedkar launched the Kalaram Temple movement after three months of preparation. About 15,000 volunteers assembled at Kalaram Temple satyagraha making one of the greatest processions of Nashik. The procession was headed by a military band and a batch of scouts; women and men walked with discipline, order and determination to see the god for the first time. When they reached the gates, the gates were closed by Brahmin authorities.

In 1936, Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar founded the Independent Labour Party, which contested the 1937 Bombay election to the Central Legislative Assembly for the 13 reserved and 4 general seats, and secured 11 and 3 seats respectively.

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar published his book Annihilation of Caste on 15 May 1936. It strongly criticised Hindu orthodox religious leaders and the caste system in general, and included "a rebuke of Gandhi" on the subject. Later, in a 1955 BBC interview, he accused Gandhi of writing in opposition of the caste system in English language papers while writing in support of it in Gujarati language papers.

Ambedkar served on the Defence Advisory Committee and the Viceroy's Executive Council as minister for labour.

After the Lahore resolution (1940) of the Muslim League demanding Pakistan, Ambedkar wrote a 400 page tract titled Thoughts on Pakistan, which analysed the concept of "Pakistan" in all its aspects. Ambedkar argued that the Hindus should concede Pakistan to the Muslims. He proposed that the provincial boundaries of Punjab and Bengal should be redrawn to separate the Muslim and non-Muslim majority parts. He thought the Muslims could have no objection to redrawing provincial boundaries. If they did, they did not quite "understand the nature of their own demand". Scholar Venkat Dhulipala states that Thoughts on Pakistan "rocked Indian politics for a decade". It determined the course of dialogue between the Muslim League and the Indian National Congress, paving the way for the Partition of India.

In his work Who Were the Shudras?, Ambedkar tried to explain the formation of untouchables. He saw Shudras and Ati Shudras who form the lowest caste in the ritual hierarchy of the caste system, as separate from Untouchables. Ambedkar oversaw the transformation of his political party into the Scheduled Castes Federation, although it performed poorly in the 1946 elections for Constituent Assembly of India. Later he was elected into the constituent assembly of Bengal where Muslim League was in power.

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar contested in the Bombay North first Indian General Election of 1952, but lost to his former assistant and Congress Party candidate Narayan Kajrolkar. Ambedkar became a member of Rajya Sabha, probably an appointed member. He tried to enter Lok Sabha again in the by-election of 1954 from Bhandara, but he placed third (the Congress Party won). By the time of the second general election in 1957, Ambedkar had died.

Ambedkar also criticised Islamic practice in South Asia. While justifying the Partition of India, he condemned child marriage and the mistreatment of women in Muslim society.

No words can adequately express the great and many evils of polygamy and concubinage, and especially as a source of misery to a Muslim woman. Take the caste system. Everybody infers that Islam must be free from slavery and caste. [While slavery existed], much of its support was derived from Islam and Islamic countries. While the prescriptions by the Prophet regarding the just and humane treatment of slaves contained in the Koran are praiseworthy, there is nothing whatever in Islam that lends support to the abolition of this curse. But if slavery has gone, caste among Musalmans [Muslims] has remained.[68]

Drafting India's Constitution

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar, chairman of the Drafting Committee, presenting the final draft of the Indian Constitution to Rajendra Prasad on 25 November 1949.

Upon India's independence on 15 August 1947, the new Congress-led government invited Ambedkar to serve as the nation's first Law Minister, which he accepted. On 29 August, he was appointed Chairman of the Constitution Drafting Committee, and was appointed by the Assembly to write India's new Constitution.

The social justice twigs of justice which derivatives from concept of ethical morality. The issues of social justice is affected various developmental policy as well as whole development of social welfare programme. Kelson observed social justice is that what does it really mean to say that a social order is just? It means that this order regulated the behavior of man in a way satisfactory to all men so that all mean find their happiness in it. Social justice is social happiness. It is happiness guaranteed by a just social order. Just social system seeks to remove social disability by birth resulting in social and economic inequality. Social justice means equal social opportunities shall be available to everyone to develop their personalities which is associated with equality and social rights. According to Ambedkar, his Justice is based on moral values and self respective. Justice situates through social, political and economic justices which regulated by the Indian constitution.

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar says that caste is an artificial chopping off of the population into fixed and definite units each one prevented from fusing into another group though the custom of endogamy (Larbeer 2003:50). He quotes ,Caste is the monster that crosses your path, you cannot have political reform, and you cannot have economic reform, unless you kill this monster' (Kazeha1988: 7). He believed that the root of untouchability is the caste system, the roots of the caste system is religion attached to Varnashram, the root of Varnashram is the Brahminical religion, and the root of Brahminical religion is authorization of power

Ambedkar's Nation of Social Justice

Injustice is everywhere not only western countries and India also. At present one of the contemporary issues is that injustice and caste discrimination. Ambedkar did a movement amongst marginalized communities. His concept of justice generated from the French Revolution of 1789.

Ambedkar's perspective of social justice is based on social democracy which consists of three concept of justice namely liberty, equality and fraternity. Ambedkar addressed in constituent assembly that ,the third thing we must do is not to be content with mere political democracy. We must make out political democracy a social democracy as well. Political democracy cannot last unless there lies at the base of tit social democracy. What does social democracy mean? It means a way of life, which recognizes liberty, equality and fraternity as the principles of life.

These principles of liberty, equality and fraternity are not to be treated as separated items in a trinity. They form a union of trinity in the sense that to divorce one from the other is to defeat the very purpose of democracy'

These principles are fundamental rocks of Just Society

His concept of liberty is a fundamentalism among political and philosophy thought. According to Ambedkar, liberty has divided into two categories namely Civil Liberty and Political Liberty. Ambedkar's notions of civil liberty deals with three basic opinions are; Liberty of movement, Liberty of speech and Liberty of action. Civil liberties are often formally guaranteed in Indian constitution but ignored in practice which came from Bill of Rights. Civil right is often used to refer to one or more of these liberties or indirectly to the obligation of government to protect dalits from violations of one or more of their civil liberties.

He believed that democracy offers every individual achieve social equality, economic and political justice guaranteed in the preamble of the constitution. Liberty, equality and fraternity should be the only alternative to abolition caste society. He argued that, liberty cannot be divorced from equality; equality cannot be divorced from fraternity. With equality, liberty would produce would kill individual initiative. Without fraternity, liberty and equality could not become a natural course of things. It would require a constable to enforce them. We must begin by acknowledging the fact that there is complete absence of two things in Indian society. One of these is equality' .

Social and economic democracies are the tissues and the fiber political democracy. The social and economic problem of our society seeks to envisage. Whole-heartedly supports the system of fundamental rights of man in the constitution of free India. According to B.R.Ambedkar, combine individualism and socialism through the introduction of state socialisms, by means of the law of the constitution. Liberty retains the modified capitalist system of social economic, while if gives greater concessions to the poor, the fallen and the weak, under a parliamentary form of government.

1. State ownership of agricultural and key industries to meet the demands of the poorer strata of society,
2. Maintenance of productive resources by the state and
3. A just distribution of the common produce among the different people without any distinction of castes or creed (Jadhav 1991: 986).

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar believed that all man have value capacities, which can be measured easily by their coreligionists. Everyone has some value contribution in the civic order, in which he lives. Therefore, everyone must have an equal voice or share in the determination of the law of his land. He demands that the protection of law, equally and ethically, status be accorded to every member, without any regard to group morally status. State should allow participating in all democratic institution and be given their legal rights. Ambedkar believed that the rights are equal and common to all humans. He says that ,we are demanding equal rights which are the common possession of the entire humanity but due to inhibitions created by the shastras we have been denied these human rights' (Larbeer2003: 69).

He further says that ,rights are protected not by law but the social and moral conscience of society. If social conscience is such that it is prepared to recognize the rights, which law chooses to enact, rights will be safe and secure. But if the fundamental rights are opposed by the community, no law, no parliament, no judiciary can guarantee them in the real sense of the word' (Larbeer2003: 73).

The equality before law is in the main foundations social equality. The political equality lies in that the poor masses become educated and can make themselves so conscious of their rights that the governing classes cannot usurp their productive labour values. The economic equality emphasizes the quality of opportunity. It is a legitimate demand of the present generation, worth and works. Ambedkar suggested that the state control through the law of constitution is work consideration; it can provide everyone with full equality of opportunity as one part of social justice. The state socialism is a worthy proposition, which envisage the placing of some economic restraints by the state upon the owners of the means of production.

Conclusions

This study concludes that Ambedkar's notion of social justice is based on equal rights and human dignity through legal framework. As the result of his thought, Indian constitution grants equal right to all. He was first person to demand separate electorates and reservation system in favour of dalit in round table conference hence three round table conferences failed. Ambedkar realized that affirmative action is only way to improvement of dalit communities which safeguards through legal institutions. Ambedkar did not encourage the aspiration of caste system within India and Caste system generates inhuman practice among the communities. Ambedkar believed that economically dalit are very poor which they are lack access to political, social and economic power. Ambedkar's

Re-reading Ambedkar in Light of the Gramscian Concept of Hegemony

Abstract:

The upsurge of Dalit Movements across India has prompted increasing scholarly interest in understanding Ambedkar from different perspectives. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's socio-political thought begins with his criticism of Hindu religion because of its immoral, unscientific and regressive caste hierarchy and its disastrous effects on the Dalit masses. Formulating a dignified social and political identity for Dalits has always been his priority. This article seeks to explore the prospects of interpreting the Ambedkarite ideological stance from the Gramscian perspective about revolutionary potential of the subalterns. After presenting Gramsci's views on civil society, hegemony and the function of organic intellectuals in the process of passive revolution, it briefly pursues the interface between Gramsci and Ambedkar by analyzing the nature of Brahminical hegemony and Ambedkar's counter-hegemonic strategies. It then points out certain limitations in applying Gramsci's theory of hegemony to the study of Ambedkar and the Dalit politics and concludes by emphasizing that it would still be profitable to read the scholars in conjunction.

Keywords: Ambedkar, Gramsci, civil society, hegemony, subaltern, organic intellectual.

Antonio Gramsci and Babasaheb Ambedkar were contemporaries - both born in 1891 –who, it is felt, must be read and re-interpreted together in order to reflect seriously on the Dalit Question in India. Notwithstanding inherent historical, geographical, political and cultural differences, we may find certain striking similarities between the Dalit political philosophy advocated by Ambedkar and the neo-Marxist political philosophy of Gramsci. “The moral fabric of their human and political commitment to Dalits/subalterns brings them very close, particularly in the upholding of Gramsci's ‘intellectual and moral reform’ and Ambedkar's ‘social and moral consciousness of society’ (Zene, 2013, p.1). In fact, the ‘Jewish Question’ (Marx), the ‘Southern Question’ (Gramsci) and the ‘Caste-Dalit Question’ (Ambedkar) were all questions of ‘recognition’ which transcended their specific contexts. There is unanimity among these scholars regarding the indispensable nature of recognition and its close association with an ethical life (Mahanand, 2020). A careful scrutiny of both Gramsci and Ambedkar would reveal that they were aware of the obstacles placed by dominant ideologies to silence, and possibly to erase, Dalit and subaltern voices. They agree on the fact that the traditional social value system perpetuates oppression, humiliation and violence against the oppressed communities, groups and individuals. In this context, it is thought sufficiently rewarding to interpret Ambedkar's social and political philosophy from the Gramscian perspective.

Gramscian Concept of ‘Hegemony’

Gramsci's theory of hegemony is particularly apt at grasping the complex mechanics of the discrimination and dehumanization of the “ground down” and “broken” (Rao, 2009, p.1) people in any politically organized society. His work is therefore also very useful in exploring the political organization of the subordinate masses in postcolonial India. Gramsci uses the term ‘subaltern’ – which originally meant both ‘of inferior position or rank’ in military terms and, in logic, the particular as opposed to the universal – to denote a group without class consciousness (Pala, 2013, p. 145). He employed the term in place of the classical Marxist term ‘proletariat’. In the neo-Marxist literature, subaltern perspective is the way to understand society from below which means from the view of those people who belong to deprived, depressed and downtrodden sections of the society. These marginalized sections of people in a stratified society also produce knowledge and have politics of their own. The dominant historiography however excludes them from the mainstream history. Subaltern perspective, on the other hand, looks into the experience of those who are neglected and marginalized and contrasts it with the elite perspective.

From such a subaltern perspective, Gramsci insisted on the importance of a Marxist politics that is based not solely upon the modern industrial working class, but upon the common interests of all subordinated and oppressed fractions of society, the subalterns. Marx himself had recognised that economic exploitation was not the only driver behind capitalism, and that the system was reinforced by a dominance of ruling class ideas and values – leading to Engels’s famous concern that ‘false consciousness’ would keep the working class from recognizing and rejecting their oppression (Heywood, 1994, p.85). Gramsci analyzed further and realized that subalternity is constituted through constructions of identity, otherness, and marginality that are reinforced within the social, political, and economic structure. He applied the idea of hegemony to explain how social classes come to dominate society without coercion. For him, ‘hegemony’ meant the ways in which a governing power wins consent to its rule from those it subjugates (Eagleton, 1991). The concept of hegemony first appeared in Gramscian phraseology in the Notes on the Southern Question (1926), where it was defined as a system of class alliance in which a “hegemonic class” exercised political leadership over “subaltern classes” by “winning them over”. The two essentials of hegemony according to him are overwhelming power and the ability to use that power to dominate others. Gramsci asked himself the pertinent question: “Why do powerless consent to be dominated by the powerful”? Another question was as to why revolutionary struggles had failed in Western Europe but had proven successful in Russia? (Hobden and Wyn Jones, 2008). He found that “Man is not ruled by force alone, but also by ideas” (Bates, 1975). So far as Russia is concerned, it has been observed that the state lacked a connection to civil society and hence could more easily be overthrown by revolutionaries as no autonomous socio-political institutions were in place (Fontana, 2008).

Gramsci saw ‘civil society’ as the public sphere where bourgeois hegemony is reproduced in cultural life through various institutions to ‘manufacture consent’ and legitimacy. It is by using ‘false consciousness’ created by ‘commonsense’ that consent is manufactured. It is with the help of this support and consent of the subaltern that the dominant class rules. A social class emerges as hegemonic not only by coercing others but rather by establishing consent among subordinate classes. Consent is ‘historically’ caused by the prestige (and consequent confidence) which the dominant group enjoys because of its position and function in the world of production. He compares Machiavelli’s famous “half man, half beast metaphor” with the concept of power as a combination of coercion and consent (Konrad, 2012). Thus, at the core of Gramsci’s methodology is the dialectical relationship between hegemony (consent–support) and domination (coercion–force). For Gramsci, hegemony is thus a form of control exercised primarily through a society’s superstructure (culture, art, religion, law, ideology, norms, education), as opposed to its base (means of production and relations of production). Gramsci argued that the ruling classes achieve domination by manipulating language, culture, morality and commonsense. Ruling class can manipulate the value system and mores of a society, so that their view becomes the dominant view (Gramsci, 2010). The dominant group always considers itself as normal and views other groups as abnormal and unfit to be within a particular structure. Such dominant group frames rules for the society, determines the morality of an action and forces formally or informally the subordinated group even if it is numerically powerful to accept their rules and value system.

‘Counter-Hegemonic’ Struggle

The philosophical, political and practical implications of Gramsci’s ideas were far-reaching because he warned of the difficulties and limitations in waging a direct and violent revolutionary struggle for control of the means of production. According to him, “It is necessary to establish proletarian hegemony before the socialist revolution” (Gramsci, 2010). In any given hegemonic system undergoing organic crisis, a subaltern class aspiring for state power must strive to attain hegemony in civil society by making its challenge against the dominant class while conforming itself to the interests and aspirations of other subaltern classes (Ramos, 1982). Creating a new historic bloc for ideological resistance is the foundation for such ‘counter-hegemony’ to challenge the existing world order. This involves a ‘passive revolution’ in the sense of transformation through the institutions of civil society through a variety of tactics at all the three basic levels of society: (1) the economic, (2) the political, and (3) the cultural. The strategies should work in tandem and create organic change, establishing new cultural hegemony in society. This idea of a ‘counter-hegemonic’ struggle – advancing alternatives to dominant ideas of what is normal and legitimate – has had broad appeal in social and political movements. It has also contributed to the idea that ‘knowledge’ is a social construct that serves to legitimate social structures (Heywood, 1994, p.101).

Role of Organic Intellectuals

Intellectuals have a unique and crucial role to play in constructing the hegemonic consciousness in the process of counter-hegemonic’ struggle. According to Gramsci, “all men are intellectuals but not all men have in society the function of intellectuals” (Gramsci, 1998, p.9). Intellectuals act either as instruments of maintaining hegemony or as supporters of subaltern classes promoting social change. In this respect, he makes a distinction between ‘organic’ and ‘traditional’ intellectuals (Gramsci, 2010, p.3). Organic intellectuals are the key mediators who produce progressive self-knowledge through education and are informing and informed by the masses. They “are the dominant group’s ‘deputies’ exercising the subaltern functions of social hegemony and political government.” They have a social function - a social function to “direct the ideas and aspirations of the class to which they organically belong”. These specialized cadres, formed both in the working-class political party and through education, has the duty of organizing, administering, directing, educating or leading others (Gramsci, 2010, p.6). On the other hand, traditional intellectuals pursue an ideological function, trying to disarticulate the mass from power. They work to convince people of the virtues of capitalism and obtain their consent to capitalist rule. (Gramsci, 2010, pp.12-14; 238–239). ‘Knowledge’ being a social construct that serves to legitimate social structures (Gramsci, 2010, p.12), the role of organic intellectuals in developing the people’s culture through education and ideological indoctrination is of utmost importance in the Gramscian ideological framework.

Interface Between Gramsci and Ambedkar

The reinvigorated movements in recent years for emancipation of Dalit community across India have prompted increasing scholarly interest in understanding Ambedkar from different perspectives including Gramscian. Such comparative analyses are illuminating, as it can help us to more fully assess the ethical significance, philosophical strength and political calibre of Ambedkar as an organic intellectual in the Indian civil society.

Both Gramsci and Ambedkar were passionate and committed to their respective societies and they realized that only through a democratic strategy of unifying the multifarious forces of the subaltern communities, the path for a socialist transformation could be constructed. According to them, a revolution should start from the specific conditions of the country. The specificity of Indian society is that the caste system occupies the most prominent place in its structure. According to Ambedkar, the caste system in India is a unique form of 'graded inequality' where except Shudras and Untouchables, the rest enjoy privileges according to their hierarchical social status in the traditional social structure (Mahanand, 2020; BAWS, Vol. 1). In his philosophical and political life, Ambedkar stood for human recognition preceded by Annihilation of Caste. But he was not merely a caste reformer or social democrat. As in the case of Gramsci, Ambedkar also paid primary attention to the democratic revolution in India. For Ambedkar, democracy was a way to bring non-violent revolution opening the possibility of a peaceful social, political, and economic transformation. He focussed on and fought for state-led institutional reforms driven by the subalterns with a view to ensure the rightful place for them within the state, society and history.

A further commonality which unites Gramsci and Ambedkar is their approach to religion. Both were critical of religion, but considered religion culturally and politically relevant. Gramsci's distinction between 'official' institutional religion, as historical formulation able to exert hegemonic power, and the religion of the masses and subalterns – through which they express their 'common sense' – is relevant when compared to Ambedkar's view of religion, including his lifelong opposition to Brahmanism and his choice to convert to Buddhism (Zene, 2012, p.66). For both of them, religion is a crucial dimension of politics, and a decisive factor for the self- emancipation of the subalterns. Buddhism as interpreted by Ambedkar provides a practical system of morality which underpins a strong sense of social justice, thereby underpinning struggles for caste eradication (Bradley, 2013, p.197).

Gramsci is relevant in understanding Ambedkar's conviction about the importance of 'civil society' also. Gramsci postulated the existence of a civil society as superstructure wielding real power upon the people and influencing them in practical terms. In the Indian context, Ambedkar maintained that it is the caste system prevalent in the civil society, which is based not on economic relations but on the social order cultivated by Hindu religion, that makes the faith, psyche, behavior and praxis of all Indians. The Dalit politics therefore was positioned in the civil society while the nationalist movement worked in the political society. Indian nationalism which spoke only about the independence of the country from the British was, for Ambedkar, a deliberate avoidance of the real problems of the Indian society, particularly its caste problem.

Brahminical Hegemony and Ambedkar's Counter-Hegemonic Strategies

Like Spivak (1988), Ambedkar's first step was to identify the very institutional structures that oppressed the subaltern masses from making their voices heard. He analyzed Hindu society before starting his struggle against untouchability and the caste system. According to him, if the lower castes were not in a position to overthrow their oppressors, it was because of two reasons: they had partially internalized hierarchy; and because of the very characteristics of caste-based inequality (Jaffrelot, 2009). The internalization of hierarchy was in turn due to the Brahminical hegemony in the Indian civil society.

Ambedkar defined Brahminical hegemony as the socio-cultural order in which lower castes had to express increasing levels of reverence towards higher (known as 'twice-born') classes and to internalize a diminishing sense of self-esteem (BAWS, 18 (2), p.162). There was no serious objection to such discriminatory treatment because Brahminical hegemony also gave such caste groups a relative sense of social superiority over other caste groups which were immediately below them on a scale of continuous hierarchy. That is to say, caste groups on the lower rungs of the social hierarchy found it quite morally (in caste terms) comforting to follow the logic of continuous hierarchy, in that it gave them some degree of social essence that emanated from the asymmetrical, and hence less interactive, protocols. A relative sense of social dominance in everyday forms of interaction provided the grounds for social essence (Guru, 2013, p.89).

As an organic intellectual, Ambedkar responded aggressively against this hegemonic oppression, who consequently engaged in intellectual resistance by redefining the Vedas and Smritis as texts that justified Brahmin domination, condemning Hindu gods as corrupt and violent individuals, studying Indian society and history in a scientific and scholarly manner and also by launching social struggles such as sons of the soil movement, demand for separate electorate, formation of a political party, demanding the right of temple entry, influencing the governments in his personal capacity and finally conversion to Buddhism etc. in order to create negative consciousness among the Dalits and the other non-Brahmin castes. One can make perfect sense of these intellectual, cultural and political movements led by Ambedkar within the context of the Gramscian concept of counter-hegemonic struggle.

Limitations in the Applicability of Gramscian Concepts

While it is true that there are striking similarities between the ideas of both Gramsci and Ambedkar and even though they are of universal calibre, the differences between the two thinkers in the sense that their social contexts are starkly different should not be disregarded. In the case of Gramsci, the civil society which he addressed in the West was accommodative of rational ways of discussion, human rights, peaceful ways of mediation, consent and consensus. His ideas enjoy a context-free status and his usage of the terms of subaltern and hegemony etc. are of general application. But the Indian civil society with which Ambedkar was concerned, was more complex with aggressive and coercive caste practices. Reason, logic, discussions and mediation miserably fail in front of the caste practices of Indian civil society. Even though there is no problem in drawing on Gramsci in order to name Dalit movements as 'subaltern', the Dalit subalternity is unique in several respects. Taking cue from the work of Gayatri Chakraborty Spivak (1988), who as a deconstructionist maintained that stereotyping is actually a form of hegemony, it can be argued that the recognition of Dalits as a distinct category of the subaltern is essential to comprehend the caste question and Ambedkarite ideology in entirety.

Conclusion

Although Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar wrote extensively on a variety of topics including philosophy, politics, law and economics, interpreting his life and work is undoubtedly difficult because he is a man who cannot be fully understood merely by reading what he wrote but only by sharing his vision of annihilation of caste. It is a task which requires one to look beyond the comfortability of the Brahmanical narrative of human life. But the task becomes easier when we look into it from the perspective of Gramscian ideology. Then it appears clearer that it was to subvert the Brahminical hegemony and to challenge and destroy the legitimacy of caste system through a 'passive revolution' that Dr. Ambedkar attempted to evolve a counter-hegemonic culture that defies the authority of the Savarna. It was to uphold the human dignity of Dalits that he converted to Buddhism. We understand then, that he was presenting a subaltern perspective in his writings and speeches, and was living it in action by serving as an example of an organic intellectual and an advocate for the oppressed. Keeping in mind the essential differences of their social and political environment and the limitations imposed thereby, it can be safely concluded that Gramsci and Ambedkar should be read in conjunction for better understanding.

Note

1. Antonio Francesco Gramsci (1891-1937) was one of the highly influential Marxist thinkers of the 20th century. He was an Italian revolutionary and a founding member of the Communist Party of Italy. In 1926, he was imprisoned by the fascist government of Benito Mussolini and while languishing in the jail, he wrote 33 notebooks comprising of more than 3,000 pages on the theme of Italian way to revolution.
2. Etymologically derived from the Greek word hegemonia meaning 'authority', 'rule' or 'political supremacy'. Actually, Gramsci is not the first person who talked about hegemony, but he is the one who broadened and deepened the notion with cultural and intellectual aspects.
3. Gramsci rejected the differentiation drawn in mainstream liberal theory between the 'state' and 'civil society'; instead, he differentiated 'civil society' from 'political society'. For him, 'state' is a sum of political society and civil society. State for Gramsci is broader than the state in common use. It denotes the political organization of society, the visible political constitution of civil society, not the government. Control of the state is accomplished through hegemony in civil society which is achieved through consent.
4. Here, a comparison can be made with Louis Althusser's ideas of 'repressive state apparatuses' and 'ideological state apparatuses'.
5. A 'historic bloc' is an alliance between social class forces (Gramsci, 2010).
6. In the hierarchical division of society under the caste system, socio-economic rights of different caste groups are pre-determined by their birth and heredity alone, not by their ability (Ambedkar, BAWs, Vol. 03].
7. 'Graded inequality' is the term used by Ambedkar to denote the hierarchical order of various groups where one group is considered as superior to the other. At the same time the superior group is considered as inferior in relation to the group(s) above it.

Abstract:

“We must stand on our own feet and fight as best as we can for our rights. So carry on your agitation and organize your forces. Power and prestige will come to you through struggle”

--Dr. B.R. Ambedkar

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar has been an outstanding and multifaceted personality of India. He was a great academician, a research scholar, an economist, a political scientist, a philosopher and humanitarian. He was the first man who understood the necessity for a democratic system in India and analyzed the social, economic and political system of India in relation to other countries. When he compared this system with the others countries; and subsequently, realized very significant changes in the Indian socio-economic and political system. He understands the problems and requirements of Indians which can be fulfilled by establishing a democratic system in India and when Dr. B.R. Ambedkar became the chairman of the drafting committee he did all to establish a great democratic constitution for India.

KEYWORDS: Constitution, socio-economic system, democratic system, social justice, fundamental rights and parliamentary system.

Introduction:

Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar has been an outstanding contribution by drafting the Constitution of India and he became a champion of human rights. Dr. Ambedkar was born on the 14th April, 1891 in Mhow (now in Madhya Pradesh). After graduating from Elphinstone College, Bombay in 1912, he joined Columbia University, USA where he was awarded Ph.D. Later he joined the London School of Economics & obtained a degree of D.Sc. (Economics) & was called to the Bar from Gray's Inn. On the 14th October, 1956, Baba Sahib Ambedkar embraced Buddhism. He continued the crusade for social revolution until the end of his life on the 6th December 1956. He was honored with the highest national honour, 'Bharat Ratna' in April 1990. He was the first Indian political thinker who realized the necessity and applicability of the western pattern of democracy to India. He was multidimensional personality: a parliamentarian, a scholar, an Indian jurist, an advanced thinker, a philosopher, an anthropologist, a historian, an orator, a prolific writer, an economist and a constitutionalist of world repute.

He was appointed as India's first Law Minister. He is considered as the Father of the Indian Constitution. His contribution in the Second Round Table Conference and its Federal Structure Committee which was well connected with the drafting of the new Constitution of India was highly appreciated. He was selected to the Federal Structure Committee not by the Indian National Congress but by the British after understanding his patriotic mind and fearless advocacy for common man and democracy. For him, it was not enough to make a distinction between the state and society; state and the government; and state and the nation; rather he went to the roots of these institutions to point out the essential element constituting these institutions i.e. the people.

Making of the constitution of India was by no means an easy task. It required the highest statecraft, statesmanship, scholarship, and intellectual acumen endowed with a flood of knowledge of the history of nations in the given context, and the working of Constitutions in the democratic, totalitarian, dictatorship and other forms of governments. Owing to his seminal role in the framing of the Indian Constitution, Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar is popularly known all over India as the chief architect of the Indian Constitution.

Considering the depth of his acumen and scholarship, On August 29, 1947 Dr. Ambedkar was appointed the Chairman of the Drafting Committee that was constituted by the Constituent Assembly to draft a Constitution for independent India. The draft Constitution was the result of the collective efforts of a galaxy of great leaders and legal scholars in the Constituent Assembly such as Jawaharlal Nehru, Rajendra Prasad, B.R. Ambedkar, Sardar Patel, B.N. Rao, Alladi Krishnaswamy Ayyar etc. Speaking after the completion of his work, Ambedkar said:

“I feel the Constitution is workable; it is flexible and it is strong enough to hold the country together both in peace time and in war time.”

To Ambedkar, the Constitution was not just the basic law for the governance of the country; rather it was a vehicle of the nation’s progress, reflecting the best in the past traditions of the country, to cope with the needs of the present and possessing enough resilience to meet the needs of the future. At the same time he was of the view that it must be a living organ, not for one or two generations, but for generations to come. Ambedkar kept the clauses of the Constitution flexible so that amendments could be made as and when the situation demanded. He provided an inspiring Preamble to the Constitution ensuring justice, social, economic and political, liberty, equality and fraternity. However, the creation of an egalitarian social order, however, remains an unfulfilled wishful thinking to this day. Dr Ambedkar played a seminal role in the framing of the Indian Constitution. He used all his experience and knowledge in drafting the Constitution.

He carved a unique and impregnable pride of place and honour in the history of the free Indian nation. So long as the Indian Constitution survives, the name of Babasaheb Ambedkar will remain immortal. He lives forever in the hearts of every downtrodden. The first President of India, Dr Rajendra Prasad, praised for the services rendered by Dr Ambedkar in the constituting the Indian Constitution:

“I have carefully watched the day-to-day activities from the presidential seat. Therefore, I appreciate more than others with how much dedication and vitality this task has been carried out by the Drafting Committee and by its chairman Dr Bhim Rao Ambedkar in particular. We never did a better thing than having Dr Ambedkar on the Drafting Committee and selecting him as its chairman.”

Contribution In Making Of Constitution:

The Fundamental Rights:

Ambedkar was a champion of fundamental rights and said: “I came into the constitution assembly with a greater aspiration than to safeguard the interest of the scheduled castes. I had not the remotest idea that I would be called upon to undertake a more responsible function. I was, therefore, surprised when the assembly elected me to the Drafting Committee. I was more than surprised when the Drafting Committee elected me to be its chairman”.

The Part III of the Indian Constitution guarantees the fundamental rights to the citizens against the state. Some of the fundamental rights contained in Articles 15(2), 17, 23, and 24 are also enforceable against individuals as they are very significant rights relating to the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of religion, race, caste, sex or place of birth etc. The text prepared by Ambedkar provided constitutional guarantees and protections for a wide range of civil liberties for individual citizens, including freedom of religion, the abolition of untouchability and outlawing all forms of discrimination. Ambedkar argued for extensive economic and social rights for women.

Dr. Ambedkar was rather more instrumental in incorporating Article 17 which provides for the ‘Abolition of Untouchability’ whereby “Untouchability” is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden. Even though, caste based discrimination and violence still remains a fact of life in Today’s India, there has been considerable progress for the historically disadvantaged sections of society. His role was equally crucial in introducing other fundamental rights whereby the Constitution provides for equal justice, freedom and dignity to all Indian citizens irrespective of caste, creed or religion.

Socio-economic Justice for the people:

The concept of socio-economic justice, as envisioned by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar is very well reflected in the Directive principles of state policy. Part IV of the constitution, which is entitled as directive principles of state policy, includes the right to adequate means of livelihood, right against economic exploitation, right of both sexes to equal pay for equal work, right to work, right to leisure and rest and right to public assistance in case of unemployment, old age, sickness and like. This part also contains some principles of economic and social justice and certain ideals which the state should strive to attain.

Parliamentary Democracy:

According to B. R. Ambedkar “The Parliamentary system differs from a non- parliamentary system in as much as the former is more responsible than the latter, but they also differ as to the time and agency for assessment of their responsibility. The Draft Constitution in recommending the Parliamentary system of executive has preferred more responsibility to more stability”. He was a strong advocate of the parliamentary form of government right from the inception of the Government of India Act of 1935. He firmly believed that the parliamentary system of government alone can usher in an egalitarian society through the application of the principles of social democracy. The Preamble of the Indian Constitution echoes the principles of parliamentary democracy ensuring to “secure to all its citizens - Justice, Social, Economic and Political and Liberty of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship, Equality of status and of opportunity and to promote among them all—Fraternity....”

State Socialism:

Dr Ambedkar advocated his economic doctrine of “state socialism” in the draft Constitution. He proposed state ownership of agriculture with a collectivized method of cultivation and a modified form of state socialism in the field of industry. But due to strong opposition in the Constitution Assembly, he could not incorporate his scheme of state socialism under the fundamental rights as a part of the Constitution.

For Ambedkar, Democracy is essentially a form of society, a mode of associated living. The roots of democracy are to be searched in the social relationship, and in the terms of associated life between the people who form a society. Ambedkar knew that mere adoption of a democratic system of government in the Constitution would not be sufficient. Equality in society, equality before law and administration, constitutional morality, lack of tyranny of the majority and developing public conscience are conditions for the success of democracy in India.

Social Philosophy:

Ambedkar was, par excellence, a spokesman of the ignored humanity - the workers, small peasants and landless labourers. He expressed the sorrows of the untouchables and tried sincerely to channel the activities of the depressed classes. In mobilising them, he created a sense of self-respect and pride in them. He dedicated his life to the cause of removal of untouchability and completely identified himself with the socially segregated section of the Indian society. He launched a life-long crusade for liberating them from their centuries-old enslavement and ostracism. It is this crusade which “lifted him up high from a mere ghetto boy to a legend in his own lifetime”. He was born an untouchable and therefore he had an intense yearning to see that the untouchables are better placed in social, political and economic fields. He was for a total reorganization and reconstruction of the Hindu society on two main principles—equality and absence of casteism. Dr. Ambedkar entertained a dream that political democracy can also be translated into social democracy. He tried to restructure a totally dilapidated structure.

He was a champion of a revolution to be brought about by the dynamics of public opinion through a change in the laws of the land. He was not a Utopian, but a realist. He saw a vast difference between a revolution and real social change. For him, the transfer of power must be accompanied by such distribution of power that the result would be a real social change in the relative strength of forces operating in society. Ambedkar reiterated: “The caste system prevents common activity and by preventing it, it has prevented the Hindus from becoming a society with unified life and a consciousness of its own being.”

Hence, Ambedkar’s great vision enjoined the abolition of casteism in every shape and form, since he was opposed to all divisive forces and aimed at strengthening the impulse of national integration. Baba Sahib was indeed a friend, philosopher and a guide to the people belonged to low strata of society. All these people have seen a ray of hope through the eyes of Baba Sahab. It was a great expectation which has paved the way to lighten the path of the down-trodden people of India.

Conclusion:

The contribution of Dr. Ambedkar in Indian Democracy is not to be forgotten. As a chairman of the Constitutional Committee he gave a shape to our country of a complete Sovereign, Democratic and Republic based on adult franchise. Baba Saheb Ambedkar’s name will be written in golden letters in the history of India as a creator of social justice. This fact is doubtless. He was not only the man of age and builder of the Constitution but also the creator of social justice and betterment of the downtrodden. He was one of the few sons in the History of India that can be said to be the gift of Indian freedom movement. In the true sense of the word, he gave democratic and anti-caste aims. He spent his whole life for the betterment of the poor, exploited, untouchables and troubled classes. Thus, Dr. Ambedkar’s contribution to the Indian Constitution is undoubtedly of the highest order. Indeed he deserved to be called the “father or the Chief Architect” of the Indian Constitution.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar and Hindu Code Bill

Prof. Meghatee G. Meshram,

Assit. Prof.,

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar College of Social Work, Morane, T./Dist.Dhule

Abstract:-

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's movement from the very beginning of in 1924, the struggle for the unification of Hindu society for social equality continued unabated till the end of his life. Dr Ambedkar was anxious day and night to create a non-racial society. The condition of Dalits and Shudras was the same or even worse of women. Therefore, it was necessary to formulate a Hindu Code Bill to eradicate this situation and bring everyone to the level of society. According to Dr. Ambedkar, the social status of women in ancient India was very high. It has been declining in recent times. No one can say much about whether women were at the forefront of government in ancient times. But the status of women in the intellectual and social life of the country was very high. No one can doubt it. In Hinduism, woman is basically considered as a deity. But later she got the position of maid. When women were not respected in any other country in the world. At that time, women in India were getting it. The decline that followed was due to someone, due to Manu and his creation of the Manusmriti!!!

There is no doubt that the social work done by Dr. Ambedkar throughout his life was not only for the Dalit class but also for the development of all castes and religions. Among the many works in the social change movement, Dr. Ambedkar's work for the upliftment of all women is important in many ways. Rise and Decline of Hindu Women, Burning of Manusmriti, Destruction of Caste, Healing of Buddha's Dhamma, Riddles in Hinduism, Conquest of Brahmanism, Entry of Kalaram Temple, and establishment of Educational Institution and finally, the creation of the Indian Constitution is an important task in the framework of women's liberation. Among the many great works done by Dr. Ambedkar for the advancement of women, the creation of the Hindu Code Bill is just as effective today. The Hindu Code Bill can be seen as an effective structure in Dr. Ambedkar's ideology. Dr. Ambedkar tried to make the law on the level of equality by refuting the inequality and flaws in the law of the time. It was not only his wish but also his insistence that the bill be passed. Of course, this bill was strongly opposed by the Sanatanists. But even some so-called progressive Hindus were opposed to the bill. So it could not pass. But in a real sense, the bill was a charter for women's rights. Through this study the researcher tried to bring to light on the most important work of Dr. Ambedkar's for the Empowerment of the Women in all the Class and Castes by the Hindu Code Bill.

Key words: - Dr. Ambedkar, Women, Hindu Code Bill, Caste System, Religion System, Empowerment.

Introduction:-

In today's 21st century, the attitude towards women is more sensible and progressive than ever before. This is definitely a satisfying change in the Society. The prehistory of today's changed feminism is well known. Many social reformers in India have tried to turn the pages of history based on the exploitation of women. During the Prabodhan period, the Phule couple worked hard to provide educational and social status to women. As well as Karve, Agarkar set up various educational institutions. After 1920, Mahatma Gandhi given special attention to increasing the participation of women in the freedom movement and at the same time provided many means of economic for self-reliance. Onward, Dr. Ambedkar's inculcation of the values of equality, justice, freedom and fraternity started the process of inclusion of women and hence the share of women's progress was freed. Dr.

Ambedkar started various social movements to create a society free from exploitation. Women were heavily involved in each of those movements. As part of that movement, the Hindu Code Bill was created. He recognized the need for legislation and the importance of political intervention for women's rights. Therefore, he drafted the Hindu Code Bill.

Objectives of the study:-

1. To study the background of Hindu Code Bill.
2. To Study the provisions of Hindu Code Bill.
3. To understand the rights of women from the Hindu Code Bill.
4. To understand the importance of Hindu Code Bill for women empowerment.

Methodology:

This study is based on secondary data. The secondary data has used to write this paper. The secondary data from various journal articles, books, news paper articles and reference books.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Approach:-

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar said, "If we want to measure the progress of a society, it is very important to measure the progress of women." Defiantly, the influence of Dr. Ambedkar's thought on women who break the chain of years of exploitation and slavery. Dr. Ambedkar played an important role in the social transformation movement for the emancipation of women. Among them, the enactment of the Hindu Code Bill in the then situation was a manifesto of women's rights and entitlements. If man wants to develop the race, he will not leave women behind. Dr. Ambedkar believes that they should be able to shoulder the same burden of responsibility on their shoulders. Since, the philosophy of upliftment of women of all castes, religions, races and castes is in the Hindu Code Bill; Dr. Ambedkar did his best to get the bill passed. But the bill was not passed. And finally Dr. Ambedkar had to resign from the ministry. In the 20th century, considering the interrelationship between caste and women's issues, Dr. Ambedkar had insisted on the Hindu Code Bill. The creation of the Hindu Code Bill is one of the important tasks in the movement for the liberation of women from slavery. The fundamental rights enshrined in Articles 12 to 35 of the Indian Constitution guarantee the overall development of women. That's why we see today's educated, fearless, confident, decisive, strong woman in the society. And of course, the credit for this changing situation of women in the society goes to Dr. Ambedkar and his proposed Hindu Code Bill.

Nature and history of Hindu Code Bill:

In the 19th century, feminist reform was in full swing. Because the women of this century were slaves to a strict tradition. They were deprived of rights like education, alimony, inheritance, property, divorce, adoption etc. Not only the backward and Dalit women were deprived from their rights but also the upper caste women. The provisions and constitutional rights in the Hindu Code Bill are not only to protect women but also to establish their dignity and self-respect. At a time, the idea of empowerment of female belongs to all class and castes; and Dr. Ambedkar did it with a view to human liberation. Some laws for women already existed before the Hindu Code Bill was drafted. But there was no perfection in it. Ancient Hindu law is mainly based on Manusmriti, Yajnyabalkyasmriti and Kautilya Arthashastra. These laws did not give equal justice to women of all castes. There were laws like Prevention of Infanticide Act, 1802, Prohibition of Sati Act 1829, Financial Freedom Act 1850, Widow

Marriage Act 1856, Religious Divorce Act 1866, Special Marriage Act 1872, Consent Age Act 1881, Inheritance Act 1928, Child Marriage Prohibition Act 1929, Hindu Women's Property Act 1937 etc. The exploitation of women in India is intensified by the caste system, the class system that emerged after the arrival of the British and the patriarchy that has been prevailed since the time of the Ramayana and Mahabharata. This means that no one factor is responsible for the exploitation of women and women are exploited through the complexities of caste system, masculinity, caste system, religion system, family system etc. Dr. Ambedkar said, "Women are the gateway to the caste system." That's why on the background of ending the caste system that enslaves women; Dr. Ambedkar drafts the Hindu Code Bill.

The Hindu Code Bill was first introduced in Parliament on August 1, 1946 but was not passed. Later, on April 11, 1947, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar introduced the Hindu Code Bill in Parliament. Hindu Code Bill was quoted from newspapers from time to time and every time, it was called 'Ambedkar Smriti'. When we enlighten on the Hindu Code Bill we observed that Eighty per cent of the bill was old and only 20 per cent change was expected.

In Hindu Code Bill, Dr. Ambedkar focused mainly on further rights of women-

1. Inheritance rights
2. Right to divorce
3. Right of marriage/ adoption
4. Right to monogamy/ alimony

1. Inheritance rights: - According to "" property was transferred to children by inheritance rights. Prior to this Act, the two methods of Mitakshara and Dayabhaga (Dayabhaga and Mitakshara are Sanskrit texts on inheritance rights) in Hinduism property was transferred to children by inheritance rights. Like Mitakshara, the property of a Hindu is not only his property but also that of his father, son, grandson and great-grandson. If one of these dies. The heirs of the deceased would go to the men who would be left behind in the family without going to the property. The new bill recognizes the obligation that the inherited property will be his personal property and he has the right to dispose of it by making a donation, will or any other means. In today's world wealth is the mainstay of freedom. As long as women do not inherit property, their slavery will not end.

2. Right to Divorce: - As marriage is considered a religious rite in Hinduism, divorce was not allowed in previous religious marriages. Now the divorce was to be allowed for the next reason. (1) Abandonment of one by another, (2) Conversion, (3) Keeping or being kept, (4) Madness, (5) Incurable leprosy, (6) Genital disease, (7) Cruelty. Divorce was allowed for one of the reasons mentioned above, so the right to divorce in the Hindu Code Bill was a severe blow to the patriarchal value system. Under existing law, women did not have the right to divorce. But the amended law gave her that right. Ambedkar legislated for the upper caste women in the lower caste system of Kadimod / divorce. This was the credit side of the bill.

3. Right to Marriage and Adoption: -The previous law considered marriage between two Hindus of the same caste as legal. Adopted daughters have to be of the same caste. The amended law does not insist on caste. As a result, caste and patriarchy are not restricted to women. For the first time, inter-caste and inter-caste marriages were recognized.

4. Right to monogamy / alimony: - This right protected the marital life of women and restricted the tendency of men to have multiple wives while single wives were still alive. According to a section of the bill, if the wife is living separately from her husband, she also has the right to seek alimony from her husband. The law provided financial protection to women's lives after marriage.

Defeat of Hindu Code Bill: -

The Hindu Code Bill was an attempt to amend the existing Hindu law. When the Hindu Code Bill was tabled in the Lok Sabha in December 1949. Opponents of the bill had protested against the Congress government by wearing Gandhi hats outside the House. Women who really needed the bill for their upliftment and autonomy also joined the opposition. Sanatani Hindus did not want a change in the original law. So they continued to oppose Bill. A change in their Hindu code from an untouchable person was not acceptable to them at all. The interference of an untouchable person in the Hindu Code of Conduct was never acceptable to the upper class. When this bill came up for discussion. Then V. K. Palekar, Balshastri, Shamaprasad Mukherjee, Thakur Das Bhargava, Dr. Rajendra Prasad, Pandit Malviya, Anant Shayanam Iyengar, Nasruddin, Dr. Pattabhi Sitarammaiya, Jagatguru Shankaracharya, Swami Karpatri etc. opposed this bill. The Hindu Code Bill is an attack on the rights of the religious system and before introducing this bill, all of them were of the opinion that Dr. Ambedkar did not ask them.

There were three types of opponents of this bill.

- (1) Sanatani- they did not want a change in Hindu law and tradition.
- (2) Established-there was a danger for them
- (3) Congress political leaders focusing on elections

The Hindu Code Bill guaranteed women's social, economic and religious freedom. But those women did not insist on the Hindu Code Bill. With the exception of a handful of women, everyone opposed the bill. Even elected women of parliament have shown no awareness of the bill.

Babasaheb says, "My Hindu code bill is that a woman should put on the milk and see that the milk has finally run out." Pandit Nehru was initially on the side of Bill. But as the opposition of the orthodox grew, they were unable to pass. According to Dr. Ambedkar, there was nothing fundamental or revolutionary in the bill. However, there was opposition to the bill inside and outside Parliament. Out of respect for Pandit Nehru, many people supported the bill and voted in his favor. But more than that, many opposed him. The defeat of the Hindu Code Bill is a heartbreaking defeat of progressive rationalism in the age of independence.

Way Forward: -

The majority of the members in the Constituent Assembly were intolerant of the impact of religion on women's issues. That's why the Hindu Code Bill was rejected. Later, the same bill was passed in pieces. Dr. Ambedkar fought mostly for the rights of women against the Guard of Religion (Dharmarakshas). Defeat of Hindu Code Bill, It was very painful for Ambedkar. Therefore, he resigned from the ministry. The making of the Hindu Code Bill and the making of the Constitution are two major structures in almost the same period. After defeating the Hindu Code Bill, Babasaheb turned his attention to constitution making and gave the country an excellent constitution. In the fundamental rights of Articles 12 to 35, all the rights that women have never demanded, Dr. Ambedkar rewarded women. For hundreds of years, American women have had to fight for inheritance, the right to vote, and legal equality and for that they had to be imprisoned. But Indian women did not get all these things and got them automatically according to the Indian Constitution. The Hindu Code Bill was an option or a way to end the Casteism but it was not passed. But Dr. Ambedkar had already included in the Indian Constitution the changes he wanted in the Hindu Code Bill.

From the post-independence period to the present day, the progress of women in various fields is certainly a matter of satisfaction. With the protection of the Constitution, women have made tremendous progress in the fields of education, society, economy, culture and science. Today, there is no area in the country where women are not visible. In all the places like art, science, literature, sports, women are seen making spectacular progress. All this was made possible by constitutional rights. Then, it has to be admitted that the influence of Dr. Ambedkar's ideology can be seen in today's women's progress.

Conclusion:

The Hindu Code Bill was part of the empowerment of women, if this bill had been passed, the situation of women in India would have improved. Their development was supposed to gain momentum but it did not happen. In later times different governments tried to give equal opportunities to women by enacting feminist laws. But Dr. Ambedkar was not satisfied with that. However, in the end, it can be said that Dr. Ambedkar had a lot of faith in the power of women. Women must be developed to change the whole society. Therefore, Babasaheb always felt that women's rights should not be violated. Dr. Ambedkar played a vital role in the empowerment of women. According to Dr. Ambedkar, Women must come forward to get their rights. Only then they would be empowered. Even today, if women follow Dr. Ambedkar and his ideas as an ideal, there is no doubt that women will be empowered.

Savior of the Indian Labour's - Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar

Kamble C. N .

Asst. Professor,
I.M. Law College, Satara

Nationalism, a Means to an End Labour's creed is internationalism. Labour is interested in nationalism only because the wheels of democracy—such as representative Parliaments, responsible Executives, constitutional conventions, etc.—work better in a community united by national sentiments. Nationalism to Labour is only a means to an end. It is not an end in itself to which Labour can agree to sacrifice what it regards as the most essential principles of life.

Abstract

The Indian economic progress has been only revolving around the capitalists and their own interests in the nation. Even the political parties or people's representatives too are engaged in making similar policies and executing in the favor of capitalists resulting in the exploitation of the entire labour force. The industrialists were free to exploit the energies, strength, and powers of the workers. There was no controlling measure to such inhuman activities of the owners. No one could try to bring out this worst situation of the labour community. It was continued up to Second World War. Nevertheless, during the British era, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar emerged as a savior for the entire labor fraternity in India. His kin observation and experience were appreciable regarding the inhuman treatment to the vulnerable society including laborers by the contemporary dominance in India. He has struggled with endless effort to lay down the humanitarian values by providing legal right and legal protection.

This paper affords a critique on stiffness and rigidity regarding the violation of human rights of labour, even though mandatory laws were passed with the efforts of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar. So far as the labour reforms are concerned the country has failed to pick demographic dividends as a Kantian approach. Periodic changes in labour laws have been resulted in worsening conditions of the laborers rather than in resolving the labour issues. The paper presents an insightful account of labor rights, emerging issues, and challenges that pose roadblocks for labor reforms in India.

Keywords: Savior, Humanity, Labour force, Labour Reforms.

Introduction

During the Second World War combatants and non-combatants in the war had required battle accessories and succulence. In the urge of money capitalists established industries and employed labor force. Industrialists could try for the prosperity of their industry only and accumulation of huge and huge property. The employed labor force was unorganized, unstructured, and unregulated. Due to a lack of bargaining power for the workers, the laborers were hard to offer legal protection and social security during any contingency. They could not receive a due share of their work. They were suffering from the very worst labor conditions and human values.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was too much unrest with these situations. He led the way of measures for labor welfare. He laid the foundation for the governments various fundamental labour policies. His humanitarian approach relating to labor issues was unanimously accepted and turned into the legal mandates. Therefore he was the guiding savior for Indian labor and economy. Shri Rajnath Singh, while paying tributes to Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar said that “Babasaheb was a saint who always worked for the betterment of the persons particularly for the downtrodden.”

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar’s Vision

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a revolutionary father of modern democratic India. He was the only leader who was multi-dimensional and a great visionary for the true development of India. He was a prudential person who had views and efforts to save and secured the humanity of common people like women, children, the downtrodden, peasants, laborers, etc in India. In the absence of his views and work the future of vulnerable groups would have been in terrain darkness.

The vision of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar and his radical initiatives for labour welfare were recollected by the writer. His inclusive and comprehensive approach towards the policy issues relating to every aspect of workers' lifelike working hours, working conditions including wages, the participation of women and other disadvantageous segments, social security, their skill, and training, etc he guided the policy process in a determined manner. He adopted and recognized the consensual approach of tripartite consultation. He championed the causes of labor issues and was also instrumental in the importance of promotion and involvement of the trade unions.

Luminous Contributions of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar

As a representative of the depressed class Babasaheb Ambedkar forcefully pleaded in the Round Table Conference, for living wages, decent working conditions, and the freedom of peasants from the clutches of cruel landlords. From 1942 to 1946 his Labour Membership of the Viceroy’s Executive Council, also fought for the removal of social evils that blighted the lives of the downtrodden. Robust policies of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar relating to labor, economic, agriculture, education, employment, etc which have been saved India even in times of great contingencies like social, political, and economic depressions. However, the most congenial and castigate upper castes people were the barrier to give credit to Dr. Ambedkar’s contribution in building a great nation. “Although Dr. Ambedkar is usually remembered as a leader of the Dalit classes, he was truly a leader and architect of modern India.”

Legal Protection to Women Labours in India

The Nobel Laureate Kailash Satyarthi talked about the brilliant contributions of Babasaheb in the labor concern. He argued that due to Babasaheb Ambedkar’s farsightedness most of the critical labor issues including forced labor, maternity benefit for women, and working conditions were embodied in the Constitution of India while a large majority of the world was still far away to resolve these issues. These insights were paved into Women Labour welfare fund, Women and Child Labour Protection Act, Maternity Benefit for women Labour, Restoration of Ban on Employment of Women on Underground Work in Coal Mines, The Bill of the Mines Maternity Benefit (Amendment) Bill 1943; women empowered safety regulations in Indian Factory Act, etc.

Reduction of Working Hours

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar geared the intricate labour problems and received positive reception and respect from employees and employers. He was unrest due to the exploitation of workers who were being extracted up to 14 hours for work. The situation was very worst resulting adversely in their health. Sometimes the workers had to work continuously up to the will of their employer affecting the health and hygiene. It is a hidden fact that Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was the savior of labours in India. In the 7th session of the Indian Labour Conference in New Delhi, November 27, 1942, he argued for the reduction of working hours of the labour community. He succeeds to bring eight hours of duty in India and change the working time from 14 hours to 8 hours became a light for workers in India.

Union of the Worker

The entire labour community in India was unorganized and scattered. Even employers were tried to divide and exploit. They were saliently gone on tolerating every inhuman treatment exerted by their masters. They were helpless to argue against their counterpart mighty masters. Babasaheb Ambedkar knew the strength and power of unity. Therefore he wanted to confer a right to form a union so that they themselves can fight for their rights. Babasaheb Ambedkar established an association that the Bombay Textile Labour Union in 1925 which was assisted by N.M. Joshi and R.R. Bakhale.

In 1936 Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar established the Independent Labour Party with an objective to fight for the rights of the working class relating to social, economic and political rights. The agenda of IPL was to help irrespective of touchable and untouchable, Brahmin and non-Brahmin, Hindu and Muslim members. He introduced the Indian Trade Union (Amendment) Bill, 1943 and compelled the employers to acknowledge the same. The Act includes tripartite mechanism of settling Labour issues through trade unions.

Equal Remunerations

As the women worker never works lesser than male workers so she would be equally entitled to equal recompense. Therefore as a historic moment, Babasaheb Ambedkar said that “It is for the first time that I think in any industry the principle has been established of equal pay for equal work irrespective of the sex.” So far as he legalized it under article 39 of the Directive Provision of State Policy in the Constitution of India. That is applicable to every worker even in the unorganized sector of the country. He emphasized several initiatives to be undertaken by the ministry including drafting of labour codes.

National Employment Agency

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was prominent in the establishment of the employment exchanges in the country during the tenure as the Labour member in the Provincial government in British India. This is the central office administered by the central government which collects, protects and furnishes information on the probable employers, respective available vacancies and job seekers. Thereby prospective jobseekers were facilitating to find a suitable job and for the reciprocal industry to find the suitable manpower. Due to his relentless efforts, it has been supported by the creation of the ‘National Employment Agency’ for the furtherance of the employability of the job seekers, employment information, and carrier counseling and vocational guidance.

Labour Welfare

Dr B.R. Ambedkar spared time to seek the conditions in the mines of coalfields. He visited 400 feet underground in the Dhanbad district of Jharkhand to see the actual operations and working conditions in the manganese, coal and mica mines. There he had found a highly risky and hazardous working environment. Thereby, Babasaheb prepared the Mines Maternity Benefit (Amendment) Bill 1943 to empower the women workers with the maternity benefits and issues relating to absenteeism. It leads to the passing of the Coalmines Labour Welfare Ordinance in 1944, which raised a fund to promote the welfare of labour employed in the coal mining industry. For the safeguarding, the health and safety of the workers, the labour welfare fund were increased and utilized. It also facilitated provisions for education, drinking water, recreational facilities and cultural activities for promoting their welfare. These all turned into a bill and got passed the Indian Factory Act, 1948. Further amending the Act in 1945, Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar introduced a provision prohibiting women working underground before 10 weeks of her confinement. The maternity benefit has to be given for 14 weeks in all 10 weeks before confinement and 4 weeks after confinement.

In this respect, while paying tribute to the astounding contribution of Babasaheb Dr B. R. Ambedkar, Bandaru Laxman said that the ministry in its effort is made to ensure the welfare of the workers. In no case, the reforms will be against the interest of the working class.

Long-Drawn Strike

Actually, Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was in the favor of the right to strike workers. He supported the 1928 textile strike but he opposed the 1929 strike. In fact, he threatened the Communist leaders with demand in a strike for the downtrodden especially SC, STs' access to all jobs in the mill. Otherwise, if they did not find a space, then he will dissuade downtrodden workers from joining the strike. Communist leaders very reluctantly accepted the demand.

The Bombay textile strike organized in 1934 by the Communists was also opposed by Babasaheb Ambedkar. Critics had argued that Ambedkar not only broke the "workers' unity" on the ground of 'caste' but also creating 'blacklegs' inside the mills. Babasaheb Ambedkar strongly contended that the 1928 strike had pushed lower-caste workers into indebtedness and extreme indigence. Moreover, unlike upper caste workers who have farmlands; the downtrodden did not have alternate means of livelihood during long drawn strikes. Therefore, the downtrodden were not in a position to join in such a long-drawn strike. However, this did not prevent Babasaheb from defending the striking leaders in the court of law. Eventually, Babasaheb's defence resulted in the acquittal of all communist leaders arrested for their involvement in the strike.

In 1938 the conciliation was made compulsory in the Industrial Disputes Bill. The provision was made with six-month imprisonment for participating in illegal strikes. Babasaheb Ambedkar argued that to punish workers for participating in the strike was making the worker a 'slave' and, it would be the 'involuntary servitude' violating human rights. He had successfully organized a one-day strike on 7 November 1938 with a view to opposing the bill outside the Assembly. The Indian Communists and Socialists have welcomed the strike and supported for the agitation. It was the first successful strike launched against a popular government by labour leaders in the leadership of Babasaheb Ambedkar.

Overcome Caste and Religious Antagonism

In the textile weaving mill during the weaving process, the workers had to wet the thread with their saliva to tie the knot. Due to this process, so-called upper caste workers argued that there would result in 'pollution' for them from downtrodden workers. They demanded under this pretext not to allow downtrodden workers in weaving departments. Accordingly the downtrodden especially SC, STs were excluded from working.

The Communists were arguing that capitalism was the only enemy of the working classes but Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar argued that that Brahminism was an equally important enemy. The communists were in the opinion that the destruction of capitalist order will automatically remove the perils of the caste system. According to Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar, the elimination of social discrimination was the most essential condition for fighting against capitalism. The capitalism battle would be only possible by initiating equality in the labour market where all workers irrespective of caste had equal access. This would be possible by replacing caste-based recruitments prejudiced by Brahminical culture. This will resolve caste and religious antagonism among the workers, which acted as a barrier to working-class unity.

Protection from Economic Exploitation

Babasaheb Ambedkar also challenged the narrower focus of ‘class’ on material relations or economic exploitation alone. He argued that non-economic modes of domination and exploitation are vital, as they fed into capital-labor relationships. Moreover, he argued that non-economic modes also deprive people of those basic goods that are essential for the constitution of self-confidence, a life of mutual recognition and participation in collective affairs. His interventions on the labor question, thus, have much to offer for contemporary India as caste, gender and religion continue to influence an individual’s life choices. The Workmen’s Compensation Act 1923 is passed which provides to compensate the injured laborers for any mishap in the industry.

Employees Health Insurance

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar knew that an employee’s health insurance not only protects his health but can also return a range of benefits via it boost morale, increase productivity, and shaping healthy industrial culture. Thus individual man’s development leads to the development of the nation. India brought ‘Employees State Insurance’ as the first nation among the East Asian countries due to the efforts of Dr. Babasaheb only.

The scheme offers benefits relating to medical, disability, maternity, unemployment allowance, etc. It provides financial protection to members in case of untimely health-related contingencies. The Minimum Wage Act was passed to prevent the exploitation of workers. This Act secures the welfare of the workers in a bloodthirsty market in certain employments by providing for a minimum limit of wages Compulsory Service without Discrimination the Constitution of India provides the fundamental right against exploitation by their employers. Trafficking in human beings, beggars, and similar forms of forced labor prohibits under Article 23. It was argued that the compulsory service (it may tend to exploitation) for ‘public’ purposes and tried to reframe it as a ‘social and national’ importance. Opposing that Babasaheb expressed grave apprehensions that the future Indian state might perpetuate these practices and exploits the working class in public work. Apart from these welfare laws the other provisions to provide benefits like Provident Fund (PF), Dearness Allowance (DA), Labor Welfare Fund, Paid Holidays, and Extra pay for Overtime were launched. Moreover, there is many more social security legislation have been enacted with the efforts of Babasaheb. His inputs towards the War Injuries (Compensation Insurance) Bill, the Indian Boilers (Amendment) Bill, 1943 for removing the lacuna in the inspection practices of Boiler inspectors which had caused serious loss of lives of mill workers in Bombay, Indian Mines (Amendment) Bill, The Indian Trade Unions (Amendment) Bill, The Coal Mines Safety (Stowing) Amendment Bill, Workmen’s Compensation (Amendment) Bill are of lasting importance.

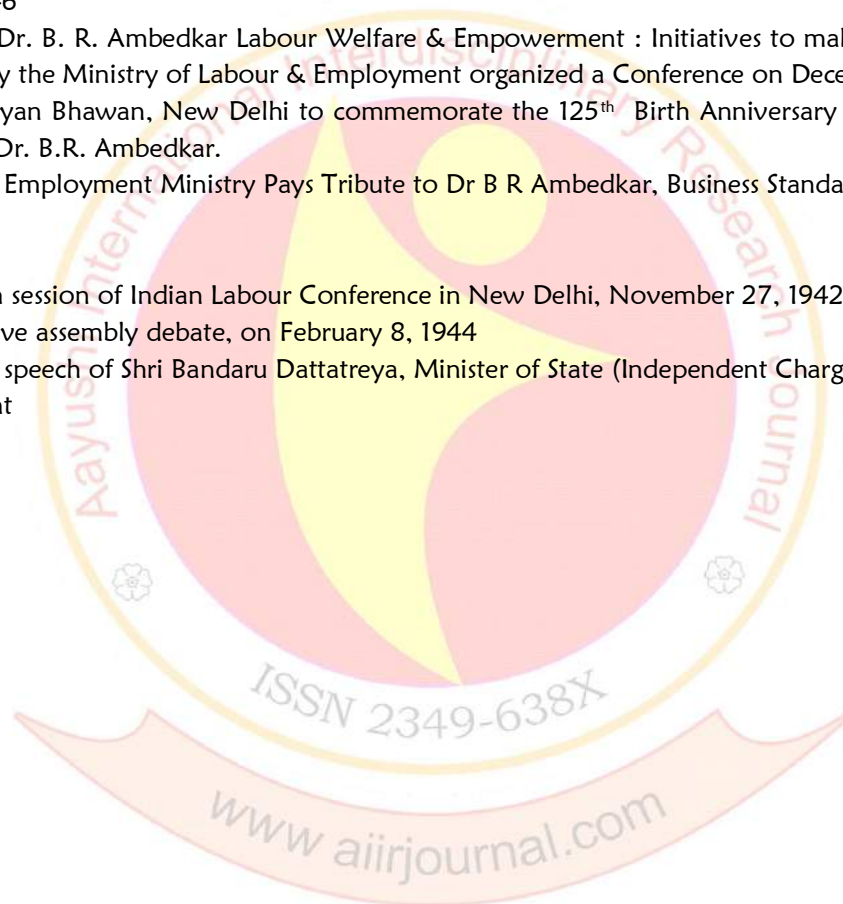

Conclusion

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar played a vital role in shaping Indian social, politics and economical structure. He ensured and secured the future of the labor class by ensuring fundamental rights in the Indian Constitution and various social security and welfare legislations. Otherwise, their future would have been in the dark like it had been for generations. Today, the Indian working class is grateful, as they received many benefits due to Babasaheb. But his real contribution to the nation and labor class is deliberately ignored or not given adequate recognition by the ruling system. Moreover several existing labour rights are molded in the pretext of development. So also workers are not benefited from these legislations due to non implementation policy adopted by the past and present rulers. Nevertheless we cannot achieve real development of the nation unless and until to look back on the thought and actions of the architect of labour welfare measure given by Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar.

Role Of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar Towards Women Empowerment In India

Dr. Dipsikha Konwar

Abstract

In Indian patriarchal society, since ancient period to till now, the women have been victimized and subjected to various social evil, such as, child marriage, sati partha, parda pratha, restriction to widow remarriage, devadasi system, prostitution, dowry death, witch hunting, domestic violence etc. The practice of such victimization and exploitation of women is a big obstacle in all round development of the society in true sense. To bring the society in a forward position, the pioneer of social justice, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar fought for the women empowerment. His motive was to rebuild the society along with democratic ideas of liberty, equality and fraternity. He contributed in Hindu Personal laws and introduced many women welfare provisions in the Constitution of India. This article intends to focus on Dr. Ambedkar's ideas and role on women empowerment and relevancy of the same in present society.

Key words: women empowerment, social justice, equality, liberty, fraternity.

Introduction

“Unity is meaningless without the accompaniment of women. Education is fruitless without educated women, and agitation is incomplete without the strength of women”—Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar.

In India, during ancient period, women enjoyed a very superior position and it was said that “God reside at places where women are worshiped.” Though women have been regarded as a symbol of spirituality in our scriptures, but in fact, people, community and patriarchal society in India at large underestimated the importance of women and has so developed various types of ill-practices from ancient period to till date such as sati partha, parda partha, devadasi system, child marriage, restriction to widow remarriage, dowry death, sexual assault, forced prostitution, female infanticide, rape, honour killing, forced surrogacy etc. In such circumstances, they have lost their own distinctiveness and fundamental human rights too. To uplift the women from such unfortunate and oppressive position Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, the principal architect of the Constitution of India always crusaded for the empowerment of women and as a consequence, it is seen that for holistic empowerment of women, an effective convergence of social, economic and political aspects impacting women's life is considered by the Government through various schemes.

Nowadays, empowerment of women is a main agenda for a progressive society and it is also essential for achievement of sustainable development. Role of women has always been important as they have contributed immensely to the growth and development of the society. They plays multifaceted role in the family as a wife, mother, sister, daughter, friend, grand-mother and in other relations. Empowerment is a multi-faceted, multi-dimensional and multi-layered concept. Women's empowerment is a process in which women gain greater share of control over resources material, human and intellectual like knowledge, information, ideas and financial resources like money and access to money and control over decision-making in the home, community, society and nation, and to gain power. In Hindu Sastras, the place of women degenerated into merely objects of pleasure as commodity. The position accorded to women by Manusmriti in the post-Vedic period is known to us, how they were treated and controlled by sages for their own benefits and other's destruction, how married women were considered as subservient to her husband. For this reason Dr. Ambedkar started revolt against all oppressive and baseless superstitious features of the Hindu society, those were created in the name of sanskars. He realized that the position of women is as the sufferers of the cruel, caste-based and rigid hierarchical social system.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar and Women Empowerment

Dr. Ambedkar is famous for his battled against unjust and sadistic practices like devadasi system, child marriage and encouraged for family planning measures for women. Additionally, he also widely reviewed the position of women in both the Hindu and Muslim religion. He believed that Buddhism allows equal status to both women and men. Considering all these, Dr. Ambedkar realized for the process of social reforms by inclusion of the concept of equality irrespective of caste, creed, gender and religion. Accordingly, he started fought for freedom of women and their social, economic and political rights. His principle was to work and fight for the oppressed, exploited, illiterates, ill-treated people irrespective of their caste or social status, gender and place of birth. According to Dr. Ambedkar, the society must be based on objective, and not on vicious traditions of caste system.

In order to achieve women empowerment, in 1918 Dr. Ambedkar demanded separate electorate and reserved seats for the depressed classes in proportion to their population to their population. After that he launched movement on 1920 onwards to liberate the downtrodden masses and to secure rights of the depressed classes. In addition to this his severe publicity against the Hindu Social orders, he published journal 'Mooknayak' in 1920 and 'Bahishkrit Bharat' in 1927. After he nominated as members of Bombay Legislative Council on 18th February, 1927, he advised Indians to participate in the world war on behalf of the British Government. Dr. Ambedkar very confidently refused to accept the infallibility of Vedas. In the Mahad Satyagraha, in 1927, for temple entry, more than 50 women participated and decided to burn Manusmriti, which humiliated position of women and Shudras. Dr. Ambedkar had conceded remarkable work for extinction of caste and the oppressed section of the society and always encouraged women to take part in struggle against caste prejudices. In 1940, at Nagpur in All India Depressed classes Women's Conference, Dr. Ambedkar strongly emphasized that no progress could be possible without women and considered education as a significant instrument for the freedom of women. He said, "I measure the progress of community by the degree of progress which women have achieved. I shall tell you a few things which I think you should bear in mind. Learn to be clean; keep free from all vices. Give education to your children."

As the chairman of the Drafting Committee, Dr. Ambedkar tried for satisfactory insertion of women's rights in the political glossary and Constitution of India. His insight about women is explicitly portrayed in Article- 14, 15 and 16 of the Constitution of India. Along with all other general provisions applicable to all, he included some special provisions for women.

Constitutional Commitments and Women Empowerment

Dr. Ambedkar sought for establishment of a society based on social justice and to ensure the same, the equal status of both men and women is imperative one. Because of Dr. Ambedkar's significant contribution in this regard, the preamble of the Constitution of India guarantees social, economic and political justice, freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship and equality of status and opportunity and fraternity assuring dignity of individual and national unity to all citizens of India without any unfairness of caste, creed or sex.

The Constitution of India provides some direct as well as indirect provisions for the protection of women against any means of discrimination, these are: Article 14, 15, 15(3), 16, 23, 39(a), (d) & (e), 39A, 41, 42, 47, 51A (e), 243D(3), 243 T(3) And 243T(4) etc.

Article 14 provides that the State shall not deny to any person equality before law and equal protection of the laws within the territory of India.

Article 15 prohibits discrimination against any citizen on the ground of religion, race, caste, sex or place of birth.

Article 15(3) empowers the state to make any special provisions for women and children.

Article 16 provides for equality of opportunity to all citizens in matters of public employment.

Article 23 prohibits traffic in human beings and forced labour.

Article 39(a), (d) and (e) enjoins the state to provide equal and adequate means of livelihood for both men and women and equal pay for equal work with the health and strength of women and tender age children.

Article 39A provides for free legal aid to poor and weaker sections of the society and seeks to ensure equal justice for all.

Under Article 41 the state shall guarantee within its economic limits to all citizens, the right to work, to education and public assistance in certain cases.

Article 42 enjoins upon the state to make provisions for securing just and humane conditions of work and for maternity relief.

Article 47 provides that the state shall have to raise the level of nutrition and standard of living of its people and the improvement of public health and so on.

Article 51A (e) imposes a fundamental duty on every citizen to renounce the practices derogatory to the dignity of women.

In order to promote women in political field, Article 243D (3), 243T (3) and 243R (4) of the Constitution of India provides direction for allocation of seats in the Panchayati Raj System.

Article 243D (3) provides that not less than 1/3rd of the total number of seats to be filled by the direct election in every panchayat to be reserved for women, and such seats to be allotted by rotation to different constituencies in a panchayat.

Article 243T (3) provides that not less than 1/3rd of the total number of seats to be filled by the direct election in every municipality to be reserved for women, and such seats to be allotted by rotation to different constituencies in a municipality.

Article 243T (4) provides reservation of offices of chairperson in Municipalities for SC, ST women in such manner as the legislature of a state, may by law provide.

Apart from these to uphold the ideas of values of liberty, equality and fraternity in the Constitution of India, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar tried for an adequate inclusion of equal Educational Rights for depressed classes and women. Hence, some special provisions are includes such as, article 29(2) defines the protection of interest of minorities and ensures that no citizen shall be denied admission into any educational institution maintained by the state receiving aid out of state funds on grounds only of religion, race, caste, language or any of them.

Article 30(1) gives linguistic or religious minorities of the right to establish and administer educational institutions of their choice.

Again, Article 30(2) bars the state, while granting aid to educational institutions, from discriminating against any educational institution on the ground that it is under the management of a linguistic or a religious minority.

Article 46 deals with the economic and educational welfare of the poorer section of the society. It also tends to defend them from any social injustice and all forms of exploitation.

In pursuance of aforesaid constitutional provisions, different legislations have been made to protect, safeguard and promote the interests of women.

Statutory Laws for Women Empowerment

To ensure women's status, in 1948, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar introduced the Hindu Code Bill in parliament which sought to abolish different marriage prevalent among Hindus and to establish monogamy as the only legal system of marriage. Though he tried to defend the Bill by pointing out the constitutional principles of equality, liberty and fraternity and describing necessary for a social change in which women have equal rights with men, but the bill was strongly opposed by Hindu orthodoxy. As a result, in 1951 in the eve of first election the then Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru dropped the Bill and for this reason the then Law Minister Dr. Ambedkar resigned.

Even though most of the provisions proposed by Dr. Ambedkar were later incorporated and passed in through four Bills, namely the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, the Hindu Succession Act, 1956, the Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956 and the Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956.

In addition to these various laws have been adopted to eradicate all differences against women like the Legal Practitioners (Women) Act, 1923, the Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956, the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, the Maternity Benefit Act, 1961, the Medical Termination and Pregnancy Act, 1971, the Equal Remuneration Act, 1976, the Family Courts Act, 1984, the Indecent Representation of Women (Prohibition) Act, 1986, the Sati Prevention Act, 1987, the Protection of Human Rights Act, 1993, the Pre-Natal Diagnostic Technique (Regulation and Prevention of Misuse) Act, 1994, the National Population Policy 2000, the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005, the Prohibition of Child Marriage Act, 2006, the Sexual harassment of Women at Workplace (Prevention and Protection) Act, 2013, the Criminal Law Amendment Act 2013, the Maternity Benefit (Amendment) Act, 2017 etc.

Discussion- Relevancy of Dr. Ambedkar's Ideas of Women Empowerment in Present Context

Dr. Ambedkar's idea of women empowerment is always relevant for sustainable development of society. It is not only confined to India but to the entire globe. He regarded education as a means social reform and especially education to women is regarded as most powerful and motivational instrument for their upliftment and to remove inequalities. Hence, to bring more girl children into mainstream of education, Government has been adopting policies of supplying of free books, uniform, mid-day meals, scholarship, bicycles, medical check-up, and so on. Many universities also have been started centre for women studies to encourage higher education among women.

Additionally, to improve the technical ability and skill of women, Government has been introducing various training to sponsor self and wage employment.

Likewise, through 73rd and 74th Constitutional Amendment, political rights have been given to women. And recently there is 50% seat reserved for women in local government.

Conclusion

Women empowerment and gender equality are considered to be essential for the development and well-being of nation as a whole. No nation, society, community, and family can do well and be happy if 50% of its population i.e. women and girl, are not respected, free and happy. The concept of women empowerment and their struggle for equal status in society is incomplete without understanding their needs for decision making in every field whether relating to their education, career, marriage or procreation.

Hence, it is felt that launching numerous schemes for women does not mean empowerment of women in real sense without well planned, strong monitoring system. Active participation of women in all aspects could make real women empowerment. Still, in our society women, who are indulge in social reforms are not supported even by a class of women. For what unfortunately, today's women are kept within the circle of insecurity, male domination, lack of awareness about her rights and self-determination. Despite of having numerous legislations for women in various aspects, women empowerment and autonomy is yet not a reality for many Indian women.

Dr. Ambedkar assumed that women empowerment can be attained only by doing welfare of women. And it is true that though we have talked about all economic, political and health related issues for empowering women but most significantly we all have to give utmost importance to raise issue of social empowerment. So it is duty of us to bring forward the revolution started by Dr. Ambedkar for women empowerment by changing people's attitudes towards women. It would be worth mentioning the quote by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's "So long as you do not achieve social liberty, whatever freedom is provided by the law is of no avail to you."

Introduction

“Ambedkar details Manu’s low opinion of women, specifically highlighting his commentary on the inherent seductions by women of men leading to deviance and disloyalty as necessitating control. To the frequent elucidation of Manu’s injunction...Ambedkar posits the...picture of a misogynist, whose law of divorce neither curbed a man from giving up his wife nor pre-empted him from abandoning and or selling her...” (143, Ambedkar).

His own statement remains as answer:

“I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress which women have achieved” – Dr B. R. Ambedkar

To draw an outline of the paper, following two questions would be sought to answer – what are the strategies to the way of emancipation? what was his image of equality in India?

While answering these two questions, this effort will portray a picture of Ambedkar in this work, through Human Rights, equality and education, for the equality of men and women and uplifting women to the same platform that is accorded by the society to men.

A woman is the full circle within her is the power to create, nurture and transform – Diane Mariechild. (Diane M, Mother Wit)

Women held a high place in ancient India, but their status declined over time as they became merely objects of pleasure intended to serve a particular function. “Empowerment” means “moving from a place of imposed powerlessness to one of power,” according to the Government of India’s Country Report. Women’s empowerment is a process in which women gain more influence over material, human, and intellectual capital such as knowledge, information, and ideas, as well as financial resources such as money - and access to money - and control over decision-making in the home, culture, society, and country. However, the social status of women in this country was inferior to that of other citizens. She is unable to do anything at will. Humanity was ashamed of the treatment accorded to our mothers, sisters, and even great-grandmothers. Dr. Ambedkar believed that Hindu women are bound by superstitions in the name of sanskaras, which they bear until death. They are also responsible for instilling in the minds of their children certain false beliefs learned through erroneous traditions and Shastra preaching.

Dr. B R Ambedkar Towards The Empowerment of Indian Women

Despite the fact that Ambedkar was a genius and was recognised as a great thinker, intellectual, revolutionary, prolific writer, social activist, and critic, his ideas were never given adequate attention in the generality of Indian society simply because he was born as an untouchable. The broad variety of his subjects, the breadth of his vision, the depth of his study, the logic of his outlook, warrant close examination in light of contemporary social realities. Women, according to Ambedkar, were victims of the patriarchal, caste-based, and hierarchical social structure.

His Strategies and Suggestions for Emancipation from Oppression:

Buddhist ideals, which uphold dignity, self-respect, and education, provided them with emancipation. Women who approached Buddha, such as Vishakha, Amrapali of Visali, Gautami, Rani Mallika etc. are examples of Buddha's treatment of women as equals, according to Ambedkar (Paul, 1993: 383-84).

His exposure to western culture has coloured his views on feminist topics. Ambedkar's perspective on the women's question, emphasising their right to education, fair treatment with men, right to property, and participation in the political process, resembled the global feminist demands at a time when first wave feminism was coming to an end with the achievement of franchise rights for women in Britain in 1918 and America in 1920. His reading practise aided him in comprehending the evolution of feminist thought in various cultures and countries around the world.

He returned to India and dedicated the rest of his life to helping the poor, including women. He was a true believer in freedom, liberty, and fraternity as values. Women actively engaged in Ambedkar's campaign, from 1920 onward, and gained the courage to speak out on a number of platforms.

Dr. B R Ambedkar On Women's Rights

Throughout his lifetime, Dr. Ambedkar advocated for women's rights as well as the plight of Schedule Castes and Scheduled Tribes. In the Bombay Legislative Council, the Viceroy's Assembly as chairman of the Drafting Committee, and the Parliament as the first Law Minister of Independent India, he debated a variety of issues concerning Indian women and found solutions.

On February 18, 1927, Dr. Ambedkar was sworn in as a nominated member of the Bombay Legislative Council. On behalf of the British government, he urged Indians to serve in World War I. His points on the Maternity Benefit Bill and Birth Control were both very important in recognising women's dignity.

Dr. Ambedkar said at the All India Depressed Classes Women's Conference held in Nagpur on July 20, 1940 that there could be no development without women. "I am a true believer in women's organisations, and I know what they can do to change the state of society if they are convinced," he said. They should educate their children and instil in them a strong sense of ambition.

Since Ambedkar was so persuaded of the role of women, as Chairman of the Drafting Committee, he worked hard to ensure that women's rights were adequately represented in India's political language and constitution.

The Hindi Code Bill, 1948:

When the Hindu Code Bill was introduced in parliament in 1948 and discussed on the floor of the house, it was met with fierce resistance. Ambedkar did his best to defend the Bill by pointing out the Constitutional principles of equality, liberty, and fraternity, as well as the fact that in an Indian society characterised by the caste system, a legal framework is essential for a social change in which women have equality in a legal framework system. In fact, the Bill posed a challenge to patriarchy and this was one of the key reasons for opposition. As a result, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru dropped the Bill on the eve of the first elections in 1951, arguing that there was too much opposition. Dr. Ambedkar, the then-Minister of Law, resigned over this issue.

It goes without saying that he accepted women's equality and fought to protect it legally at a time when almost no one else did. He argued that the law is only allowing one form of option (inter-caste marriage), but it isn't preventing orthodox choices (endogamy). As a result, there should have been no real opposition. He made references to Hindu texts to make his arguments, such as on the subject of monogamy.

Education of Women:

It is the education which is the right weapon to cut the social slavery and it is the education which will enlighten the downtrodden masses to come up and gain social status, economic betterment and political freedom – Dr B R Ambedkar

In this segment, I'd like to quote him and say that education for women is the most important tool for improving their social status. Education also helps to minimise inequality within the family. Schools, colleges, and even universities were developed exclusively for women in the country in order to promote women's education at all levels and to reduce gender bias. Government has been providing a package of concessions in the form of free books, uniforms, boarding and lodging, clothing for hostilities, mid-day meals, scholarships, free by-cycles, and so on to bring more girl children, particularly from marginalised BPL families, into the mainstream of education. Many universities, such as Mother Teresa Women University, have been founded to promote women's higher education and social mobility through the advancement of women's studies. He urged women to free themselves from slavery rather than relying on god or a superman to do so. The strategies for creating an emancipated women's society in India are as follows:

Self Help Groups:

These are small homogenous groups consisting of 12-20 women from BPL families voluntarily organised to promote savings. They are self-managed groups of poor women which primarily came into existence to mobilise financial resources through their own savings and lend the same amongst themselves to meet the credit needs of their members.

Capacity building and skill formation: In order to develop women's entrepreneurial abilities and skills, the government has provided a variety of training programmes aimed at promoting self-employment and wage employment.

Skill Up-gradation Training Programme: The provision of skill training to women in SHGs has been recognised in order to allow them to begin their own income-generating activities. The length and cost of the training are determined by the nature of the trade chosen by the members.

Women & Child Development: The district administration has made a significant shift in its approach to the development of women, especially the poor and illiterate.

Working Women's Hostel: Built in 1996 to provide safe housing for working women, the Working Women's Hostel is located in Angul. National Old Age Pension (NOAP) / State Old Age Pension (SOAP) (NOAP).

Employment and Work Participation Rate: The job participation rate is a strong measure of women's economic empowerment in society. Women's status is inextricably related to their economic condition, which is contingent on their ability to engage in economic activities. Women's involvement in all sectors of the economy in the country has increased significantly.

Women and Political Participation: Women's political participation entails not only exercising their right to vote, but also power sharing, shared decision-making, and shared policy-making at all levels. Women's active involvement in politics is vital to their equality and to the creation of a gender-equal society.

National Commission for Women: An Act of Parliament established the National Commission for Women in January 1992, with the specific mandate to research and track all matters relating to the constitutional and legal protections given for women and protect women's rights and entitlements. The Commission offers financial assistance to non-governmental organisations (NGOs) and educational institutions to conduct legal awareness programmes to inform women about their rights.

Conclusion

Society is in a continual state of transition. It will take several decades to correct these imbalances. Attitudes and expectations will change as a result of both men and women's education. It is difficult to eliminate deeply ingrained cultural values or change long-standing traditions that perpetuate discrimination. Law can only be used as a tool for improvement if it is used efficiently. Low conviction rates stem from a lack of efficient law enforcement, which creates the impression that the accused will get away with it. Deterrent penalties must be contained in the law, and they must be strictly applied. In urban areas, a start has undeniably been made. In addition to their professions, working women are also largely responsible for taking care of the home and raising children. They are more vulnerable to heart and other stress-related diseases as a result of increased stress. As a consequence, it is important to strengthen the Working Women's Support Structure.

Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru sent a condolence letter to Ambedkar's family after his death in Parliament saying: "Dr. Baba Saheb Ambedkar was a symbol of revolt against all oppressive features of the Hindu society." His dream of a world founded on gender equality has yet to come true, so his ideas are crucial for social reconstruction that favours women's empowerment.

Despite increased representation in the legislature, executive branch, and judiciary, the fight against gender inequality must continue. India is one of the world's few countries to have a female Prime Minister. Today, women have broken down several barriers and are in charge of different departments in major multinational corporations.

In 1993, the Indian Constitution was amended with the 73rd and 74th Amendments, which marked a watershed moment in ensuring fair access and greater participation in the national power system. Women's Quota Bill, which proposes a 33 percent reservation for women in the Lok Sabha and state legislatures, is currently being debated. Women's position cannot be enhanced without providing them with opportunities for self-sufficiency in terms of income and employment.

Women's employment in rural areas is mostly concentrated in labor-intensive, unskilled occupations that require basic or conventional skills. For the various steps to become a living reality for women in rural areas, a much greater and concerted effort would be needed. This can only be accomplished by a concerted effort on the part of the government, non-governmental organisations, formal and informal education providers, the media, and others. The ultimate aim that we must strive for is to empower women so that they can become equal partners with their male counterparts, with mutual respect and shared responsibility for the home and finances.

In India, we often forget Babasaheb Ambedkar while discussing feminist icons. Any mention of Dr. Ambedkar or his work is often censored. He is dubbed a "Dalit king." Though his work in opposing and battling the caste system is unrivalled, such a labelling method fails to acknowledge the other aspects of his work. Aspects of his work that have benefited every citizen of India. But whether or not labelling him a feminist in retrospect is appropriate or fair is a different matter.

Ambedkar has made a huge contribution to the protection of marginalised groups' interests. Upper caste women, as well as lower caste men and women, are affected.

Dr. B.R Ambedkar Towards the Empowerment of Indian Women

Dr Sangeeta Dongre

Assistant Professor Dept. of Zoology, Government Vidarbha Institute of Science & Humanities Amravati. Maharashtra . India.

Abstract:

I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress which women have achieved – Dr. B.R. Ambedkar. A woman is the full circle within her is the power to create, nurture and transform – Diane Mariechild. The principle of gender equality is enshrined in the Indian Constitution in its Preamble, Fundamental Rights, Fundamental Duties and Directive Principles. The Constitution not only grants equality to women, but also empowers the State to adopt measures of positive discrimination in favour of women was just the visionary eyesight that was framed by the Dr. B. R Ambedkar.(National policy woman empowerment 2001). Empowerment of women is basically the manner of enhancement of social, economic, cultural and political standing of women, the conventionally disadvantaged, neglected ones, in the society. Much research has shown that women are more likely than men to expend a large proportion of their household income in the welfare of their children and education. When women are properly empowered to earn, collect assets and enhance their financial security, they develop capability for industrial support and spur economic growth by creating new jobs as well as spread out the pool of talents and human resources accessible in a country. It is increasingly recognized that women who are involved in business are the new drivers for sustainable growth, and are the emerging stars of economies in developing countries. This paper will emphasize the vision and the empowering tools given by Dr . B.R. Ambedkar, for Gender equality provide an ongoing foundation for prolonging women's prosperity and empowerment in family systems and social positions and political institutions.

Key words: Ambedkar, empowerment, human rights and Hindu code bill.

Introduction:

The principal features of the Hindu Code Bill illustrate Dr Ambedkar's passion towards the very values of liberty, equality, dignity and fraternity. It was a reform, challenging the basic patriarchal foundation to ensure equality of women, true to its essence of empowerment. Dr Ambedkar's major concern for the status of women was reflected in this Bill. He had even remarked that his work on the latter, would be as important, as his work on the constitution itself, and mark a chapter of gender equality and justice, along with an exodus from ancient orthodox laws. Through the Bill, women were to be granted absolute, right regarding all property. The fact that Dr Ambedkar envisioned gender equality in all certainty can be understood by his own words, when he said that, "son also would get a share as equal to girl's share in mother's property, even in Stridhana (defined in Hindu Law as wealth received by women as gifts from relations) too".

The Bill, however, could not be introduced in its original structure, as devised by Dr. Ambedkar and was enacted in a diluted version in four separate acts, namely the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, Hindu Succession Act, 1956, Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956, and Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956. Dr. Ambedkar's ideas, however, did influence the enactment of a number of subsequent pro-women Acts, such as The Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1929, Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956, Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, The Maternity Benefit Act, 1961, The Equal Remuneration Act, 1976, the Family Courts Act, 1984, the Sati Prevention Act, 1987, The National Commission for Women Act, 1990, Protection of Human Rights Act, 1993, Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005, among others. It may be noted that Dr. Ambedkar was not against Religions, he was against un-religious acts in the name of religion, by the orthodox clergies and he always opposed the unreligious act of differentiating between humans (woman & Child included) on the basis of castes, sects, sex, color or place/ status at birth. Dr. Ambedkar said “If God does not recognize man or woman by caste or place of birth, the man made Orthodox and superstitious religions cannot/ should not do so “.

Dr. Ambedkar’s heart can be read for women welfare from his following saying “Unity is meaningless without the accompaniment of women. Education is fruitless without educated women, and agitation is incomplete without the strength of women”. Dr. Ambedkar started his movement in 1920. He started fierce propaganda against the Hindu social order and launched a journal Mook Nayak in 1920 and Bahiskrit Bharat in 1927 for this purpose. Through its issues he put due stress on the gender equality and the need for education and exposed the problems of the depressed as well as women. The encouragement of Dr. Ambedkar to empower women to speak boldly was seen when Radhabai Vadale addressed a press conference in 1931. He strongly advocated for family planning measures for women in Bombay Legislative Assembly.

The Education for Women: Dr B R Ambedkar’s view

“The object of primary education is to see that every child that enters the portals of a primary school does leave it only at a stage when it becomes literate and continues to be literate throughout the rest of his life.” – Dr. B.R. Ambedkar

Empowerment envelops developing and building capacities of individuals, communities to make them part of the main stream society. Education is the only mean by which societies grow out of oppression to democratic participation and involvement. It is a powerful tool for empowerment of individual.

Ambedkar identified two purposes of knowledge: first, to acquire it for betterment of others and secondly to use it for one's own betterment. Ambedkar has also argued against professional learning (The British Educational System) which aims at creating a clerical nature of workers. Ambedkar emphasized on secular education for social emancipation and freedom.

Education has the sole purpose to enlighten the depressed classes so as to enhance their cause of social, economic and political upliftment. The social and ethical philosophy of Ambedkar aimed at making the depressed people aware to change their thoughts and old behaviour-patterns and to move forward in the direction of unity and freedom through education. The basic theme of his philosophy of education was to inculcate the values of liberty, equality, fraternity, justice and moral character among the boys and girls of all religion, region, class and caste.

Ambedkar listed these three components as objectives for policy makers:

1. Recasting the aims and purposes of education,
2. Education as an instrument of substantive equality,
3. Women's education.

Education is foremost cornerstone for empowering women because it helps them to responds properly to the hurdles, to encounter their conventional role and alter their life. The value of education in reference to women empowerment cannot be neglected. Education also brings a reduction in inequalities and women can understand their rights, become self-confident, brave and resourceful to make themselves better stronger to withstand social, economic challenges. Also, education helps of women to meliorate their status within the family and develops the thoughts of participation, (Ruqia 2018).

"We shall see better days soon and our progress will be greatly accelerated if male education is persuaded side by side with female education." – Dr. B.R Ambedka. This can be achieved only if the constitutional laws should be followed by each every Indian .

Constitutional Provisions : The constitution gives enough scope for the protection of civil rights of women from any sort of Discrimination under article which are following below;

Article14- provides equal rights and opportunities to woman in political, economic and social spheres.

Article15- prohibits discrimination among woman with respect to man on the ground of sex, color, place, status and birth, and also banned the sale and purchase of women prevailing in India.

Article 15(3), enables positive discrimination in favor of women.

Article39-Equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work with the health and strength of woman and tender age children.

Article 39(A)-the state to ensure that the operation of legal system promotes justice on the basis of equal opportunity and to provide for free legal aid for securing justice. Inserted in 1976.

Article 42- the state shall make provision for securing just and human conditions of work and for maternity relief. This article proposed strongly in Bombay Legislative Council, 1928 said, "it is in the interest of the Nation that the mother ought to get a certain amount of rest during the prenatal period and also subsequently".

Article 46 -The state to promote with special care, the educational and economic interests of the weaker section of the people and to protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation.

Article 47- It is the duty of the state to raise the level of nutrition and the standard of living of its people and the improvement of public health, and also state have a duty to endeavor to bring about prohibition of the consumption except for medicinal purposes of intoxicating drinks and of drugs which are injurious to health.

Article 51(A)(e)- this article comes under part IV-A of the Directive Principle of State Policy which talks about the fundamental duties to renounce practices, derogatory to the dignity of women and promote harmony and the spirit of common brotherhood among the people. And in order to promote woman in political field, Article 243D(3),243T(3)and 243R(4)provides direction for allocation of seats in the Panchayati Raj System. Thus if laws are followed the dream will come true of woman empowerment .

Conclusion

Today's presentation of women empowerment is quite visible and different to all but the roots of it lie in the philosophy of Dr. Ambedkar, the symbol of Knowledge. No one can deny the contribution made by him in respect of rights of suppressed, oppressed, women, education and even political involvement of women. It is clear that Ambedkar and his line of thinking was not for Dalit's or Dalit women but was for all those who are greatest in number. His educational vision is also applicable today in 21st century.

Introduction

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, an iconic & mountainous figure in the world scenario whose tremendous works in almost fields of human life pave a way to study his revolutionary, epoch-making, stormy life. His contribution to all walks of life i.e. social, political, educational, religious, economic seem to remain the centre of the study for not only Indian students, researchers, socialist, economist, politics and too many but also to the world talent as well.

The main thrust of his entire philosophy was humanity. He fought against the age-long, discriminated, inhuman social system in India and became the pole-star for the oppressed and marginalized humans of India. He was not only the saviour of the untouchables but also laid the foundation of the democratic republic creating social equality and cultural integration in the age-old caste-ridden, inherently unjust and discriminating society. His most eventful life and outstanding contributions to various fields made him a great reformer, a valiant champion of human rights and an emancipator of the downtrodden, the marginalized mass of India who dedicated all his life to awaken the social conscience of modern India. Influenced by the modern and liberal minded western philosophers like Prof. Edwin Seligman, John Dewey, J.S.Mill, Harold Laski, Bertrand Russell, Edmund Burke, Antonio Gramsci, Abraham Lincoln etc, he wanted to build modern India based on the principles of Liberty, Equality and Fraternity.

Though his writings, speeches and his entire works influenced every walks of life like literature, films, various movements, Research etc, the major influences rest on National Integration and National life of India. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had declared 'Nation first, the Nation last'. So, he always worked for the national integration. He expressed his thoughts through his writings and speeches. He tried his talent right from making India as the Union of states to the architecting the Constitution of India. He also expressed his reformative thoughts on socio-political-economic condition of the country to make it united as a Nation.

Literature on Reformative Thoughts

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar's literature expressed the thoughts on national integration. For this integration, he favoured Nationalism, Secularism, Socialism, Democracy and Constitution as the chief components.

Nationalism – Nationalism refers to sovereignty in broader sense and love and pride to own country in general sense. After Independence, India became sovereign country but love and pride of all the people towards the country should be increased. The people of various creeds, culture, language, and region should be tied to one thread and that thread is the feeling of Nationalism. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar not only expressed his thoughts for the union of all the states to make the country united but through the constitution he nurtured the seeds of Nationalism. According to him, liberty, equality, justice can create the fraternity among all Indians which make the country united. So, he made these principals as chief weapon to achieve nationalism. Through these principles, the country assures all the people for their welfare and makes them feel that this is their country. Before the constitution, nationalism was for the socially, politically privileged people. But for the depressed and oppressed people nationalism was a dream which fulfilled only through the Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's vision expressed in the Constitution. He rejected the notion of Religious Nationalism and advocated social secular Nationalism.

Secularism - According to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, for national integration, 'one nation-one religion' was an obstacle. In the country of various religions, the principle of religious nationalism was not possible. The country should accommodate its entire people irrespective to their creed, religion etc. Only then the love to the country will increase. So, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar advocated secularism which is opposed to the religious nationalism. Though the word came later in 1976, but Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was of the view of the secularism which stands for the national integration.

Socialism – Socialism is another word expected by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar for India. The thought behind introducing the word in the Constitution was the belief that states all people are equal and should share equally in the country's property. This is again the revolutionary attempt to eradicate the ills from the previous social system of discrimination and exploitation. The word rests the responsibility on the government by law to destruct the unjust social system to create a unified society based on equality. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar directed towards the national integration through socialism.

Democracy – Indian Constitution made India a democratic nation like England, America. But before the constitution, there was a religious constitution named Manu Smriti. It was based on four fold Varna-system. Indian society was not united, instead it was divided. The low caste people were denied the rights to education, to live a dignified life. The discrimination, hatred, injustice, negation, exploitation were the features of that constitution. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar through the constitution based the society on the Buddhist principles of Liberty, Equality, Fraternity and Justice. This led the people to unite into a nation that is Bharat. It created a feeling of love and dearness towards nation which led to the national integration. The importance of democracy rests on its features as opposed to that of the previous religious constitution. It liberated the depressed and marginalized people from the injustice of the religious dictatorship. This was the revolution suggested by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar for the sake of the nation.

According to Manu-Smriti, the people of four Varnas are not equal as their origin suggested. According to the Constitution, all are equal. In Manu-Smriti, there is inequality in respect to the rights of education, job, but constitution makes no such differences. The Constitution gives freedom of expression, live and travel anywhere in India and abroad-which were denied by Manu-Smriti. Our constitution bans on any kind of slavery. According to Manu-Smriti, there was no right to collect property to low caste people or Shudras. But the Constitution gives such right to them and to the women. Before the law, everyone is equal now which was not the condition in Manu-Smriti. So, being the principal architect of Indian constitution, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar influenced a lot for the establishment of democracy in real sense.

Literature on Socio-political-economic condition

Through the literature in the form of his writings and speeches, Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar presented the socio-political-economic condition of the country.

Social - The social condition of the country was based on Varna system. The society was divided into various castes, creeds and religions. Social discrimination was prevalent in this system. Religious dominance had denied the basic human rights of the low caste and depressed people. They were made busy in the bhakti of Gods, traditions and superstitions. They had various bindings imposed through holy books and scriptures.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar tried to free these people from such condition. He wanted to bring these people in the current of the country. He pointed out various religious riddles; he did historical researches about the caste system and about the condition of untouchables. He presented the solution to annihilate the caste system. He fought for the rights of Untouchables, criminal tribes and other marginalized people to make them feel that this is their country too. This feeling and awareness created by his thoughts, led to the unity of the country.

Political – Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar’s political views are purely based on nationalism. He always advocated the principles of law and order. With the help of the Western principles of liberty, democracy, individual rights and dignity, he wanted to create new India. He expressed his thoughts for the upliftment of the marginalized and politically depressed classes. He demanded the constitutional safeguards to the minorities to solve the communal deadlocks. To him, unity of country was important. But on the issue of Pakistan, he criticized both Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Jinh for the mess they made of Indian politics. He fought for the political rights of the workers, labourers and untouchables. He also suggested the solution on the issue of Maharashtra as Maharashtra as a linguistic province. He presented various bills for the political reforms and for the political rights of the downtrodden and marginalized people that bind all the citizens into one united country.

Economic – As an erudite economist and a nationalist, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar reacted against the finance system of East India Company. He also discusses the problem of Rupee. He suggests the industrialization of India as the remedy on the agricultural problems. His thoughts on economy of the country have been fruitful for the country. He expressed his thoughts on transfer of property, Foreign exchange, general budget etc. for the sake of the country. There were various issues of the financial systems, currency problems, issues related to the property, agricultural problems and economic condition of the country as a whole. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's thoughts on these and various other economic issues gave to the systematic running of the financial systems of the country. The economic status of the people especially the downtrodden and marginalized should be enriched. The country should care for their welfare so as to create the feeling of love to the country. This led to the unity of the country.

Conclusion

Religious dominance was prevalent in the ancient history of mankind. Later on revolutions started against this dominance. American Revolution in 1775 established its nation. The important French Revolution destroyed the rule of the religion and established the democratic principles of Liberty, Equality and Fraternity. Not only this, it nationalized the property of the church. The revolution followed the industrial revolution which resulted in liberalization and secularism. The Russian revolution brought the labour and exploited class on the front. It created socialism without exploitation, class and caste.

But Indian freedom could not destroy the religious dominance. It could not touch the property of the religious institutions. Nor it could end the social discrimination, class and caste. With this discrimination, exploitation and oppression, how could India develop nationalism? So, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had to fight for that. He worked tirelessly, wrote and delivered speeches for the welfare of the country. Through the Constitution he tried to create revolution. He tried to establish the principles of liberty, equality and fraternity and justice to create the feeling of nationalism among the people of India. Thus, his literature remains rocky to establish the national integration.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's Vision on Social Justice in India

Dr. Shastry Venkatesh,

Lecturer in Public Administration,

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar Degree College, Baghlingampally, Hyderabad.

Abstract

The process of democratization from the bottom has been a threat to the existence of a caste system dominated and influenced by traditionally powerful groups. We see such significant historical developments in the social system in India. The caste system has scientific analysis in this historical sense. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar and many people are inventing the relevance and importance of ideology. Hinduism has developed ways to eradicate atrocities, human values and dignity. We often use the most Nissan social justice, but rarely covered by conflict claims of different policies of different sections of society. A simple, understandable, understandable and understandable multi-contextual term in the national and international arena. The modern concept of social justice is the establishment of a new social system which provides rights and benefits to the various sections of society, especially the depressed classes and the depressed classes. Overall, the real democratic process in India is only initiated by social justice. There is a need to free the Dalits and restore self-respect and self-reliance in them. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's vision provided a comprehensive programme for achieving social justice in India. Therefore, the establishment of real social justice is Dr. B. Ambedkar's ideological, and vision is the duty of all progressive and democratic forces.

Key words: Social Justice, Social Law Principles, Constitution and Social Justice, Social justice was defined, BR Ambedkar on Social Justice, Legal and Rights Guardian, B. R. Ambedkar Term Justice, Social Justice Creator, Constitutional Element-Equality and Social Justice, B.R. Ambedkar The concept of justice.

1. Introduction

B.R. Ambedkar is considered a pioneer of Indian politics dedicated to social justice and justice. He thought not about his society, but the entire country. He gave India a new vision, philosophy and a new path of progress. His political idea was to try to provide empirical solutions to the complex problems of Indian society.

His life, philosophy and mission are dedicated to the protection of human rights. He was a true socialist who was trying to establish a social democracy that would meet the economic, social, educational and cultural needs of the people. He is one of those who helped accelerate the process of social change in the country. Ambedkar is a terrorist rebellion. He used the sword of social justice to fight against the untouchables and the oppressed sections of Indian society.

He believed that political liberation had no meaning without the social liberation of the oppressed classes. He said that no economic and political reform would succeed until social injustice was eradicated. He believed that their liberation could be achieved through political means. He said that nationalism is not possible if nationalist ideas are awakened and strengthened. He said that social reform was necessary to achieve this great goal. He declared that without social reform, nationalism would not come into existence.

He strongly believed that political justice was not possible without social justice and that his goal was to free Indian politics from social exploitation. This article is an attempt to analyze the philosophical ideas of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar on social justice.

The concept of social justice is dynamic and adapts to the needs of the community. It gradually comes into new form and expands its boundaries and predicts new dimensions. Social justice is very important in the context of Indian society, which is divided into castes and classes and they create water-tight compartments based on inequalities, which poses a serious threat to Indian democracy.

In modern times the term social justice is associated with the concept of social good. Equal opportunities for personal development, regardless of race, color, caste or gender. 2. Social justice in practical manner means bringing all sections of society under one roof.

2. Social Justice

Social justice arising from the concept of morality is a matter of justice. The problems of social justice affect the overall development of various development policy as well as social welfare program. What does it mean to say that social justice is really a social order? It is to control human behavior, to be having a satisfactory treatment of all human beings, and enjoy it. Social justice is social happiness. This is a happy thing to be guaranteed through a just social order. The social system is only trying to eradicate social and economic inequality at birth. Social justice means equality, social rights and personalities, and everyone should have equal social opportunities. According to Ambedkar, his justice is based on moral values and self-compiled. Justice is through social, political and economic justice governed by the Indian Constitution.

3. Social Law Principles

The above observations reveal different facets of justice. In its multi-faceted, social aspect is very important for all of us, because each form is related to the demand for social justice. The demand for social justice is not as modern as some people think. Since the knowledge of human history, it has been in the minds of the people, justice has come out of the nature of society, its mechanism and various regulations. Both the ancient and medieval societies had predicted justice in their own ways. So let us now look at the old concepts of social justice in India and elsewhere.

4. Constitution and Social Justice

Since the inception of the Indian Constitution on 26 January 1950, the people of India have inspired the people of all castes, religions and castes to protect the citizens.

- “Justice, social, economic and political;
- freedom of expression, faith, faith and worship; Equality of status and opportunities; To ensure the personal dignity and ethnic unity of fraternity among them;

5. Social justice was defined

The term social justice is actually a foreign form of India influenced by the Americans while studying at Columbia University in the United States. In his second election speech, The Third President of the United States, Thomas Jefferson, announced that he was running for president with a promise in his own words.

6. Dr. B.R.AmbedkarView on Social Justice

As i said earlier, “justice” is another name for Ambedkar, “another name for liberty, equality and fraternity. The cornerstone of Ambedkar’s concept of social justice is the step to human personality. He took a clear form of values. This social judiciary represents the universe of every other citizen in our society. While social justice gives a significant place in mutual respect and responsibility in social life, it is necessary to hate and respect the caste barriers between man and man. What is democracy? This is a way of life that recognizes freedom, equality and fraternity as the principles of life. These principles of freedom, equality and fraternity should not be considered as the special elements of the Trinity.

7. Legal and Rights as Guardian

The name Br Ambedkar means a person who fights for social justice and human rights. Br Ambedkar was a victim of the inhuman treatment of religious, religious and religious fundamentalists, he said. He himself recognized the untouchable couples and recognized that only social justice and human rights could shape respectable human beings in this country.

8. B. R. Ambedkar Term Justice:

The word “justice” is very comprehensive and “not easy to define.” Dias said, “The concept of justice is as broad as one’s mind. This is not a matter of capturing in a formula. Other scholars like Krishnamurti said, “Justice is not clearly defined despite the best efforts.” But today justice defines justice as a protector of legal rights. Social justice came to light during the French Revolution of 1789. It is generally described in terms of freedom, equality and fraternity. “If the problem of social justice comes up, the need for the oppressors cannot be ignored. The justification behind the needs of the oppressed is that they are raised.

9. Social Justice Creator

Dr. B. Ambedkar’s work cannot be forgotten In Indian democracy. As chairman of the Constitution committee, he gave our country a form of a complete sovereign democratic republic. Our Constitution is secular and socialism. The Constitution has included several sections to eliminate betrayal with the adult suffrage clause. In the constitution of free India, all citizens were assured of social, political and economic equality. Since the independence of the country, our leaders have started thinking about it.

BabasahebAmbedkar’s name is the creator of social justice, which is written in golden letters in The History of India. This fact is undoubtedly. He was not only a constitutional maker of his era, but also the creator of social justice and the upliftment of the downtrodden. He was one of the few who said that he was a boon to the Indian freedom movement. Mahatma Gandhi gave a lesson to morality. Baba Saheb gave a form of social perspective without exploitation. In the true sense of the word, he gave a democratic and anti-caste objective. He spent his entire life for the welfare of the poor and exploited untouchables and for the upliftment of the difficult classes.

10. Constitutional Element-Equality and Social Justice

In the Constitution of India, all citizens of India have been given political and social equality. At the same time, freedom of expression of thoughts, faith and religion. The constitution producer gave more importance to social justice than economic and political justice. Equal opportunities are given greater importance with personal freedom. The Kaka Caller Commission was constituted on January 29, 1953 under section 340 of the Constitution. viii. Part of parliamentary affairs in our Constitution is taken from the British Constitution. The principles of equality and freedom are governed by religion. No one has created any distinction between caste, gender, particular region and language.

11. B.R. Ambedkar The concept of justice

B.R. Ambedkar's name became synonymous with justice. His name modern is the most respected and prominent place among the most reputed builders in India. His social background, bitterness, heartbeat, his relentless struggle against his caste, the irrevocable fortress, the retaliation of Hindu society, inequality, injustice, exploitation, his attitude toward justice, and his attitude to justice were severely affected.

Conclusion

The Dalit movement has become a transformative social revolution to grant basic human rights to the marginalized sections of society, such as freedom, equality and justice. These demands took into the form of various protests and movements. Dr. B. Ambedkar addressed dalits and gave them various basic and other legal rights in the Indian Constitution. However, constitutional provisions are not enough to eliminate old discrimination. These demands became violent in the Dalit Panthers movement in post-independence India. This movement was successful by supporting the Dalits and providing the necessary self-respect, but failed to provide real change. Dalits have adopted an alternative approach to convert from caste discrimination to Buddhism in Hinduism. Now the movement is taking the ground under the guise of political interests and ignoring the real problem. Various laws were made to eradicate atrocities, untouchability and rape on Dalits. The project also saw caste-based discrimination outside India and a continuous demand for rights in various countries. To come to this conclusion, the elimination of such social stigma requires broad social change and respect for fundamental human rights.

Abstract:

Dr. Baba Saheb Ambedkar a multi-dimensional personality who left a profound deep impression on the socio-political and economic life of India. Ambedkar provided pregnant ideas guidance on the socio-political-economic issues in both colonial and independent India, yet economists of this nation seem to have ignored his contributions he made to India. Against this background this article examines his significant role in federal finance, an important branch of economics and makes an effort to evaluate the process of its development and his immense contribution to it. He had a major role in an in pledging country like India. He had been one of the vigorous contributors to the Constitution of India. His contributions towards the development of the federal finance system in an independent India is remarkable. His insistence in a measure was on the federal finance system and with an object economic welfare of the people from the local to centre levels, which could accelerate their economic progress level without compromising their interests.

Key words: Economist, Federal, Rupee and Public Finance

Introduction:

The words of the most educated Indians of his time, and probably give us a fair idea about Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar's insight and understanding regarding the ground realities of India. Despite having his education in the most elite universities of the world. Babasaheb Ambedkar, was a name given to him fondly and mostly remembered for his incomparable contributions to the constitution of India as the Chairman of the Drafting Committee. He is widely adored as the chief architect of the progressive provisions of the Constitution for which he made the most articulate an impassioned argument in the Constituent Assembly. Dr. B R Ambedkar was one of the greatest and gorgeous intellectuals with his well-known contributions as a legal luminary, scholar, journalist, educationist, and social reformer. He appeared as an epitome symbol and icon of the downtrodden and backward masses and championed the cause of human rights. But, it is quite obvious is the fact that there is widespread oblivious with respect to Dr. Ambedkar's original work as a distinguished economist.

Dr. Ambedkar was one of the early great son of the soil to have formal higher education in economics. He obtained his Ph.D degree in economics from Columbia University in 1917 which was, them, considered to be D.Sc in economics by the London School of Economics in 1921. He used his research skills as an economist to group the social maladies prevailing in India. And his profound understanding of India's economic problems was manifested in his excising speeches and statements. His incisive analysis and accompanied by pragmatic policy with a focus on the welfare of the people at large was visit astounding. This article goes deep into Dr. Ambedkar's contributions to the monetary economics, public finance, agricultural economics, economic-dimensions of caste system and untouchability, and his strategies approach to the progress economic development of India. I would also attempt to bring out the contemporary relevance of Ambedkar's ideas with respect to the various dimensions of the Indian economy.

Contributions in Monetary Economics

Babasaheb's insight into the monetary system is evident from his reputed book, The Problem of Rupee: Its Origin and Solution, written for his D.Sc degree. He also in addition presented his arguments before Hilton Young Commission and those logical arguments were taken into account while structuring the Reserve Bank of India (RBI). The debates on gold standard and gold-exchange standard were revised during the time and Ambedkar when entry it and opposed one of the most prominent economists of those times, John Maynard Keynes. Ambedkar argued in favour of a modified gold standard and on the other hand Keynes was a votary of gold-exchange standard. Ambedkar's basic contention was that the gold standard offered some sort of stability in the currency for a developing country like India and was against the idea of money supply being linked to gold. He stressed the significance of price stability versus exchange rate stability for the larger benefit of the poor people. Another point of contention was that the gold-exchange standard left the discretion of the issuer of the currency totally unregulated and gave unbridled powers to the government. Thus, he suggested that a law be framed to fix the ratio between the gold coin and rupee, and that the former should not be mutually convertible (Jadhav 1991). The context in which, these suggestions were offered by Babasaheb have been completely modified, it is intriguing that till date we face the common tussle between the Government and the Reserve Bank of India with regret to the latter's independence. RBI's adoption of the monetary policy framework in 2013 shows its priority for price stability, and therefore, Dr. Ambedkar remained himself a votary.

Contributions in Public Finance

Another fundamental work of Ambedkar was his Ph.D dissertation, The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India, which talks about the financial relationship between Centre and province. Ambedkar unequivocally stated that each administrative unit must be given powers to raise its own finances and plan its expenditures without being dependent upon another. The provinces till 1871 were the main administrative units they were allowed to plan out for their expenditures while depending upon the Centre for the revenues. This situation created an imbalance in the finances of the State leading to rising fiscal burden. Subsequent systems were developed like 'budget by assignment', 'budget by assigned revenues', and 'budget by shared revenues' to sort-out the Centre and provincial fiscal relationship (Jadhav 1991). Ambedkar's work was pioneering one in the field of public finance and his objective analysis provided and understanding an introspective about the Centre-State financial business. His study also kids a formulation for the existing Centre and States relationship and also as a loadstar guiding for the Finance Commissions since many years in independent India. Ambedkar was an instrument in moving a bill in 1937 to eliminate the Khoti system in practice during those days. The British under Khoti system used to appoint middlemen to collect taxes from the people and deposit with the government. A middleman, as Khots, was a potential instrument of exploitation and abused the ordinary people. Ambedkar had given guidelines for spending of public fund and as such are known as 'Ambedkar's Canons of Public Expenditure'. Thus they were the principles of 'faithfulness, wisdom, and economy' with respect to the spending of public fund by the government (Kumar 2019).

Contributions to Agricultural Economics

To solve the problem of minimal productivity of land in Indian agriculture, a committee was appointed in 1917. It suggested for land holdings to be consolidated. Ambedkar in his paper, Small Holdings in India and their Remedies (1918) argued for the consolidated land that should under the state and distributed equally among the original cultivators without discrimination (Ambedkar 1918). He contention was the land was only the factor of production and for effective use of land, it is important to have a look into other factors such as capital and labour (Kumar 2019). The scarcity of capital and exceeding labour also essentially problematic and so Ambedkar suggested collective farming and industrialisation as possible panacea. The first would improve productivity and the second would solve the problem of disguised unemployment and increase the stock of capital (Bhattacharya 2016). The genius of Ambedkar made possible for him to talk about the problem of surplus labour three decades before Nobel Laureate Arthur Lewis who developed his dual economy model only in the 1950's. Obviously, the issue connected to land reforms in India is still a contentious one and gets manifested in the manifestos of all the political parties in elections since independence. The fact of the matter is that it is still an unreachable issue by all successive parties/governments.

Economic Dimensions of Caste System and Untouchability

...in his magnum opus, Annihilation of Caste, [Ambedkar] derided such theories through logic and pointed out that such[caste] systems were based more on the 'division of labourers'. He pointed out that the caste system is responsible for assigning the occupations of different people and this hinders the mobility of capital and labour which in turn leads to an impending economic development... In Ambedkar's time, the justification for the prevalent-system was 'varna' system relaying on the theory of division of labour and occupational theory. Ambedkar in his Annihilation of Caste scoffed at such theories through razor-sharp logic and pointed out that such systems were based more on the 'division of labourers'. He argued that the caste system is responsible for entrusting the occupations to different people which actually hampers the mobility of capital and labour leading to an gaging economic development of the nation. When economic growth is an outcome of change, the caste system continue to support the traditional socio-economic system which negatively affecting the productivity of the economy. Ambedkar was a great critic of untouchability and considered it as worse than slavery. In What Congress and Gandhi Have Done to the Untouchables (1945) he states, 'Untouchability is not only a system of unmitigated economic exploitation but is also a system of uncontrolled economic exploitation' (Ambedkar 1945). Against stereotyped caste system based economic system and that with time and 'modernity', the factor of caste would ruin itself, but now we are seeing the strengthening and perpetuating the caste identity instead. The politics of vote bank being considered as one of the potential reasons for caste mobilization. Further the important fact is the discriminatory policies of successive governments subjecting the most underprivileged merely to the exploitation and has been consistency pressed to the bottom of the economic and social ladder.

Strategic Economic Development of India

Dr. Ambedkar expressed concurrence with Marx's views on exploitation of the masses and believed that the India's economic development should happen through elimination of poverty and glaring inequalities, and an end exploitation by the dominant casts (Stephen 2017). Dr. Ambedkar however did not subscribe to communism as an economic system. In his essay, Buddha and Karl Marx, he says that economic cogitation cannot alone be the reason for all human activity as formulated by Marx. Therefore, the exploitation can also be religious or social, especially in India. Ambedkar was a passionate supporter of democracy and human rights and he did not accept the altered form of dictatorship and anarchy through communism. He pleaded for reformation in tube with the tenets of the constitution and so he did not accept but rejected Marx's idea of a stateless society. Ambedkar considered state's role as the most viable means in goading the economic development of the country as opposed to the totalitarian approach of Marx (Jadhav 1991).

Conclusion:

It is crystal evident that Dr B R Ambedkar was an economist par excellence. He had practices solutions to knotted problems and always kept the well-being of people at his heart and as carnal principle of his policies. He worked and pleaded arduously for labour welfare in the Constituent Assembly and also pushed through this the idea of positive rights and negative rights under the tenet of Fundamental Rights in the Constitution of India. However, certain sections of do not people the radical and reformistic beliefs of Dr. Ambedkar and therefore, many of his ideas were incorporated in the non-justifiable Directive Principles of State Policy. His ideological position relied heavily on empirical evidence, historical foundations, and real world practices. He did not advocate convoluted ideological principles (Bhattacharya 2016). Dr. Babasaheb desired collective farming and upheld the idea of rapid industrialisation. Being a strong votary of urbanisation, Dr. Ambedkar contained against the dangers of un-bridled capitalism and where to argue for industries and agriculture to be under state ownership soars to protect masses from exploitation (Singariya 2013). However, it is unfortunate that his idea of economic development laced rapid progress of citizens and India has been let down. His idea of India, mainly his economic policies did not get proper recognition. The fact of the matters is that he is revered as the greatest economist and his contributions in various fields of India showed not be relegated in a flamboyant lord. His greatness and he as an intellect can be deciphered in his apt logically as for as every development sector in India is concerned.

Abstract:-

This paper focuses on Dr. B.R. Ambedkar's Contribution in the field of Education; Ambedkar's realized that instruction was vital for the reproduction of the general public on the standards of fairness and equity. Considering the improvement of instruction in Indian Society he discovered that during the standard of Peshwa in Maharashtra and in any event, during the previous time of English Raj, right to instruction was confined to higher positions. He battled for the schooling of masses without separation of position and sex. Investment in the financial plan to discuss the stated, Training is something that should be brought inside the compass of everybody. The training division isn't an office that can be treated based on remuneration. Training should be ruined in all potential manners and to the best conceivable degree. Taking a functioning part in the conversation on the Bombay University Act and Primary Education Alteration Bill, he contributed his perspectives on the change of Education. He established the individuals' Education society and began universities at Bombay and Aurangabad. He over and over with the public authority that giving equivalent instructive occasions to all without separation was its obligation, in any case, young men and young ladies ought to get alternate training. Key Words: Dr. B.R.Ambedkar, Enlightened, Self-respect, Moral values

Introduction:-

It is training that is the correct weapon to cut social subjugation and it is the instruction that will edify the discouraged masses to come up and acquire societal position, financial advancement, and political freedom", are the perspectives on Ambedkar. B.R. Ambedkar, as is notable, the Chairman of the Drafting Committee of the Constitution of India, dedicated the vast majority of his erudite person, social, and political endeavors to offer articulation to his confidence in the ideal, "Sarvenah Bhavantu Sukhinah Sarve Santu Niramayah" for example the great and flourishing of all and battled for the duration of his life for making sure about the legitimate spot for the segregated, denied, and discouraged segments of our general public. In spite of the fact that few endeavors were made by Ambedkar to build up an equalitarian culture in India and had been talked about generally by various researchers however a couple of studies are accessible to extend him as an incredible educationist. Ambedkar made an endeavor to accomplish this target through his instructive venture additionally and talked about finally in this paper. Schooling should be debased in all potential manners and to the best conceivable degree. Taking a functioning part in the conversation on the Bombay University Act and Primary Education Change Bill, he contributed his perspectives on the change of Education. He established the individuals' Education society and began schools at Bombay and Aurangabad. He over and over with the public authority that giving equivalent instructive occasions to all without segregation was its obligation notwithstanding, young men and young ladies ought to get alternate training. Paper achieves comprehend Dr. B R Ambedkar's perspectives on training with the uniform schooling framework in India.

Objective:-

- 1.To Assess the Contributions of Dr.B.R.Ambedkar to the Educational field.
- 2.To investigate the Changes in way of life of an underestimated segment through

Methodology:-

Dr.B.R.Ambedkar's Contribution to the field of Education. The examination was directed by auxiliary wellsprings of existing writing through recorded, logical methodologies. The strategy comprises, investigating ideas and contentions, integrate thoughts and proof drawn from various sources, develop steadily and very much upheld contentions, examine an issue in a fair way, assess the thoughts and contentions of others, make decisions and express educated assessments.

Implementation:-

Dr.B.R.Ambedkar's knew that training was the essential precondition for the reproduction of society on the standards of equity and social equity. Considering the improvement of instruction in Indian culture he found that during the standard of Peshwa in Maharashtra and in any event, during the prior time of the British Raj, the privilege to instruction was confined to higher standings. He battled for the schooling of masses without segregation of position and sex. Support in the spending plan to discuss he stated, "Training is something which should be brought inside the compass of everybody. The schooling office isn't a division that can be treated based on compensation. Instruction should be demeaned in every potential manner and to the best conceivable degree" (Ambedkar, 40-41).

Taking a functioning part in the conversation on the Bombay University Act and Primary Education Correction Bill, he contributed his perspectives on the change of Education. He established the people's Education society and began universities at Bombay and Aurangabad. He consistently with the public authority that giving equivalent instructive occasions to all without separation was its obligation, nonetheless; young men and young ladies ought to get an alternate training.

Tragically in the past India got isolated into ranks dependent on birth. Individuals having a place with low standings i.e. the planned positions were denied all advantages and offices, including instructive offices. They were poor to such an extent that they would never consider sending their youngsters to instructive foundations. The entryway of all instructive establishments was shut on them. In the event that at all any booked standing set out to get rudimentary schooling, he was needed to sit outside the homeroom. His shadow ought not to fall on another understudy. Instructively, in this way, they were very in reverse.

Dr. B.R.Ambedkar's accepted that instruction would incredibly add to the belief that education would greatly contribute to the improvement of the untouchables. He generally urged his supporters to arrive at greatness in the field of information. Information is a freeing power. Instruction makes man edified, makes him mindful of this self – regard, and furthermore causes him to have a superior existence really. One of the reasons for the debasement of the untouchables was that they were denied the privilege to training. Ambedkar condemned the British Policy on training for not sufficiently empowering instruction among the lower stations. He felt that significantly under British principle schooling proceeded mostly to be an upper station and untouchables and financed different focuses of learning. While a work part in the chief chamber of the Governor-General, he was instrumental in stretching out grants for schooling abroad to the unapproachable understudies. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar needed the untouchables to go through both liberal instruction and specialized training. He was especially contradicted to instruction under strict sponsorship. He cautioned that solitary common in training could impart the estimations of freedom and uniformity among the understudy.

Dr.B.R.Ambedkar realized that Indians being a multilingual nation has the chance of issues for the solidarity of the nation by virtue of provincial pressing factors and pulls. At the point when the thoughts of semantic states were mooted, he supported them for two reasons. Right off the bat, it would encourage the working of majority rules system in the nation; furthermore, phonetic states would help in the evacuation of racial and social strains.

Communicating his perspectives Dr.B.R.Ambedkarsaid, "In trying to make semantic states India is stepping the correct street. The street all states have followed. On account of other semantic states, they have been so from the earliest starting point. On account of Indian, she needs to place herself in the converse stuff to arrive at the objective. Be that as it may, the street she proposes to travel is an all-around attempted street" (Ambedkar, 145). As per Dr.B.R.Ambedkar"s, in the eagerness to acknowledge the thoughts of etymological states India could submit the grave goof of giving authority status to provincial Language. Consequently, he cautioned that with local dialects as their authority dialects the states could yearn for Independent ethnicity and along these lines represent a danger to public solidarity. To dodge this chance later on he proposed that it ought to be set down in the constitution that local dialects will never be acknowledged as the authority language inasmuch as Hindi doesn't get fit for this status. He cautioned that semantic states without stipulation would be a danger. Indians ought to be Indians first and Indians last to keep India a unified nation. The thoughts of phonetic states local Languages as their authority dialects were in opposition to this guideline. Dr.B.R.Ambedkar" said "one language can join together. Two dialects make certain to isolate individuals. Culture is seen by language.

Since Indians wish to join together and build up a typical culture it is the bounden obligation, everything being equal, to possess Hindi as Language. own Hindi as Language" He said that any Indian who would not acknowledge his thought reserved no privilege to consider himself an Indian. Such an individual may be a hundred percent Tamil or Gujarati yet couldn't be Indian in the genuine sense. Lamentably, his admonition and proposals were not perceived in the legitimate soul. Today, individuals in Punjab, Tamil Naidu, and Assam are straightforwardly requesting separate ethnicities. Indian legislative issues is experiencing an absence of solidarity of interests affected by standings. This will be honed with phonetic states. India will undoubtedly move to crumble if a reasonable correction in our constitution isn't made and a public agreement on one authority language isn't acknowledged and upheld To advance training among untouchables, Dr.B.R.Ambedkar" set up lodgings for distant understudies at better places like Panvel, Pune, Nasik, Sholapur, Thane and Dharwad with gifts and awards from the region and nearby specialists. Having a free office of boarding to the lodging prisoners, these were available to untouchables understudies, aside from monetary requirements social and social disgrace likewise influenced the full advancement of their character in the Hindu overwhelmed schools. Thusly, Dr.B.R.Ambedkar"s needed to set up isolated organizations for the untouchables. He set up the People"s Education Society in July 1945.

The primary objectives were to:

- 1) Search after the trust
- 2) Start, set up, and lead instructive establishments or offer a guide to such foundations.

He over and again underlined the need to investigate the legend made by Hindu universality that the untouchables were unequipped for learning. With the consistent battle of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's, because of a portion of the reasons training and education among the individuals having a place with these ranks and classes are extremely low. The issue is probably going to proceed for a long while except if genuine endeavors are made to eliminate these obstacles and impediments. Much consideration is as of now being paid, however, the distance to be covered is extremely long. The public authority is giving grants generously to these understudies. They are urged to travel to another country for higher examinations. Indeed, even in India for admission to proficient and non-proficient courses level of imprints is kept low. Separate young lady inns have been opened for them. Book banks have been begun and all obstacles which hold up traffic of non-use of instructive offices by them are taken out

Conclusion:-

Ambedkar has deliberately included Article 45 in the Directive Principles of State A policy that, "the state shall Endeavour to provide, within a period of ten years from the commencement of this Constitution, for free and compulsory education for all children until they complete the age of fourteen years." The government of India has passed the bill of Right to Education Act 2008 and paid a great tribute to the contributions of Ambedkar to mass education. The policy of the Government of universalization of elementary education focusing particularly on marginalized groups, poorer sections, and the girl child, enhancing enrolment in secondary education as well as its commitment to expand education facilities will empower and equip youth to face the future with hope and confidence. There are several challenges to cherish Ambedkar's vision of universal education. There is a need to frame such policies starting from the primary stage to the higher stage that help to realize the vision of Ambedkar.

Role Of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar In Protecting The Rights Of Labours Though Various Legislations

Dr. Shilparani Suryabhan Dongre

Assistant Professor in Law,
V. N. Patil Law College, Aurangabad

Abstract:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar as a leader of Labour Department formulated policy of equal pay for equal work and initiated various programs to increase the productivity of workers, by providing them with education and important skills which is needed for performing jobs better, health care and maternity leave provisions for women workers. The Constitution of India is concerned about the various labour rights like equality before the law, a right of "equality of opportunity" for employment or appointment under the state, right to form associations or unions, prohibition of all trafficking and forced labour, prohibition of child labour etc. Directive Principles of State Policy cast the duty on the State to minimise the inequalities in income and based on all other statuses, and also directed to creates a right to work. Various labour legislations were enacted in the interest of the labours.

Keywords: Dr. Ambedkar, Rights of Labours, Constitution, Labour legislations.

Introduction:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's contribution towards the society and nation building is an immense but everyone forgets about his contribution towards labour. He plays a very vital role in making the different labour laws for the welfare of workers. He was a very great labour leader. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's inserted various constitutional provisions in favour of the labour worker both men and women. He did not stop by making Constitutional provisions but he also made number of labour laws for the betterment of worker both men and women when he was a law Minister. Hence workers are enjoying number of rights which has been guaranteed by different legislation and for this purpose all credit goes to the great man Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar.

Initiatives Of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar In Pre-Constitutional Era For Labour Welfare:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has made already great contribution towards protecting labours' right in the independence era. he had a forcefully made an appeal for living wages and decent conditions of work of the laborers for freedom of pleasant from the clutches of landlords who was very cruel towards the labour. He also tried to remove the social evil of forced labor of the downtrodden sections of the society.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had personally experienced the various problems and shades of distress the workers and downtrodden class of the society which were faced by them. In Mumbai he also stayed in Bombay development department's accommodation in the company of millworkers near about 10 years as one room tenements. This accommodation was not furnished with the modern facilities and each floor was containing or single laboratory and single tap for watching, bathing as well as cleaning the cooking utensils. in living this situation, he acquired empirical knowledge of the worker's life.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar formed the new political party i.e Independent Labour Party (ILP) in 1936 with a comprehensive program to meet the needs and grievances of the poor tenants, landless, workers and agriculturists. In the Poona session of the Bombay Assembly, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had introduced a bill to abolish the Khoti system of land tenure in Konkan on 17th September 1937. He was the only legislator in India to introduce a Bill for the abolition of the serfdom of agricultural tenants. As well as he opposed the introduction of Industrial Disputes Bill, 1937 from tooth to nail, because it removed the workers' right to strike which was the weapon of workers.

Dr. Ambedkar had taken the efforts to bring the workers under the umbrella of social security. His contribution to the discussion is of lasting importance on the following laws:

Workers can raise the voice against atrocities done to them done to them with the help of trade union. trade union provides a power to the labor. The main object of the trade union is to solve various problems related with the workers and with their employment etc.
4. Article 21: This fundamental right guarantees the protection of life and personal liberty to all persons.
5. Article 23: In pre-independence era forced labour was prevalent all over India. As Britishers ruled over India, labours were made to work against their will and were not paid according to their work. In that period the Government were not famous for forced labour as well as the landlords were also involved in forced labour. Hence the Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar made the inserted Article 23 in the fundamental rights of the Constitution of India. This article prohibits the force labour. According to this provision the forces labour has been prohibited and any practice of it shall be punishable. The protection has been given to workers not only against the State but also against the private persons, bodies and organizations.
6. Article 24: From the earlier times child labour was a huge problem of our nation. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was already against the child labour as children is considered as a future of the country. Hence, he inserted this Article in our Constitution of India which prohibits all forms of child labour. This fundamental right prohibits the employment of children below the age of fourteen years. It is made in the protection and welfare of the children. Child labour still can be observed in our country but at a lower scale.

7. Article 39(a): Under this Directive Principles of State Policy, it has been directed to the State to make the policy to secure men and women equally the right to an adequate means of livelihood.
8. Article 39(d): According to the Directive Principles of State Policy the State has been directed for securing equal pay for equal work for men as well as women worker.
9. Article 39(e): The State has been directed for to make policies and to ensure the health as well as strength of women worker will not be abused. It has been also directed to the State to make the policy so women workers will not be forced to enter into the occupations which are not suitable to their strength only because of their economic necessity.
10. Article 39A: According to this directive principles of state policy it is the duty of the state to make the policies for securing equal opportunities for access to the justice as well as make the policies to ensure that such opportunities are not denied only because of economic or other disabilities.
11. Article 41: This Article guarantees the right to work of the citizen of India. It has been directed to the state to make the policies for providing the right to work and education within the limits of economic capacity of the state.
12. Article 42: Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar made this provision for the upliftment of the working conditions for workers i.e. labours. According to this provision of the constitution the state has been directed to make the law just unhuman conditions of work to the workers. It means to create a suitable and Humane workplace for workers. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has taken special care of women workers which can be observed in this provision. This Article also directed to the state to make provisions in favour of women worker for their maternity relief. Maternity relief means leave provided to women when they are pregnant.
13. Article 43: This provision speaks about the “living wage” for its citizens. It is directed to the State to secure a living wage, decent condition of work and social and cultural opportunities to all workers by making legislation or through economic organization. This provision has put an obligation on the State to create opportunities in the fields of Agriculture as well as Industries with special reference to cottage industries.
14. Article 43A: Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was very much in the favour of labour rights and he was an advocate for labours also for a long time. Hence, he has inserted this Article in the Constitution which makes possible the participation of workers in the Management of Industries through legislation.

Conclusion:

It is duty of all workers to be grateful to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, especially women employees, as he framed many laws for women workers in India.

The contribution of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar in making the protecting the interest of the labours is countless. He was worked for the welfare of the laborers. He was a man who really experienced the pain and problems of labours and made a legislation to find out he solutions to solve those problems. He really plays a vital role in the nation-building. It will be worth saying that Dr.

Babasaheb Ambedkar is not only the architecture of the Constitution of India but he is also the architect of labour welfare measure.

Abstract

Despite the fact that India is progressing successfully in the social, economic and political sectors, evidences prove the presence of caste based violence and discrimination among the Dalits and women posing threat to the human dignity of those weaker section. Critical reflections on the Hindu traditional social system by Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar calls for the need for a egalitarian society where social justice is equally distributed across Indian society through the socio-economic and political participation among the depressed castes. This research paper attempts to critically examine the ideologies of Dr.Ambedkar in building a society where equality prevails and ultimately contributing to the formation of modern India. Reflections reveal that Ambedkar's vision of egalitarian society is very crucial to end the social evils prevailing in the contemporary Indian society.

Keywords: Democracy, Inequality, Caste discrimination, Indian Society, Egalitarian

Introduction:

Globally, India is considered as one of the largest democratic country. The Constitution of India emphasizes parliamentary democracy that ensures to protect every citizen irrespective of diversity. Although the Indian constitution prioritizes the marginalized castes to be secured from all kinds of discriminations, it is very often found these sections of the society in the modern period are encountering atrocities and exploitation. Evidences reveal that even today Dalits across the country are subject to atrocities and human right violation. This paper attempts to discuss discrimination against depressed caste by the social system. It critically examines the reasons behind this violence on Dalits, despite the fact that various safeguards are available under the constitution and the legislation enacted by the Parliament over a period of time. India has achieved social, economic and political empowerment in the 21st century. Although, the Indian constitution provides social justice for all and evidently it is observed that social justice is denied to Dalits, the paper also discusses the barriers the Hindu social system has in exercising social and justice for the Dalits.

Objectives:

The objective of this paper is to discuss discrimination against depressed caste by the social system. The paper also critically examines the reasons behind this violence on Dalits, and it also discusses the barriers the Hindu social system has in exercising social and justice for the Dalits.

Methodology:

This is a conceptual paper that is built on the basis of secondary sources of data drawn from various sources such as books, articles and journals.

Discussion and Findings:

Social Justice

Social justice is applied solely to a particular people or nation with the intention of redressing effects of hierarchical inequalities, particularly inherited inequalities. Social justice is a multi-dimensional concept, viewed differently by scholars of law, philosophy and political science. The term social justice is quite comprehensive. Social justice is a bundle of rights. Vision of Ambedkar considers social justice as a balancing wheel between upper to down. It is a great social value in providing a stable society and in securing the unity of the country. In legal point of view, Social justice may be defined as “the right of the weak, aged, destitute, and deprived, women, children and other under-privileged castes”. As a result, most moral and political philosophers are treating injustice as the simple absence of justice. Justice is the tool for transition from such kind of situation, when the principles of justice are premeditated to eradicate injustice.

Plato defined Social Justice as, “the principle of a society consisting of different types of men who have combined the impulse of their need for one another and their concentration on their combination in one society and their concentration on their separate function, have made a whole which is perfect because it is the product of image of the whole of the human mind (Annas, 1981)” it means, his theory of Justice is based upon equal treatments for all human beings but in Indian scenario it is very complex about Justice for the downgraded castes because Indian society is based upon the grading system. In this regard, it is critical to conceptualise the term of Egalitarian society and Hindu Social system.

An Egalitarian Society and Hindu Social System

Historically, the caste system stems out from the Hindu belief in Vedas, Smartis, Ramayana, Mahabharata and Geeta. The four castes eventually developed into a social assortment of thousands sub castes, with the untouchables at the end of the list or more precisely outside the grade. Such a rigid caste system is not found anywhere in the world outside India. A person is born into a caste. Once born in that caste, his status is determined and absolute. The birth decides one’s status and this cannot be altered irrespective of any talent that a person may develop or wealth a person may collect. The Hindu Social is based up on the two pillars, the Caste and Chaturvarnya. It means Hindu social system is based upon the grading which divided the human society based on the caste system and killing human spirit (Ambedkar, 1936).

In worldwide, the personalities like Abraham Lincoln, Martin Luther King, and Mandela tried their best at least to minimize the injustice that had been unleashed towards the downtrodden sections. In India, Gauttam Buddha, Mahavira, Kabir, Nanak and Ravidas played their social and religious role at some time or the other to reform the Indian society. Besides these, numerous socio-religious reform movements had deep linkages with the cause of the untouchables who were labeled with a serious stigma in the name of Hinduism. All these personalities focused morality and humanity which means everyone has equal participation in the world in all sectors.

Phule’s ideas were forwarded by B. R. Ambedkar and he developed new egalitarian values like, equality, liberty, fraternity and democracy. He looked at social justice from the perspective of Indian society and the function of its institution on the moral grounds. Further, B. R. Ambedkar argues that the social justice means equal opportunity for all and no discrimination based on caste, sex, religion, gender and region. However, Indian society is based upon the Verndharma. According to this Ambedkars, ideal would be a society based on the liberty, equality and liberty and fraternity. He further says he cannot imagine any objection to fraternity. Ideal society should be mobile with full of channels for conveying a change taking place in one part to other parts (Ambedkar, 1987).

Ambedkar emphasised on rationality of Hindu social order, which completely negated equality, liberty and fraternity and also justice for the marginal groups. Ambedkar argued that Hindu society does not have the specification to be called as a society, because Hindu social system is based upon the caste system and laws of Manusmriti (Zelliot, 1992). Thus the caste system prevents common activity and it has prevented the Hindu from becoming a society with a unified life and consciousness of its own. Hindu society is based upon the isolation and exclusiveness and this is a main feature of the Hindu social system and its main objective is that to prevent to the solidarity of human-hood (Ambedkar, 1936). Moreover, the caste system is killing the sense of humanity. At this juncture, M. K. Gandhi was opposing the untouchability but he did not oppose the Caste system and established to Verna system. M. K. Gandhi's interest was to preserve the traditional social order. But Ambedkar's views questioned the traditionally Hindu social system as a system promoted to devastate a just an egalitarian society (Ambedkar, 1943).

At this juncture, the caste system became responsible for creating discrimination, violence, crime and inferiority between human being. It means that the Hindu social system is destroying the spirit of welfare and humanity (Ambedkar, 1936). Even in modern India, those problems are continuing in different forms. It is only in favour of inequality and exploitation of society and gives no space for human rights and social justice for human beings. Here, the Hindu social system is deciding on the basis of birth and not on the basis of quality of human and also narrowing down the scope of exercising rights in women and dalits.

At this situation, the Manusmirti proclaimed that the women never be free, as she in her early stage live under her father and during young age under her husband and old age under her son. Manusmirti deny to women, the right to read and live the life happily. When this is critically examined to the Egalitarian society, it is based on humankind and welfare for all and no space for any discrimination, inequality and grading system. Ambedkar says "Even Though, I am born a Hindu but I will not die a Hindu (Ambedkar, 1935)". Ambedkar wanted to annihilate the caste system means he wanted annihilation to the Hindu social system and want to establish a new egalitarian society. Today, India is a democratic country as it is based upon the Social Egalitarian philosophy of B. R. Ambedkar.

Rights, Discrimination and Humanity

Although, Indian Constitution is based upon on equal participation and social justice for all and no discrimination on the basis of caste, religion, birth, language and place etc, the reality is totally different. Critical reflections from the grassroots level, reveals that there are many social problems for one section which stems out from caste and religion even in the modern India in 21st century. Indian Constitution is prescribing rights for citizen as freedom of speech, equal treatment, right to religion, right to education and right to vote etc. There are emphasis on the humanity and also maintain socio-economic and political participation for all. Undoubtedly, it is observed that discrimination and crimes are commonly seen on one section which is associated with Hindu social system. This happens because its philosophy is based upon the hierarchy which is fixed by the birth. Ambedkar argued that Hindu Law is established on the Brahmanical philosophy. The untouchables had nothing to do and accept and respect it. The untouchables have no right against the Upper Castes. For them there is no equal right or no justice and it can be exercised only by those in the dominant castes and not applicable to weaker sections.

Social Justice in 21st Century

The achievement of social justice implies to the removal of the inequalities in social, political and economic life and the creation of a just society. Ambedkar envisioned that social justice could be brought about only when political democracy is extended into the social and economic sectors. However, he insisted that breaking the monopoly of the one-time political and social elites has to be done through constitutional means. Ambedkar was also aware of the existing corruption and prejudices in the Indian administrative and judiciary system. He believed in right of equal participation, and that the assimilation of the objectives of the marginalized groups of society in rules and policy is not sufficient to ensure social justice, but that the incorporation of individuals from these groups in the administration is also a necessary condition for distributing justice. In this context Ambedkar while advocating for special treatments for the social justice to depressed caste in Indian government, he argued that “the power to administer laws is not less important than the power to make laws. And the spirit of the legislation may easily be violated if not nullified by the machinery of the administrators (Ambedkar, 1979).”

Dalits are more nomadic than Upper Castes in the country today, and they have been trying to assert their rights and establish their own identity in society. This does not mean that Dr. B.R. Ambedkar tried to uplift the Dalits only. But he was also interested in the creation of an egalitarian society without any caste discrimination and untouchability. His important contribution was that he strived to reform restructure and transform contemporary Indian society. Vivek Kumar argues that Ambedkar’s theory of justice is intersected by Plato, Hobs, J.S. Mill and Rawls etc. (Jogdand, 2008). However, his philosophy is based on social justice and he is the first person who created a new approach for justice for depressed castes in India. Even today, theory of justice could not apply on Indian society, because, the Indian society is based on caste system. Verna System is a setting of reservation for Upper caste and denied all rights to Dalits in India.

Conclusion

Despite decades of struggle and conflict, Dalits are facing widespread discrimination and inhumane treatment from a society in 21st century in India. They are calling to them Panchmas, Untouchables, Harijans or Dalits. Human beings are essentially social animals. They are by nature interrelated and interdependent. A person can develop his or her personality only in the human society. For this purpose every human being, above all, needs the recognition that befits a human being. Caste society cannot provide the atmosphere and space required for authentic human development.

As a result, B.R. Ambedkar called upon the Hindus to annihilate the caste system, which is a great hindrance to social solidarity, humanity, and to set up a new egalitarian social order based on the ideals of liberty, equality and fraternity in consonance with the principles of democracy. In 21st century, the untouchables are usually regarding as objects of political participation but political parties ignore them as they are not interested to protect their political participation and social justice. The importance and necessity of communal and adequate representation of Dalits is beyond question. Ambedkar’s socio-economic and political thoughts were primarily based on the social ground realities of Indian society. He was the prominent advocate of social justice and welfare of all, which is the foundation of national governance and social democracy.

Ambedkar provides a new dimension to social philosophy and making modern India. He strongly advocated that untouchability is not a religious system but an economic system which is worse than slavery. He had a distinctive approach to the oppression of women and Dalits in India. Ambedkar's commencement of emancipatory politics proceeded beyond a comprehensive name of oppression, which is another name of untouchability. India can never be truly free until the last Indian segment of Dalits and STs are free. Ambedkar wanted that Dalits, backwards, minorities and women to look back to their history and re-establish their supremacy by defeating the counter revolutionary forces led by the champions of Brahmanism. Ambedkar came to the right conclusion that the teachings of Buddha could elevate the status of India. Fighting these evil forces with determination and strengthening the unity of democratic and secular forces were therefore, the best way in which we can uphold the social philosophy of Ambedkar who shines as the symbol of uprising against all unjust structures of the Hindu social system. He was also India's first thinker who played important role to make the point clear that India is not yet a nation, but a nation in the creation.

Introduction

Dr.B.R.Ambedkar is the father of the Indian constitution and also a great social reformer . From the beginning to the end of his life he moved against the caste system and fought for the right of the untouchables and downtrodden.He work hard for the eradication of caste system and social inequalities.In 1924 he laid the foundation of Akhila Bharathiya Bahiskrit Parishad to uplift the depressed class .For him education was the greatest weapon to force the progress of depressed class and established the Depressed Class Education Society.

From earlier days onwards education functioned as the key element for the cultural transformation in vedic period privilege of education was enjoyed by Bhramins,Kshathriyas and Vaisyas.Shudras, the people who considered as the lower class exempted from this privilege.During this time Buddhist and other socio –religious movements raise their voice against the discrimination.But the supremacy of the royal class over education remains unshakable.This discrimination provoked the dalits to start protest against the discrimination of the royal class .Dr B.R .Ambedkar was the key person who played a vital role in the revolution against the supreme class for upliftment of dalits for their human rights,dignity,freedom and justice.

Statement of the Problem

This problem is stated as “Dr B.R Ambedkar’s contribution as the social Reformer for the social and Educational upliftment of Dalits.

Objectives of the study

- ❖ To analyse Dr Ambedkars contribution for the conceptualization of Education as a power full weapon for the development of Dalits
- ❖ To assess the volume of support delivered by Ambedkar for the upliftment of down trodden masses as social reformer.
- ❖ To trace Ambedkar’s effort to propagate his ideas and thoughts for the cultural ,social and national development

Research methodology

Research in common parlance refers to a search for knowledge. According to Redman and Morry define research as a “systematized effort to gain new knowledge”. Research is thus an original contribution to the existing stock of knowledge making for its advancement. It is the pursuit of truth with the help of the study, observation, comparison and experiment. In short, the search for knowledge through objective and systematic method of finding solution to a problem is research. The systematic approach concerning generalization and the formulation of a theory is also research.

Methods of data collection

The task of data collection begins after a research problem has been defined and research design planned chalked out. While deciding about the method of data collection to be used for the study, the researcher should keep in mind two types of data vise, primary and secondary.

- Primary data

The primary data during the course of doing experiments in an experimental research but in case we do research of the descriptive type and perform surveys, whether sample surveys or census surveys, then we can obtain primary data either through observation or through direct communication with respondents in one form or another or through direct communication with respondents in one form or another or through personal interview. Primary data is the data which has been collected for the first time and which mayn’t be passed through the statistical process.

In this study, primary data is collected through Questionnaire.

- Questionnaire

It includes some well-structured questions related to study to get the facts. Questionnaire was designed by using hard copy to some respondents.

- Secondary data

Secondary data refers to the data which have already been collected and analyzed by someone else. It may either be published data or unpublished data. These data may collected through journals, books, magazines, websites etc... and these data may already passed through the statistical process.

- Sample design

Questionnaire was distributed to 30 respondents from Staffs among Tribal hostel in Mankara.

- Sample size

The sample size used for this study is 30

- Sampling method

The sampling method which i have been used in this study is Snow ball sampling method.

- Tools used for the study

The term analysis to the computation of certain measures along with searching for patterns of relationship that exist among data groups. Thus in the process of analysis, relationship or differences supporting or conflating with original or new hypothesis should be subjected to statistical tests of significance to determine with what validity data can be said to indicate any conclusions.

The tools used in this study are as follows:-

- Percentage analysis

Percentage analysis is one of the basic statistical tools which is widely used in analysis and interpretation of primary data. It is calculated as follows

Review of Literature

According to Rao the Ambedkars philosophy of life as well as his perspectives of education is related to Buddhist principles,prajna(understanding) ,Karma(compassion).

Reddy in his work Analysis the Ambedkar -led Dalit Movement with an Anthropological perspective in his work he observes that the radical transformation of living condition of millions of his community is mainly because of Ambedker's effort.

Kadam in his book Dr .Babasaheb Ambedker and significance of His Movements “describe about that Ambedkar social political movements aimed at the liberation of downtrodden s for their age old social slavery.

- The importance given to the education dalit childs and the step taken for the promotion of girls education was the main highlights of our constitution which was the contribution of Ambedkar

Suggestions

- To conduct a study about the contribution of Ambedkars for the fabrication of our pannel code and the relevance given by him to dalits in the constitution
- To conduct a survey regarding the executional excellence of Ambedkar in the constitution making and the importance for the dalit education noted by him

- To conduct a comparative study about the change in living standard of dalits after the law implementation in our country's constitution by Ambedkar

Conclusion

The life of Ambedkar was actually a war for the upliftment of marginalised peoples in India. A New phase in the history was started after the arrival of Ambedkar in the lime light of freedom movement. The historical transformation in the social status of dalits was the result of earnest effort done by Ambedkar.

Abstract

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's heritage as a socio-political reformer deeply affected current India. In post-Independence India, his socio-economic idea is regarded across the political range. His drives have impacted different circles of life and changed the manner in which India today takes a gander at financial approaches, schooling and governmental policy regarding minorities in society through economic and legitimate motivators., Narendra Jadhav, an eminent Indian economic analyst, has said that Ambedkar was "the most elevated and decorated Indian financial expert, everything being equal." Amartya Sen, said that Ambedkar is "father of my financial aspects", and "he was exceptionally dubious figure in his home country, however it was not the truth. His commitment in the field of financial aspects is heavenly and will be recollected for eternity." President Obama tended to the Indian parliament in 2010, and alluded to Dalit pioneer Dr. B.R. Ambedkar as the extraordinary and adored Human Rights champion and primary creator of India's constitution.

Introduction

India has assumed the main part in the advancement of the cause for Human Rights. With the fulfillment of Independence, the assertion of rights, the most detailed on the earth, was fused in the new Constitution. India has put forth the most true attempts for the insurance and advancement of basic freedoms the world over and is the best victor of the basic rights in the Third World. India has not just fused a detailed Bill of Rights in her Constitution however endeavors have likewise been accomplished to decipher this into reality. India got independence in 1947, following quite long struggle for freedom purchased to a head a whirlwind of opposition at home and promotion for opportunity abroad. The United Nations came to the world in 1945 after an amazing arrangement of worldwide activities that started with the introduction of the League of Nations in 1920. The climax of these advancements was the reception (in 1948) of one of the world's most noteworthy living records – the Universal Declaration of Human Rights (UDHR) (Kothari, 2019)

The meaning of Human rights will be rights characteristic to all people, without differentiation as to race, color, sexual orientation, language, religion, political or another assessment, public or social source, property, birth or another status (UNHCR, 2018)

Classification Of Human Rights

The United Nations classifies the human rights into the following categories

- Civil rights
- Political civil liberties
- Social and Economic rights
- Cultural rights

Civil Rights

Civil rights assurances of equal social chances and equal protection under the law, paying little room to race, religion, or other individual qualities. These are very for the individuals to lead a normal life in the society. Examples of civil rights incorporate the option to cast vote, the privilege to a fair trial, the privilege to taxpayer supported organizations, the privilege to a state funded instruction, and the option to utilize public offices. Social equality are a fundamental segment of vote based system that is democracy; whenever people are being denied occasions to take part in political society, they are being denied their social equality. As opposed to common freedoms, which are opportunities that are made sure about by putting limitations on government, social equality are made sure about by sure government activity, frequently as enactment. Social liberties laws endeavor to ensure full and equivalent citizenship for individuals who have generally been victimized based on some gathering trademark. At the point when the authorization of social liberties is discovered by numerous individuals to be deficient, a social equality development may arise to call for equivalent utilization of the laws without segregation. In contrast to different rights ideas, for example, common freedoms or regular rights, in which individuals secure rights intrinsically, maybe from God or nature, social liberties should be given and ensured by the intensity of the state. Subsequently, they change significantly after some time, culture, and type of government and will in general follow cultural patterns that support or despise specific sorts of separation. For instance, the social liberties of the lesbian, gay, androgynous, transsexual, and eccentric (LGBTQ) people group have as of late go to the cutting edge of political discussion in some Western democracies (Hamlin, 2007)

Political Rights

Political rights allude to a person's capacity to take an interest in the common and political existence of the general public and state unafraid of segregation or restraint, and are tied near citizenship status. Such rights incorporate not just the option to cast a ballot in a political race, yet in addition the rights to join an ideological group; pursue position; and partake uninhibitedly in political conventions, occasions, or fights (CSCE). Some of the important political rights are,

1. Right to vote: In a democratic government, every citizen has given the right to vote. The age minimum age to exercise this right is 21 years.
2. Right to get elected: In a democratic state every resident is additionally given the option to get chosen for any public office. He can get chosen for a council, or city organization/civil board of trustees or panchayat and work as its part. A few capabilities are anyway fixed for looking for political race.
3. Right to hold the public office: Residents likewise reserve the privilege to hold public workplaces subsequent to getting chosen as representatives of the individuals. While fixing capabilities, no separation is made and legitimate consideration is taken that solitary equipped people may get chosen.

4. Right to petition: Residents reserve the privilege to request of and they can send applications independently or aggregately to the experts for the review of their complaints.
5. Right to form the political parties: In each democratic state; individuals reserve the privilege to shape their ideological groups that is political party and to take an interest in the political cycle through these rights (Ghai)

Economic Rights

Right to adequate wages: An individual has the privilege not exclusively to work yet in addition the option to be paid sufficient wages for his work. For this reason, state fixes least wages as indicated by the quality and amount of work. Compensation is constantly viewed as a prize for the work done.

Right to property: Right to property is as normal to man as family. It implies the option to retain the surplus abundance or cash and buy undaunted or portable property. Property contributes towards the development of culture and human advancement. Right to property is a characteristic culmination of right to sufficient wages

Right to Economic and Social security: In an advanced government welfare state, residents are additionally given the privilege to financial and federal retirement aide. State gives security in the event of old age, disorder, joblessness and so forth A large portion of the states give old age pensions, joblessness recompenses, advantages of fortunate asset, monetary aides during sicknesses or mishaps or natural disasters.

Right to Fixed amount of Work duration: The modern state also fixes the long stretches of work every day. Nobody can be compelled to work for more than fixed hours (Ghai).

The Indian Social System

The underlying cause of discriminations and inequalities according to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar in India depend on caste. caste is a social development and decides the social standing and destiny of an individual in the general public. Caste as Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar further expounds resembles a stepping stool putting some small bunch of people like Brahmins on the top and Shudras in the down and Untouchables underneath the Shudras. These category of people are the outcaste people who are called by different names like Ati Shudras, Nishadas or Chandalas etc. Shockingly the women like Dalits in Caste progression at all level are additionally separated, persecuted and misused pulling them to sub-human status. A few states however are portrayed by social disparity; maybe no place else on the planet has inequality been extravagantly developed as in India (Gadkar, 2019)

According to Babasaheb, "Society is always composed of Classes. Their basis may differ. They may be economic or intellectual or social, but an individual in a society is always a member of a class. This is a universal fact and early Hindu society could not have been an exception to this rule, and, as a matter of fact, we know it was not. So what was the class that first to make itself into the caste, for class and caste, so to say, are next door neighbors, and it is only the span that separates the two. A Caste is an enclosed class" (moon, 1979)

Religion was the main tool for the upper caste to defend and crystallize their position. Karl Marx has rightly said that 'religion is the opium of the masses'. It always promises a better position afterlife if they accept the suffering in the present life. Similarly, Babasaheb had said about the religion. He said it is only the poor, who need religion. Religion always gives hope. Therefore, mankind finds solace in the religion, and that is why the poor cling to religion. Untouchables never find right to life and dignity in Hinduism. Hence Babasaheb chose Buddhism over Hinduism and with all respect and dignity accepted Buddhism. “Dr. Ambedkar’s speech on the Eve of the great conversion at Nagpur on October 14, 1956, Dr. Ambedkar said Buddhism can serve not only this country, India, but the whole. Buddhism is indispensable for world peace you must pledge today that you, the followers of Buddha, will not only work to liberate yourself, but will try to elevate your country and the world in general (Waghmare, 2007)

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, Indian Crusader for Social Justice and Champion of Human Rights. One of the greatest contributions of Dr. Ambedkar was in respect of Fundamental Rights and Directive Principles of State Policy enshrined in the Indian Constitution. The fundamental Rights provide for freedom, equality, abolition of Untouchability and remedies to ensure the enforcement of rights (Waghmare, 2007). Articles 14, 15, 16 of the constitution speak about right to equality and without any discrimination on the basis of religion, race, caste, creed sex. Article 17 of the constitution speaks about the eradication of untouchability. Article 46 of the constitution belonging to Directive Principles of State Policy make it obligatory on the part of the state to promote with special care the educational and economic interests of weaker section particularly scheduled caste people. In this way the interests of the downtrodden i.e., untouchables were protected and guaranteed by the supreme law of the land i.e., constitution.

Dr. Ambedkar in His book “Annihilation of Caste” speaks about Mr. Gandhi. He revealed how Gandhi maintained double standards in his two papers i.e., Harijan which was brought in English and another paper conducted in Gujarati namely Deenabandhu. In Harijan, he posed himself as the crusader of the caste system where as in Deenabandhu, he shown his true colors as the follower of Hinduism and strictly an orthodox person. People can see him as his devotees. But true to his personality and principles, he can neither be a reformer nor a mahatma. Indian society is completely driven by the caste system and which is being justified by the leader like Gandhi. The words of Gandhi had huge weightage since he had the followers all over. They were following him blindly and religiously. So it was a challenge for Babasaheb to fight against the odds of Hinduism which was supported by none other than Gandhi. But even the winds of opposition were blowing towards him from all the corners of the society; he stood like a mountain, took all challenges and succeeded in getting the basic human rights which were denied to the untouchables since time unknown. The realization of egalitarian society is impossible without the equality of untouchables in particular and other backward downtrodden section of the society in general. To envisage this Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar came up with the reservation policy which is guaranteed by the supreme law of land that is constitution itself. Reservation system is very much necessary to bring these downtrodden dalits to the mainstream and lead a respectable life.

Reservation System

Reservation is an arrangement of governmental policy regarding minorities in society in India that gives verifiably disadvantaged groups representation in education, work and legislative issues. In view of arrangements in the Indian Constitution, it permits the Indian government to set reserved quotas or seats which bring down the capabilities required in exams, employment opportunities and so on for 'socially and economically backward sections of the society. Reservation is principally given to every one of the 3 groups: Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes, Other Backward Classes truncated as SC,

ST, OBC individually. Initially reservation was simply given to SCs and STs yet was later stretched out to OBCs in 1987 after the implementation of the Mandal Commission report (wikipedia).

SPECIFIC CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS FOR THE PROTECTION, UPLIFTMENT AND WELFARE OF SCHEDULED CASTE, SCHEDULED TRIBE OF INDIA

- ❖ Article 15: Prohibition of discrimination on the grounds of religion, race, caste, sex or place of birth.
- ❖ Article 16: Equality of Opportunity in the matters of public employment.
- ❖ Article 17: Abolition of Untouchability- Untouchability is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden
- ❖ Article 29: Protection of interests (cultural and educational) of minorities.
- ❖ Article 30: Right of minorities to establish and administer educational institutions.
- ❖ Article 46: Promotion of educational and economic interests of scheduled castes, scheduled tribes and other backward classes.
- ❖ Article 330: Reservation of seats for SCs and STs in the Loksabha.
- ❖ Article 332: Reservation of seats for SCs and STs in Legislative Assemblies of the states.
- ❖ Article 335: Claims of SCs and STs to services and posts.
- ❖ Article 350(A): Facilities for instruction of instruction in mother tongue.

Conclusion

The Ambedkar point of view or as it is likewise called Ambedkarism is today a living power in India. The point of view however arose bit by bit not with the aim of scholastic pursuits or an order fulfills the necessities of the widespread guideline of human rights making the individuals secure, cultivated, and evolved both morally and materialistically. Though we have supreme law of land that is constitution which is protecting the interests of SCs and STs, still there is a long way to go. There is huge percentage of population belonging to SCs and STs who are still to get the benefit of this reservation system. The main reason for this is illiteracy and poverty. So it is the responsibility of every citizen and the government in power to proper policies to bring this section to the main stream.

Efforts of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's for the Female Upliftment

Patel Dhavalkumar Satishbhai

Ph.D (Research Scholar)

Department Of Sociology Sardar Patel University Vallabh Vidyanagar – Gujarat

Abstract

Babasaheb has worked not only as political leader but he also struggle for Dalit's, Backward Classes of the society and women rights and their upliftment. The main Purpose of the present of this Paper is to show the contribution of Babasaheb Ambedkar for the upliftment (improvement) of women in the progress of society considering women as male equivalents. He said for all the misery and suffering of women 'Manu' is responsible and he blamed the Hindu Social System and beliefs for the conservative attitude towards women. He Re-examined the Hindu Code Bill Presented by 'Rao Committee' on 11 April 1947 and discussed it in the Constitutional Committee for women reforms. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has inspired women to fight for their justice through social activities and their rights, ideas and reforms.

KEY WORDS - Ambedkar's Contribution, Hindu Code Bill, Women Upliftment.

Introduction

A trend is going on now-a-days for women social upliftment in social media these days. Debates on women empowerment are seen on news channels as well as articles in newspapers. people read it with great passion and discuss it for while. after some day they throw away this news paper and their views in dustbin. government and N.G.Os are taking advantage on the name of it. But People today have forgotten Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, who dedicated his entire life for the upliftment of women, as well as to lay the foundation for women's empowerment in new independent India.

Methodology

Present research " Efforts of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's for the Female Upliftment" has been done by historical method of research. This research has been done using secondary sources including books, research paper, article, newspaper, internet etc. reference literature.

Babasaheb Works Related Women Empowering

Babasaheb has always been working to give equal rights to women. Babasaheb started women, who were remained socially restricted and deprived from equal rights in 1920 A.D. He said that women ever don't breath freely. still women is considered as a means of entertainment. It is said in Hindu scriptural that when women is a child, she is dependent on her father, she dependent on her husband when she marries, and remain dependent on her son after she become mother. (1) That means there is no independent existence of her. It is also seen in Muslim community that they do not give common right. custom of keeping women veiled is injustice.

Dr. Ambedkar tried plenty of efforts to make aware women. A Fine example of it. Mahad Struggle in which he invited women to join them in the struggle in which he invited women to join them in the struggle " 300 women participants turned up with men participants to take part in satyagraha and addressing another meeting about of 3000 women he said." (2). He made a women fearless and brave. He believe that women should fight for their rights.

Establishment of "The Women Association" was done in January in which Ramabai, wife of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was appointed as chair person. The Lower class Conference was held in Nagpur in 1930, followed by a separate conference was held for the women's. About 500 women took part in satyagraha organized by Dalit's in Nashik to enter the Kalaram temple. A number of women were arrested along with men. Which states that women were willing to suffer any punishment for their self-esteem (3)

The Encouragement of Babasaheb ambedkar to empower women to speak boldly was seen when redhead bride addressed a press conference in 1931. Where she said "It Is been to die a honoured than live a life full of humiliation. we will sacrifice our lives but we will win our rights. the credit for this self respect and firm determination of women goes to Dr. Babasaheb ambedkar (Singariya-2014)" (4)

25,000 women joined with all India Dalit Mahila Conference on 20th july, 1942. Inspired by Babasaheb, womens started writing on diffrent topics. In which he was also inspired himself to write Planning buddhist Philosophy, Plays and autobiography. Tulsibai Bansode started publishing a news paper in which he inspired women to bring awareness and to fight against injustice.

Babasaheb always worried for deprived and women. for this he joined in Jawaharlal Nehru ministry for welfare of deprived and women even he was critic of Nehru, where he undertook position of law minister and chairman of constitution assembly. Babasaheb took interest of construction of Indian Constitution and Hindu Code Bill. He was always worried regarding common rights for women. An English writer Donald Smith wrote in his book "India as a secular state" that, All are equal against law policy of English people has worked to bring political revolution Hypotheses of western countries were against Hindu laws had given acceptance to traditional caste system so arrangement of punishment was on the basis of caste. Separate arrangements of punishment was for Muslim and irreligious people in Muslim law also. But Britishers followed common policy for Hindu and Muslims.(5)

Hindu code Bill was presented in constitution assembly by Dr. Babasaheb on 11th April 1947. Main Points of Hindu Code Bill are as under : immovable and movable property should in possession of women. property should be obtained by her parents and husband before or after her marriage and in the circumstances of she becomes widow. Dowry will be settle with one condition and in the form of half portion of property should be given to every unmarried girls and another half portion should be divided into sons equally, one fourth portion of property should be given to married girl. Dr. Ambedkar has said mainly three points in this Bill.

1. Right to Property
2. Order of Succession to the property
3. Maintenance, Marriage, Divorce, adoption, minority and guardianship

Covering each of these issues, the Hindu Code Bill worked for Women's emancipation. They were unhappy with the secondary place that women were given in society.(6)

A Committee was constituted on 9 April 1948 to amend the Hindu Code Bill and for the first time in the history of independent India, debate was held in parliament for 4 years. Finally, on September 6, 1951, the bill was not passed. This was a black day for the liberation of women and for the fight for their rights as well as for every woman. But every leader in parliament was happy that the bill was not passed and Babasaheb was very upset that the bill was not passed. And on 27 September 1951, he wrote a letter to the prime minister for resigning as minister of law. Only Babasaheb Ambedkar, who has made such a great sacrifice for women's rights by any leader in the history of India.

Conclusion

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar will be the first thinker to believe in the egalitarian ideology, he never discriminated between men and women, he believed that the Hindu Scriptures were the main reason for the discrimination rules need to be made, caste system. As well as there is need to build a beautiful nation by removing the caste System in Hindu society.

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar – As a Protector of Indian Farmer

Pandhari Rambhau Gore

Asst. Professor

Shri RamraoSarnaik College Of Social Work Washim

Abstract :

Dr .Ambedkar was one of the great personalities, who made dynamic changes in the society. He had fully devoted his life for improvement in the condition of downtrodden people in India. He was a great politician ,Constitutor and economist .His views deals with agriculture and are landmark in the field of economics .His views on lands holding, collective farming and land revenue are most useful in the present time .Ambedkar argued ,land was only one of the many factors of production and the productivity of one factor of production in which the other factor of production are combined in his world : the chief object of an efficient production consists in making every factor in the concern contribute its highest ; and it can do that only when it can cooperate with its fellow in the require capacity .Apart from socio-economic reforms the state government is working on the recommendation of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar on the agriculture sector to tackle the problem of small and marginal farmers in Maharashtra .Almost 78 per cent of farmers in the state fall in the category of small and marginal farmers with land holdings of five acres or less. The Government is pushing for the concept of 'group farming' based on the agriculture model recommended by Ambedkar in his writings on the subject. The present paper attempts to discuss DR. B. R .Ambedkar's thoughts on agriculture and also to consider its relevance to current agriculture in India.

Keywords – Productivity, Agriculture Sector, Land Holding, Land reform, Collective farming,

Introduction:

Land Holding :

Ambedkar was the first Indian economist to examine the problem of sub division and fragmentation of agriculture land holding and formulate a very scientific definition of an economic holding .Ambedkar opined that small size of land holding is one the causes of production . Therefore should be consolidation of land holding. The traditional definition of an economic holding was presented as “ a chance of producing sufficient to keep himself and his family in reasonable comfort after paying his necessary expenses” .It cannot be the language of economics to say that a large holding is economic while a small holding is uneconomic . It is right or wrong proportion on other factor of production to a unit of land that renders the latter economic or uneconomic .A small term may be economic or uneconomic because economic does not depend upon the size of land but upon the appropriate proportion among all factors including land.

State Socialism and Agriculture

B. R .Ambedkar propound the concept of the state socialism .This concept envisages the collective farming .with abolition of intermemediaris, the state must be the owen of land. The state should distribute this land to the farms. Farmer should cultivate the farm collectively .The state should supply essential capital to the agriculture sector and the obtained income should be distributed among the farmers .It will lead to solve the problem of agriculture labours.

Collective Farming

It is undoubtedly true that Dr.Ambedkar concentrated almost his entire energy for improving the lot of the untouchables, because they were the most exploited in each and every walk of social life, Still it would be erroneous to consider him as a champion of the untouchable alone .he was against exploitation .Therefore his thinking horizon was never confined to untouchables but embraced the whole oppressed fraternity. One can cite a number of glorious illustrations in support of this argument. We have just discussed above the bill that he introduced to abolish the Khoti System. Below we discuss his arguments in favour of collective farming. On behalf of the 'all -India scheduled caste federation 'Dr. Ambedkar submitted to the constituent Assembly in the year 1946 a memorandum enunciating the safeguards for the minorities in general and scheduled castes in particular . The memorandum is known as 'State and minorities'.

Reform and reorganisation in the agriculture sector

Ambedkar was aware that while rapid industrialisation of India was desirable, agriculture would still require massive transformation. In the election manifesto of the scheduled caste federation .Released on October 3, 1951, this point was made clearly.

While the rapid industrialisation of the country is very essential in the opinion of the federation, Agriculture is bound to remain the foundation of India's economy. Any scheme of increased production which did not take into account the reconstruction of Indian agriculture is doomed to disappointment (BAWS.vol 17, part 1 p.392)

Ambedkar's resolution of the land problem in India as mentioned had three further components. At the most ambitious, programmatic level, he proposed the nationalisation of land and collectivisation of agriculture, which was to be state run industry. Secondly he proposed separate settlement for dalit that would give independence to them from hindu village society .thirdly, he demanded that government wasteland, forest, and pasture be distributed to landless Dalits.

Land Reform

Dr.Ambedkar's thoughts behind land reform were to uplift the untouchables who were predominantly landless or small cultivators. Outmoded methods of cultivation .The outmoded method of cultivation which were gradually decreasing in efficiency had to be replaced by joint or collective farming -that was his predominant thought. He argued convincingly in his book 'small holding in India and their remedies '(The journal of Indian economic society vol 1,2,3.) against the prevailing land tenure system (kothi) in which rural dalit were suffering from extreme economic exploitation. He presented a bill in the state assembly aimed to prevent exploitation in the form of malpractices by the money lenders. His successful agitation against maharwatan emancipated a large section of the rural poor from virtual serfdom.

Dr.Ambedkar was a strong proponent of land reform and for a prominent role for the state in economic development .Doc. Ambedkar stressed the need for thoroughgoing land reform ,nothing that smallness or largeness of an agricultural holding is not determined by its physical extent alone but by the intensity of cultivation as reflected in the amounts of productive investment made on the land and the amounts of all other inputs used including labour .While defining the ideal land holding his stand point was consumption and not production .

Dr. Ambedkar argued that the solution to the agrarian question ' lies not in increasing size of farms ,but in having intensive cultivation that is employing more capital and more labour on the farms such as we have ” . He was deeply concerned with the emphasis on small fragmented and uneconomic holding as the primary reason for decline of agricultural development. He deliberately looked at increasing the productivity of lands, as the economic nature of land, in his view, is not dependant on its size but on productivity, applied inputs etc.

The remedy for the ills of agriculture is not primarily dependant on small holding but on capital and capital goods .Industrialisation is a natural and powerful remedy to it. Rural India’s needs still haven’t been met and this is only due to the discontinuation of simultaneous functioning of industrial development and land reform ”.

Nationalisation of land and collective farming

After observing the unequal holding and persistence of tenancy with unfair rents and uncertain tenures, by 1947’ Ambedkar came out with radical solution of nationalisation of land and collective farming. He felt that neither consolidation of holding nor tenancy legislation contributes for improving agriculture productivity .Moreover; these measures cannot helps in solving the persistent problems of landless labours and small farmers. He suggested nationalisation of entire agriculture land with collective farming as the solution for the ills be the state obligation to supply capital necessary for agriculture as well as industry .Ambedkar’s scheme suggested that agriculture should be the state of Industry .

Agriculture should be organised on the following lines

- (1) The state should be divide the land acquired into farms of standard size and let out the farms for cultivation to residents of the village to tenants (made up group of families) These tenants may Cultivate the land on the following Condition
 - (a) The farm should be cultivated as a collective farm;
 - (b) The farm should be cultivated in accordance with rules and direction issued by the government.
 - (C) The tenant should share among themselves in the manner prescribed the produce of the farm left after the payment of charge liveable on the farm;
- (2) The land should be let out to villages without any distinction of caste or creed and in such a manner that there should be no landlord, no tenant no landless labourer.
- (3) It should be the obligation of the state to finance the cultivation of the collective farms by way of supply of water, draught, animals, manure seeds etc. In order to increase the agricultural output .
- (4) The state should be entitled;
 - (a) To levy the following charges on the produce of the farm:
 - (i) A portion for land revenue
 - (ii) A portion to pay the debenture holders ; from land acquired ,
 - (iii) A portion to pay for the use of capital goods supplied and to prescribe penalties against tenants, who break the conditions of tenancy by wilfully neglecting to make the best use of the means of cultivation offered by the state or otherwise work prejudicially to the scheme of the collective farming.

Ambedkar proposed that the scheme should be brought into operation as early as possible but in no case shall the period extend beyond the tenth year from the date of the constitution coming into operation. It is a different matter that the Indian parliament and entrenched landlord class was not ready to take to this path.

Low capital formation

In view of Ambedkar, capital arises from saving and that saving is possible where there is surplus. In fact no surplus is possible in Indian agriculture because in spite of the vastness of land under tillage, a large agriculture population with the lowest proportion of land in actual cultivation meant that a large part of agricultural population remained idle instead of performing any sort of productive labour. The economic efforts of this idle labour is that it creates tremendous amount of pressure on land. This enormous pressure is the main reason of the sub division of land resulting in the increasing rural area of the country.

Ambedkar persuasively argued in his 1918 article that the solution to rural stress is rapid Industrialisation: In short, strange as it may seem, industrialisation of India is the soundest remedy for the agricultural problem of India. The cumulative effect of industrialisation, namely a lessening pressure (of surplus labour) and an increasing amount of capital and capital goods will forcibly create the economic necessity of enlarging the holding. Not only this, but Industrialisation. By destroying the premium on land, will give rise to few occasions for its sub-division and fragmentation. Industrialisation is a natural and powerful remedy.

It is important to remember that Ambedkar wrote these lines at the time when India had suffered famines at least ones every decade between 1860 and 1910, which sometimes led to rural revolts against colonial rule. The main argument made in 1918 was repeated in the 1936 manifesto of the Ambedkarite Independent Labour party; the principal means of helping the agriculturist and making agriculture more productive consist in the industrialisation of the province. The purpose of the present study was to understand the life of Dr. Bhim Rao Ramji Ambedkar, who was born on 14 April 1891 and died on 6 December, 1956. He was a noted scholar, husband, father, economist, law minister and architect of Indian Constitution. He is one of the prominent leaders of Marginalized groups and fought for the rights of all the women in society. His idea of 'Educate, Agitate and Organize' raised public consciousness specially in Dalit people and his continuous challenge against legitimacy of Orthodox Hindu social order bring a revolutionary effort to empower Marginalized groups and women empowerment and promoting equality through the idea of Reservation against the practice of untouchability in Indian nation. The aim was to explore and describe the life events of Ambedkar through the lens of Erikson's psycho-social development theory and includes other psychological perspectives as well. The life of Ambedkar was selected purposely based on the value, objective, and interest of the researcher.

Keywords- Reservation, Hindu Social Order, Women empowerment.

Life stories- Origin and Evolution

Dr Ambedkar, the architect of 'Constitution of India' gave shape and direction towards a collective path to democracy, equality and social justice for all people. His ideas are broadly defined and for the people to live with respect and dignity. The vision of Ambedkar, was not only about reconstruction of the nation but also centred to democratic republic of India. The aims were to create the spaces of social integration and social equality for all in diverse society especially, in hierarchical unjust society. His thoughts were based on the struggle and ideas on social justice in India.

Dr Ambedkar was born on 14 April 1891, Mhow (presently in Madhya Pradesh). There are many life stories which affected the growing up years and later stages of the life cycle of Ambedkar. The recognition that Ambedkar belonged to the Mahar caste has always been a part of his story. Ambedkar lived in those times where people from depressed castes were considered untouchables and were seen as pollutants in society openly. The notion of untouchability affected Ambedkar from childhood to late adulthood hence, throughout the life cycle. His pivotal role in annihilation of the caste system brought a change and equality for people at margins and women as well. There are many major books authored by him that are available in public. There is a Museum in New Delhi on Dr Bhimrao Ambedkar which also provides a lot of information about his life biography, volumes and speeches happened throughout his life. Lots of information on Ambedkar is available online and in public spheres as well. The contribution of B. R. Ambedkar was not hidden from anyone but there is a need to specifically remember his contribution for Social Justice, education and women rights. In this paper my aim is to talk about significant life events in history that played a role and turning points in Ambedkar life. Through the lens of Eriksonian approach, author insists that Ambedkar's inner agency can't be separated from the outer world i.e., his environment. Outer world as space histories embodied with subjective experiences of coming as a Dalit.

As Erikson (1958) describes, the Historical event plays a pivotal role in making the identity and mention that human nature can more understand conflict embedded in varied situations. People move back and forth in search of who I am.

In his autobiography, Waiting for a Visa (2014), Ambedkar described many significant narrative accounts based on his own experiences and individual experiences of being labelled as ‘untouchables’. These accounts were brief, lucid, and expressive. This autobiography is written to explain what is untouchability and its practices. It is the original writing of Ambedkar after his return from Europe and Ambedkar and later published in his Vol. 12: writing and speeches. It is visible that his journey and path engaged in fighting against caste-based discrimination.

Family of origin

In the first chapter one, Ambedkar clearly recalls one significant memory which is associated with the journey of his childhood. In 1901, when he was nine-year-old talks about his family dynamics. Loss of his mother in Satara made him dependent on his aunt for food. She herself was suffering with body illness. For survival, hunger drives were controlled by food (Palau) made by four children including him so that they won't get late in school. They received a letter from his father to come to Koregaon for summer vacation. His father was far away from them doing a job as cashier in Koregaon. Due to some reason the letter that mentioned their arrival didn't reach his father.

His eyes looked for his father or servant so that somebody could pick them for home. He expressed that they were all well-dressed at that time. Station master initially recognized them as Brahmin but later when they expressed that they were Mahar, he excluded them with his unpleasant voice and taunts. Later, a Tonga carrier agreed to give them a cart to run in exchange for double money but denied sitting along with them in that tonga and preferred to walk along the tonga. They started to drive ‘Tonga’ but felt ostracized due to caste identity from which Ambedkar identified himself since childhood. It was undeniably upsetting for a child to experience the change in somatic expression of identity recognition in terms of ‘touched – untouched’.

Psychologically, Erikson focuses on social barriers which try to stop individuals to create their positive identity. Here, individuals struggle to form their positive identities where it was long denied in society (Erikson, 1985). Here, it clearly shows that caste identity is dual construct- social as well as psychological. Erikson perspective analyses the individual dilemma to accept or create identities while going through psycho-social Moratorium where, time period or space given by social world to individual particularly youth to decide or try out roles offered by socio-cultural milieu Erikson (1968). In this context, humiliation was based on caste-based exclusion at the Parsi inn employed in the princely state of Baroda. As Ambedkar (1993) states:

Instantly I saw a dozen angry looking, tall, sturdy Parsis, each armed with a stick, coming towards my room. I realised that they were not fellow tourists and they gave proof of it immediately. They lined up in front of my room and fired a volley of questions. "Who are you ? Why did you come here ? How dare you take a parsi name ? You scoundrel ! You have polluted the Parsi inn ! " I stood silent. I could give no answer. (Ambedkar 1993, p.678).

This lived experience of social exclusion based on hegemonic social milieu enabled him to assert his human agency and identification with one's own experiences which are being targeted and at harm by society. It denied his ability and presence as a human being with dignity and worth.

Evident Historical Violence and Tough Experiences

His lived experiences highlights the historical trauma that can be described as 'emotional and psychological wounds across generations throughout life span in time and space represents massive group trauma (Elkins et al.,2011, p.283). The phenomenological experience of historical trauma can be visible in further chapters as well- 'abusive traumatic experience of 'Bhangi Boy', account of refusal of basic need 'water' and denial of treatment to women particularly belong to untouchable communities. These instances are full fledged evidence of existence of caste discrimination by upper caste (Brahmins, Kstriyas and Vaishyas) which is so deeply rooted in the core of personality of Caste Hindus and later it leads to the development of narcissist individual who consciously as well as unconsciously transmit their regressive thoughts to their children through regressive rearing practices. It not only ignores the basic needs and sense of belongingness (Maslow,1943) but also denies the intellect and recognition of 'Untouchable' (Shudra and Ati-Shudra) as a human entity having life. It is very pivotal to explain how intellect and value of the human mind having dignified designation was ignored by perpetrators as they labelled him as a 'Bhangi boy'. Similarly, in this journey of identification of his own self Ambedkar (1993) recounts:

The Karkun contemptuously asked, "Who are you?" I replied, "Sir, I am a Harijan. He said, Go away, stand at a distance. How dare you stand so near me! You are in office, if you were outside I would have given you six kicks.... he headman of the village was particularly hostile. Once he had said, Your fellows, your father, your brother are sweepers who sweep the village office, and you want to sit in the office as our equal? Take care, better give up this job!..... Addressing the Ravana (village servant) he said, "Who allowed this dirty dog of a Bhangi to sit on the chair?" The Ravana unseated me and took away the chair from me. I sat on the ground. (Ambedkar,1993, p.689).

Further, he observed that the negligence of needs such as the requirement of medical care to the women who were untouchable were ignored on the basis of caste system. Ambedkar's contribution towards women empowerment is responsible for the change in social-economic and political status of women in the current scenario. He also states that the progress of society can be measured only with the progress of its women.

This paper also throws light on creation of positive identities through assertive position which Ambedkar took for Dalit community as a whole. Ambedkar was a noted scholar, husband, father, economist, law minister and architect of Indian Constitution. He is one of the prominent leaders of Marginalized groups and fought for the rights of all the women in society. His idea of 'Educate, Agitate and Organize' raised public consciousness specially in Dalit people and his continuous challenge against legitimacy of Orthodox Hindu social order bring a revolutionary effort to empower marginalized groups and women empowerment by promoting equality through the idea of Reservation against the practice of untouchability in Indian nation. Identity processes go through negative stereotypes and beliefs based on oppressor group ideology. Fanon (1965) also psychologically interpreted oppression as not only structural but also internalized deeply. The oppressed groups internalize the negative perception of upper caste groups and it shapes their identity construction processes. Similarly, Social Identity theory (Tajfel & Turner,1986, p.9) gives insight about perceived membership based on social group. Ambedkar belonged to the Mahar community, predominantly considered as a Scheduled caste. Internalized oppression can clearly be noticeable in each incidence which Ambedkar dealt with and resisted.

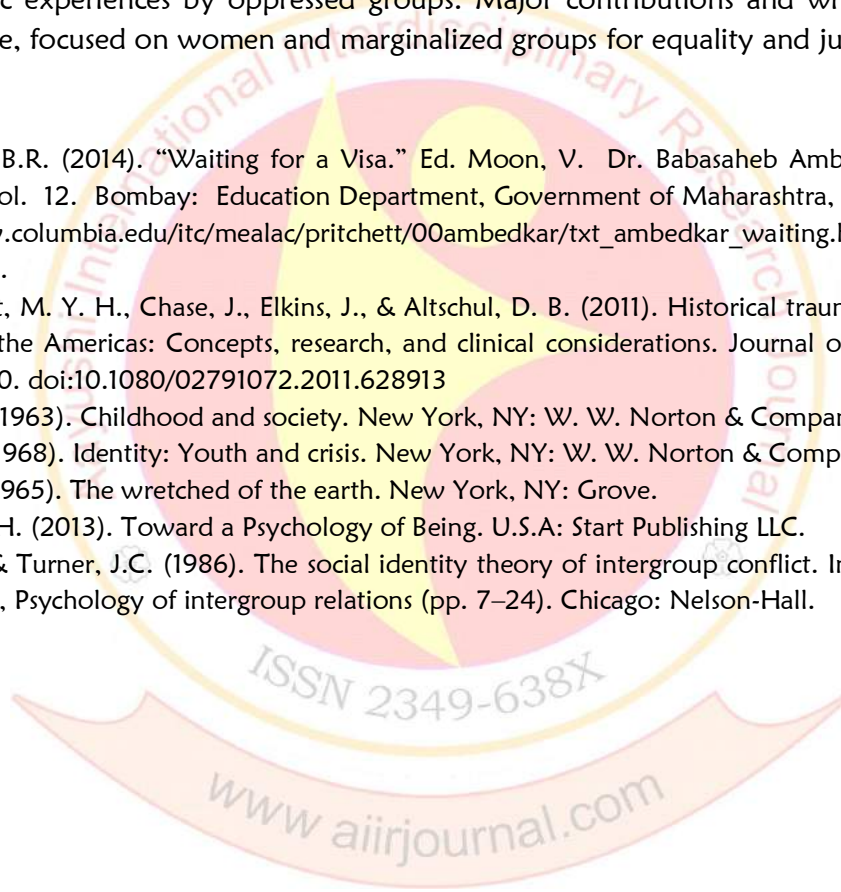

Despite the illegality of caste-based discrimination in contemporary India, it is observed that there might be a little change in economic condition of 'Scheduled caste' but caste atrocities still exist in form at diverse spaces- campus and job recruitments. Sometimes they are (in)visible for all. Ambedkar himself, had courage to offer resistance against caste-based discrimination as it is quite noticeable in his autobiography and writings & speeches. The caste atrocities on daily basis are still being resisted and now vulnerable communities have developed resilience as they are speaking out through their Dalit movement, memoir, seminar, conferences and Dalit literature festival in public spheres by following the path lead by Babasaheb Ambedkar.

Conclusion

This paper is an attempt to understand identity development from Erikson's approach which is influenced by social life and culturally manifested. The construction of inner agency affected by the historical traumatic experiences by oppressed groups. Major contributions and writings of Ambedkar are evident at large, focused on women and marginalized groups for equality and justice for all.

Dr. Ambedkar's Perspective on Social Justice

Takshashila Jadhav

Assistant Professor

Abstract:

Social Justice is a balancing wheel between the haves and the have-nots. It is a means to bring equality, harmony and peace in the society. It is one of the biggest issue of the world as from times immemorial attempts have been made across the world to sustain peace by fostering social justice in the society but despite repeated and continuous efforts by UN it still remains a distant dream. In India the importance of social justice was realized after Independence and is thus integrated in the constitution. This article makes an attempt to delve into the different perspectives of social justice given by Dr. Ambedkar, the chief architect of Indian constitution and relate the relevance of his perspectives of social justice in present context.

Key words- Social justice, peace, constitution, caste system, discrimination.

Concept of Social Justice-

Social justice is quite comprehensive and multidimensional concept which is viewed differently by the scholars of law, philosophy and political science. Social Justice concerns about the benefits and burden in the society as it results in major social institutions- property, systems, public organizations etc. On the other hand it deals with the matters concerning people's right and their protection through legal system.

Social Justice has different connotations it is based on aggregative and distributive principles. The former concerns on the total amount of good enjoyed by a particular group where as the former focuses on the share of good enjoyed by each individual in the society. In this context the latter is much just concept of social justice. Here the distributive principle not only stands for material good, but it also refers to individual state of mind ex- happiness, needs, desires, satisfaction etc. It also can refer to distribution of resources like good food, clean drinking water, safe houses, living wages, wealth, education etc. In this sense Social justice is based on the distributive principles of Justice.

In Modern times there emerged a new dimension to justice which was opposed to distributive form of justice this new dimension focused on individual and social recognition which plays important role in holistic development of the personality and justice shouldn't be confined only to the distribution of wealth or resources. According to this new dimension of justice it is important to understand the nature of justice existent in the society for just and fair division of resources and recognition of the individuals of the society. According to Iris Young 'distributional injustice directly comes out of the social structures, cultural beliefs and institutional contexts. "If distributional differences are constituted, in part, by social, cultural, economic and political processes, any examination of justice needs to include discussions of the structures, practices, rules, norms, language and symbols that mediate social relations." (Iris (Young, Justice and Politics of Difference, Princeton, NJ: Princeton University Press, 1990, p.22.)

Thus aim of justice is to foster equality in the society by considering equity and granting equal opportunities to all for development irrespective to caste, creed, gender, religion, region, sexual orientation, power, position and wealth and to establish a balance between the haves and the have nots.

Social Justice and Indian Society:

Indian society is a unique society, where people with multiple religion, languages, culture and traditions co-exist. The ancient Indian society is based on Hindu Philosophy of the dominant religion Hinduism. It was the brooding ground of injustice, and unequal opportunities where people were discriminated on the basis of Caste as inscribed in Manusmriti' - a rule book of ancient Hindu society wherein different code of conducts were fixed to people belonging to different castes and gender of the society. The privileges were enjoyed only by the upper castes leaving two lower castes i.e, shudra and ati-shudra's constituting nearly about 80% of the total population oppressed and depressed. Social Justice in India came in true sense with the making of the constitution which is based on just and equal opportunities to all irrespective of class, caste, race, color, gender, religion or region.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Concept of Social Justice:

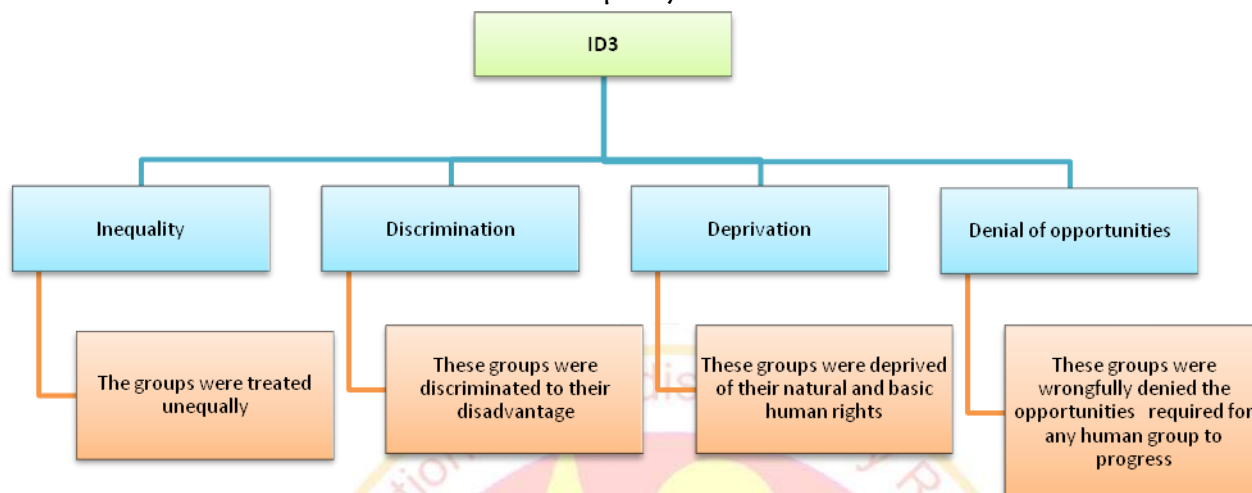

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar a learned man was fully aware of the patterns and problems of Indian society. He considered social justice as the true basis of patriotism and nationalism. His theory of social justice was different from that of the Hindu varna system where in the praxis of the power rested in the hands of the upper caste. The doctrine of Ambedkar's concept of social justice was based on unity and equality of all human beings, respect for the weak and lowly, dignity for the living, abolition of gender and caste discrimination, good health and well being for all. He believed that opportunity for development should be accessible by all citizens equally, opportunity to education should be the right of all and education should be looked as the tool for empowerment and not as means of discrimination. His aim was to remove man-made inequalities and establish a society where everyone will be treated at par without discrimination of any sort. Back then, there was no public opinion to condemn it nor was there any heed from the police or judiciary to keep a check on it because they all favored the Hindus and would not like to go against them as their benefit lay in taking the sides of the oppressors. Dr. Ambedkar openly condemned the Indian Society based on graded inequality where the means of elevation were for some and degradation for others. Dr. Ambedkar believed that for changing this situation there should be political participation of the lower caste and this could come with political democracy but he also knew that political democracy will be meaningless until and unless there is social and economic democracy.

Inducing social justice in such an unequal society was quite a difficult task, Dr. Ambedkar found a solution for uplifting the age old destitute and deprived section of the society in the form of Reservations to foster some kind of equity in the unjust, stratified and unequal, society. He knew that his mission of bringing dignity to the undignified and forgotten cannot be left to people's mercy being fully aware that social justice is no charity but right of every individual he gave a legal dimension to it, article 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 29, and 30 talks about fostering equity, equality and dignity to all individuals in all walks of life without discrimination on the basis of gender, race, color, caste and place of residence.

If traced the origin of Reservation it is not a new concept for India. Reservation has always been an integral system of the society. The only difference is in ancient India it was for the affluent upper caste people of the society in education, jobs, politics, private sectors, but after the formulation of the constitution it is designated to exercise equity in the society, to increase the equality of opportunities to the destitute, marginalized, deprived and the needy section of Indian population which comprises of SC, ST, OBC, NT, DNT backward communities of the Indian societies.

The basis on which the criteria for providing reservations in India to OBC,SC,ST groups is same as the blacks in America. It is based on the ID3 policy as under-

Constitutional policy of Reservation based on the concept of social justice is not just followed in India but in 75 other countries of the world. In America it is so much ingrained in the society that it is followed in Sports, Education, Employment, and in Hollywood too. Not only is it followed in government sectors but also in non-government corporate sectors/private sectors.

Dr.Ambedkar's perspectives of Social Justice in present context:

Ambedkar's struggle to induce social justice in Indian society has severed instrumental to raise the standard of living of these depressed sections of the society. It is because of Dr. Ambedkar's continuous and persistent efforts that the members of these castes have aspired to the positions of Doctors, Teachers, Professors; The Indian Administrative services (IAS) Indian Revenue Services (IRS), members of Parliament (MPs) members of legislative assemblies (MLAs), Police service from these castes.

However Ambedkar's effort to foster social Justice in Indian society has often discredited and the Affirmative Action Policy too is looked down it has become an eyes ore to some of the upper castes who cannot digest seeing some of the depressed caste members, who were confined to the occupations of cleaning the dirt of the elite castes are now leading a respectable life. The common criticism that these castes have to bear are- "they are encroachers on much better and deserving candidates of upper castes on the dignified positions in government sectors", "they lack caliber", "they have no intellect" etc. All these assumptions holds no water as time and again there have researches conducted to test the efficiency of the lower castes people in government sectors like Railways and educational sectors. To quote one of the famous researches "Does Affirmative Action Reduce Productivity? A Case Study Of The Indian Railways" undertaken by Ashwini Deshpande (Delhi School of Economics, University of Delhi) and Thomas E. Weisskopf (Department of Economics, University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, MI 48109, USA), this case study was conducted from 1980 to 2002. The findings showed that there is no evidence for the common accusations which the lower castes has to face because of societal thinking that the increase in representation of the members of marginalized communities in jobs comes at the cost of reduced productive efficiency. The report on the contrary speaks about some instances where the opposite is true. They found that in order to prove their caliber the lower caste people employed in Railways do extra work than required in the same salary as their higher caste counterparts without complain.

In education sector the lack of academic performance of SC/STs is more due to the educational gap in the caste system.(Pandey, P & Pandey, S. Survey at an IIT Campus Shows How Caste Affects Students' Perceptions, survey from 2015 to 2016, vol.53, issue no 9, March 2018.). However the situation seems to be changing many of the reserved castes people don't want to avail reservations and want to achieve good jobs and career on their own merit. But four women aspirants of civil service examination were thrown out of the race when the final list of MPSC interview round contained only upper-caste women, excluding the reserved class candidates who scored more than them. This kind of discrimination from the government sector is nothing but the continuation of the parochialism which is observed in the society. (Pune Mirror, Dec 16, 2017)

The forward castes are often against the Reservation policy as because of it they lose some of their portions of enjoyment in Education and Employment sector. As they cannot publicly state the reasons for their opposition, the intellectual argument extended by forward castes against reserved category is that reservations will adversely affect the pool and discourage the meritorious and eligible candidates. Such kind of misconstruing is done by the upper-caste intellects to suit their convenience at the expense of the deprived reserved castes.

Even today when we give a considerable thought of social justice in Indian society then many incidences of heinous torture due to caste based reservations pops up. Still there are pockets of masses who believe in manu's discriminatory policy and considers their duty to execute ferocious incidents of gruesome killings of backward castes. In sophisticated urban areas of high dignity such as IIT's Rohit Vemula was a victim of caste based discrimination a Ph.D aspirant killed himself for repeatedly being mocked by his professors and peers for hailing from backward caste (Vajpeyi Ananya, 2016). Another recent incident Payal Tadvai a M.D Gynecologist aspirant fell prey to this vicious caste system. Three of her seniors harassed for being hailed from a ST background after a case being run for a year all the three were released Scott free by supreme court (Legal Correspondent, 2020). If we go to the rural areas the recent Hatras case wherein the girl was brutally raped and her body parts mutilated just to show the wrath of upper-castes towards the SC family for aspiring economically (Ismat Ara, Oct 2020). In another terrifying incident where three members of Dalit family, Sanjay Jadhav, his wife and son Sunil were killed and their mutilated limbs were scattered around the field and a well in Pathadi Amhednagar district, Maharashtra on October 2014 (Menon, 2014). There was another case of this sort the Khairlanji (vishwanathan, 2010). The inter-caste marriage and aftermath of hour-killing the case of Dharampuri (Teltumbde, 2012) are the incidents which keeps nudging us about the manu's code and feudal and patriarchal system who likes to see their supremacy on the resources and enjoy the elite social status which comes to them because of being hailing from the dominant castes in the society. The caste based hate and atrocities have increased manifold which result in more frustration and suppression of the age old vulnerable backward castes.

Conclusion:

Dt Babasaheb Ambedkar's dream of fostering social Justice in Indian Society by abolishing the discriminatory caste system with just constitution still remains a distant dream. Efforts should be made to propagate the right education of equality, equity, fraternity and liberty on which the society can stand upright. Ambedkar's teaching should be imbibed and imparted in true spirit to empower the masses. It helps us to see through the perceived reality and sift the untruth from truth and help us to realize that until justice is granted we have to keep faith, stand for our rights and never to return until we win our rights. Dr. Ambedkar's final words of advice "educate, agitate and organize" are most applicable in present context as it was then for dignified living and socially just co-existence.

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar: Champion of Women's rights: A Sociological perspective

Dr. Manjula S. V.

Abstract

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar is one of the main women's activist chiefs and ladies' privileges advocates in the country. "I measure the advancement of a local area by the level of progress which ladies have accomplished" Babasaheb had said. Notwithstanding this, his women's activist commitments are regularly disregarded and denied. Indeed, even Indian Feminists regularly limits his work to the advancement of Dalit ladies' lives. This invisibilization of Ambedkar and his all-consuming purpose is indicative of upper rank women's activist developments. Ambedkar is possibly called upon when upper-rank ladies address and of Dalit ladies, past that Babasaheb's work in pushed to the edges. We will be better soon and our advancement will be significantly sped up if male training is convinced next to each other with female schooling" are the expressions of youthful Ambedkar, during his examinations at New York which came out while composing a letter to his dad's companion. Dr. Ambedkar. The decided contender and a profound researcher have put forth huge attempts to lead the general public on the way of Liberty, Equality and Fraternity. He was the main Indian to separate the hindrances in the method of progress of ladies in India. He set out the solid establishment by systematizing the basic Civil Code for Hindus and different areas of the Indian culture. The current paper endeavors to feature Dr. Ambedkar's view on ladies rights in India and its importance in present situation.

Introduction

In ancient India, women appreciated a high position however steadily their position deteriorated into only objects of delight intended to fill certain need. They lost their individual personality and surprisingly their fundamental common liberty. Strengthening is a diverse, multi-dimensional and complex idea. Ladies' strengthening is a cycle wherein ladies acquire more noteworthy portion of authority over assets material, human and scholarly like information, data, thoughts and monetary assets like cash - and admittance to cash and command over dynamic in the home, local area, society end country, and to acquire 'power'. As indicated by the Country Report of Government of India, "Strengthening implies moving from a place of implemented weakness to one; of force". Yet, from days of yore, the ladies in this place that is known for our own were treated as such a thing. Her setting in the general public was not at standard with other people. She has no rights. Dr. Ambedkar - the extraordinary warrior and a profound scholar has put forth critical attempts on the way of freedom. He was the principal Indian reformer who roots out the obstructions in the method of progression of Indian culture all in all and of ladies specifically. Over all he was a pioneer of social equity. To get every one of these objectives he set out the establishment of social equity by consolidating numerous elements or issues into Indian constitution through its different articles for the Hindus and different areas of the general public; extraordinarily for in reverse networks and for under favored classes. He began his development in 1920. He raised his voice against the Hindu social request and social framework through his prestigious diary Mook Nayak in 1920 and Bahiskrit Bharat in 1927.

Practically through its all issues he talked on the sex equity, ladies instruction and uncovered the issues identified with ladies and other discouraged class. He was additionally a solid supporter of family arranging measures for ladies in Bombay Legislative Assembly. Ambedkar was an illustration of motivation of numerous classes of society. He went through his entire time on earth for the advancement of Indian culture just as ladies and other under favored segments. He was additionally included to uncover the underhanded practices like prostitutions.

Root Cause of the Low Status of Women in Indian Society

At first, ladies used to appreciate opportunity, self-governance and rights in Indian culture. Ladies were viewed as significant in the pre-Vedic period when social orders were discovered to be matriarchal. With the coming of the Aryan or Vedic culture, the matriarchal society got supplanted by male centric culture. Be that as it may, ladies actually delighted in independence and variegated rights and approached a wide range of learning. They had critical tasks to carry out in strict services and in picking their life accomplices. They could consider the Vedas and set out to abrogate a marriage or go for a remarriage. Widow Remarriage was additionally reasonable. Nonetheless, the situation of ladies weakened in the later Vedic period as a result of sexual orientation separation. Socio-monetarily, ladies were cornered and denied of essential common liberties. They were without self-rule and property rights. The weakening in their position what began in the later phase of the Vedic time frame got bothered by the burden of tough standards on them by our lawgiver Manu.

Manu, in his book Manusmriti, 'classified every one of the social disasters as friendly ethos rather than their annihilation' (Kumar, 2016, p. 214). Affected by Manusmriti, ladies needed to confront different hardships in issue of gaining property, training and examining strict sacred texts. The thought that ladies ought not be given opportunity and be made docile to male mastery got profound established. The Muslim attack of our country and acts of neglect, for example, purdah system, polygamy and Talak further demolished the circumstance. The British Raj in India introduced new expects Indian ladies. Instructed and edified social reformers endeavored to purge the Indian culture liberating it from the shackles of social shades of malice.

Objectives, Methods and Materials: The current paper is an undertaking to feature Dr. Ambedkar's see on women rights and issues in pre and post autonomous India and the importance of his thoughts in present political and social situation of India. Optional information has been gathered from web, newspapers, distributed papers and books.

Dr. B.R Ambedkar towards the Empowerment of Indian Women

The tasks of rank both at the fundamental level and at the working of man controlled society, the developing standing/class partition in women's activist political talk makes Ambedkar's view on ladies' abuse, social popular government, station and Hindu social request and reasoning, important to current Indian women's activist reasoning. In spite of the fact that Ambedkar substantiated, himself to be a virtuoso and was known as an incredible scholar, savant, progressive, law specialist – second to none, productive essayist, social dissident and pundit and stepped like a giant in the Indian sociopolitical scene unto his passing, his considerations never got satisfactory consideration in the over-simplification of Indian culture since he was conceived as a distant.

Hinduism

The facts demonstrate that incredible men don't request rights they perform their responsibilities. In any case, for Ambedkar, this is not really evident in regard of the overall masses. The privileges of the upper positions are naturally ensured, yet not of the helpless classes. The helpless masses should have explicit rights; else they would be abused and gone against by the sharp and canny people. The Hindu ideal of obligations under the Varna-Vyavastha has grown uniquely as methods for misuse and persecution. It is a framework which stifles, paralyses and disabled individuals from which valuable action, and furthermore forestalls them structure erativity. Ambedkar gave some vital talks in the Round Table gathering. He set the view point of the discouraged classes and argued for Dominion Status. His discourses made a decent impression upon the British public. He served on various significant sub-panels and arranged plan of political shields far the securities of discouraged classes later on constitution of a self-overseeing India. Ambedkar additionally pushed the prompt presentation of grown-up establishment.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was chosen for the Constituent Assembly of India by the individuals from West Bengal Legislative Assembly however he was crushed in Bombay. He was chosen on the on the Drafting Committee and later delegated its administrator. Last expressions of exhortation to you are instructed, upset and coordinate, have confidence in yourself. With equity on our side I don't perceive how we can free our fight to me involves delight. You should cancel your servitude yourselves. Try not to depend for its abrogation upon god or a superman. He likewise proposes techniques for liberation from abuse. He discovered their liberation in Buddhist qualities, which advances correspondence, confidence and training. Ambedkar accepts that Buddha approached ladies with deference and love and never attempted to debase them like Manu did. He showed ladies Buddha Dharma and strict way of thinking. Ambedkar refers to ladies like Vishakha, Amrapali of Visali, Gautami, Rani Mallika, Queen of Prasenajith who moved toward Buddha, as confirmations of Buddha's treatment of ladies as equivalents. (Paul, 1993: 383-84) it was mostly the Hindu culture and social traditions, which remained in the progress of ladies' strengthening.

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar the Champion of Women's Rights

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar advocated the reason for ladies just as the hopeless situation of Schedule Castes and Scheduled Tribes all through his profession. He talked about various issues of Indian ladies and looked for their answers in Bombay Legislative Council, in the Viceroy's Assembly as the director of the Drafting Committee and furthermore in the Parliament as the main Law Minister of Independent India. Dr. Ambedkar was confirmed as selected individuals from the Bombay Legislative Council on eighteenth Feb., 1927. He encouraged Indians to partake in the universal conflict for the British Government. His contentions on the Maternity Benefit Bill and on Birth Critical were very applicable to perceive the poise of ladies. He energetically upheld the Maternity Bill.

His contention was – "It is in light of a legitimate concern for the country that the mother should get a specific measure of rest during the pre-natal time frame and furthermore in this manner and the guideline of the Bill depends totally on that standard". "That being so Sir, I will undoubtedly concede that the weight of this should be to a great extent borne by the Government, I am set up to concede this reality as a result of the protection of individuals' government assistance is essential worry of the Government. Furthermore, in each country, you will track down that the Government has been exposed to a specific measure of accuse of respect to maternity advantage." Ladies began taking an interest in satyagrahs and furthermore dispatched ladies' relationship for unapproachable ladies for spreading instruction and mindfulness among them. In the Mahad Satyagraha for sanctuary section in 1927, even standing Hindues took an interest. Shandabai Shinde was one such member. In the Satyagraha it was chosen to consume the Manusmriti, which embarrassed ladies, and shudras. In the show after the huge fire of the Manusmriti in excess of fifty Women took part. Ambedkar tended to the gathering from there on and educated ladies to change their style regarding wearing saress, wear lightweight trimmings, not to eat meat of dead creatures. It was upper station ladies like Tipnis who showed them legitimate method of wearing sarees. At the All India Depressed Classes Women's Conference held at Nagpur on twentieth July, 1940 Dr. Ambedkar underscored that there couldn't be any advancement without women.

Constitutional Rights and Women:

In Indian Constitution, there are few articles exist that help the women of Indian society to improve their position and to compete with their male counterparts. For example Article 14 – All are equal in the eyes of law and equally protected by the law. It means equal rights and opportunities in political, economic and social spheres. Article 15 prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex. Article 15(3) enables positive discrimination in favor of women. Article 16 mentions there shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office without any discrimination on the basis of religion, caste, creed and sex. Article 24 prohibits the employment of children below the age of 14 years in factories, mines or in any other hazardous employment. Article 39 and 39(d) state Equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work. As per article 41 the state shall guarantee within its economic limits to all the citizens, the right to work, to education and public assistance in certain cases. Article 42 the state makes provision for Human conditions of work and maternity relief. Under article 44, the state provides a uniform Civil Code to all the citizens throughout the territory of India. Article 46 – The state to promote with special care, the educational and economic interests of weaker section of people and to protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation. Article 47 – The state to raise the level of nutrition and standard of living of its people and the improvement of public health and so on. Article 51 (A) (C) – Fundamental duties to renounce practices, derogatory to the dignity of women. Article 243D (3), 243T (3) & 243R (4) provides for allocation of seats in the Panchayati Raj System.

Conclusion

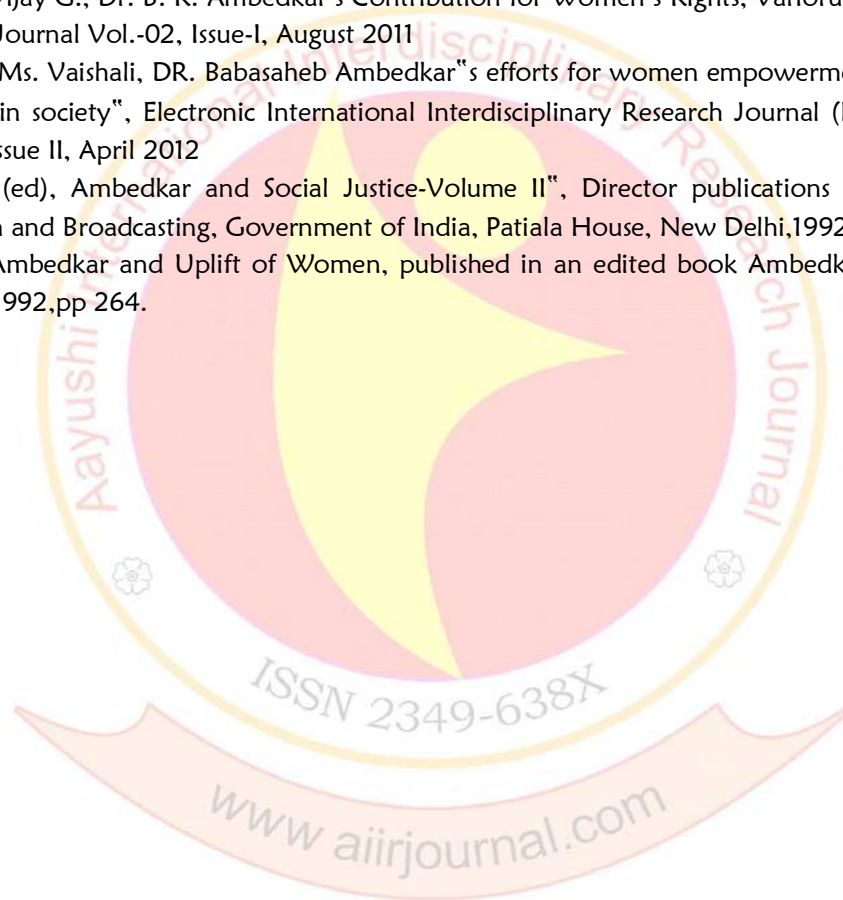

It might without a doubt be referenced here that B.R. Ambedkar was a way producer of all the ladies independent of religion, station, doctrine, sexual orientation and so forth He brought another pattern for uprising the ladies through his musings and convictions. Not just ladies every one individuals of India should grateful to him as a result of his colossal and never-ending steps of formative works. He likewise discussed the Muslim ladies about wearing shroud, their strict customs and relationships. Remembering the significance of Ambedkar's sees towards Indian culture, the at that point executive of India Pandit Jawaharlal Neheru said, "Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was an image of rebel against all abusive highlights of Hindu society". In present day setting, Ambedkar and his considerations on society dependent on equity are yet to be acknowledged for reproducing Indian culture and improving the existence of ladies. B.R. Ambedkar was a warrior for ladies liberation. He battled against a wide range of victimization ladies all through his entire life. Yet at the same time oppression ladies in Indian culture is ignored. So it is our obligation to satisfy the fantasies of Ambedkar for a superior life world of ladies.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar's Contribution to Labour Movement : Welfare of the Labourers in India

Dr. Sharmila Ramteke

Associate Professor

Karve Institute of Social Service Karvenagar, Pune

Abstract:

The conditions of workers were extremely miserable and deplorable before the various laws were enacted. In India before the Independence era some labour leaders have made their valuable contribution for unionising the working class. The history reveals the valuable contribution of our labour leader Dr Ambedkar and his immense efforts of working on different legislations for the protection of all workers including the women. He also thought of the development of workers at workplace by insisting that the employers must educate and train the workers for better skills which would lead to higher productivity. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar framed many laws for women workers in India such as 'Mines Maternity Benefit Act', 'Women Labour Welfare Fund' and others. This paper will bring forward the valuable contribution of Dr Ambedkar in enacting of different laws and his foresight about the welfare of the working class in India.

Keywords: Labour Movement, Labour Laws, Workers, Welfare, Women.

Historical Background of Labour Movement in India:

Labour welfare is the part of social welfare it covers a broader field it means a state of well-being, happiness, satisfaction, conservation and development of human resources. During the industrial development period the labour welfare activities were influenced by the humanitarian principles and partly by the legislation which were then governed by the British era. In this period the welfare of workers working in factories was the concern of the social work the religious leaders or organizations and or the philanthropist work was mostly based on the humanitarian principles. The conditions of workers then were truly deplorable and miserable, as the concept of welfare was not introduced. The workers, children and the women workers had to face severe exploitation by way of long hours of work, absence of safety equipment's bad or no facilities for sanitation where the common features in most of the factories or the work places. The workers in textile mills in Bombay were working in extremely deplorable working conditions. With no facilities for health or safety at the time of working. No timely breaks for lunch or rest, and neither the weekly off. The workers had to work as per the will and wish of the employers as they were at the mercy of these employers. A thought was given by the government to appoint a commission to study the conditions of workers The Mullock Commission was then appointed by the government of Bombay in 1884, to review the working of the Factories Act of 1881. Mr. N.M Lokhande, under his leadership had decided to unite the workers and demand for their rights. He knew that until and unless the workers come together their demands cannot be raised. He had brought together the workers on two different occasions in 1884 and created awareness amongst them that only uniting together could result in favourable conditions of work. He had presented on their behalf a charter of demands to the Commission. Mr. N.M. Lokhande being the founder of Bombay Mill Hands Association the commission was pressurised to accept the demand of weekly holiday. This was the first victory of workers after uniting or coming together, which created a positive impact and also gave rise and strength to the labour movement. Factories (Amendment) Act ,1891 was passed as a result of the recommendations of the Bombay Factory Commission of 1884 and the Factory Labour Commission of 1890.This applied to all factories employing 50 persons or more. This was also the era when other freedom fighters were struggling for the freedom from Britisher. Dr Ambedkar and his movement were fighting for justice and equality, also then untouchability was practiced rampantly in India. Hence his thought and vision for welfare of workers including women prevailed strongly.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar and his Valuable Contribution to India:

The author strongly believes that even when the fight and struggle for worker’s rights and justice was ongoing by other groups or leaders.but the vision of Dr Ambedkar as law minister to frame the laws and include certain conditions compulsorily in favour of workers is praiseworthy. In the 7th session of Indian Labour Conference in New Delhi, November 27, 1942. Dr Ambedkar brought in the 8-hour working day to India, bringing it down from 14 hours. This has been the most important conditions which has been laid down in the Factories act of 1948 and is followed till now. The author is of the opinion that all working class men and women should be grateful towards Dr Ambedkar for his immense contribution towards the labour movement .His foresightedness for the welfare of working class is valuable ,but we do not find this being highlighted in history prominently. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar has framed specific conditions in the laws for women workers in India such as ‘Mines Maternity Benefit Act’, ‘Women Labour Welfare Fund’, ‘Women and Child Labour Protection Act’, ‘Maternity Benefit for Women Labour’, and ‘Restoration of Ban on Employment of Women on Underground Work in Coal Mines Dr Ambedkar’s contribution towards ‘Coal and Mica Mines Provident Fund’ was vital. At that time, Coal industry played an important role in our country’s economy.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar enacted the Coal Mines Safety (Stowing) Amendment Bill for the benefit of the workers on January 31st, 1944. On 8th April 1946, he brought the ‘Mica Mines Labour Welfare Fund’ that helped the workers with housing, water supply, education, entertainment, co-operative arrangements. Further, he set up an advisory committee to advise on important matters arising out of the ‘Labour Welfare Fund’ under the guidance of B P Agarkar which was then promulgated i on January, 1944.

As Labour Member of the Viceroy’s Council, Dr Ambedkar initiated programs to increase the productivity of workers, by providing them with education and important skills required for performing jobs better, health care and maternity leave provisions for women workers. He also set up the ‘Tripartite Labour Council’ in 1942 to safeguard social security measures for the workers, giving equal opportunity to the workers and employers to participate in the formulation of labour policy and strengthening the movement by introducing compulsory recognition of trade unions and worker organizations. The Industrial Dispute Act of 1947 still continues with the Tribunal System – workers, employers & government representatives as suggested to solve the industrial disputes. Labour was placed in the ‘Concurrent List’, ‘Chief and Labour Commissioners’ were appointed, the ‘Labour Investigation Committee’ was formed – credit for all these is undoubtedly to Dr Ambedkar. If there are ‘Employment Exchanges’ in India today, it is because of Dr Ambedkar’s vision. If workers can go on strike and fight for their rights, it is because of Babasaheb Ambedkar – he had clearly recognised the 'Right to Strike' by the workers. On 8th November, 1943 Dr Ambedkar brought the 'Indian Trade Unions (Amendment) Bill' for compulsory recognition of trade unions. Dr Ambedkar was of the opinion that depressed classes should play an important role in the economic development of the country.

The history reveals that Dr Ambedkar visited Jhumritiliya and Konderma in 1944 to observe and understand the conditions of workers in and around the mines. He had approved the maternity benefits for women workers, the labour welfare fund and long hours of working were reduced. In short period of time as a member of Executive Council he had undertaken major steps for the welfare of the working class. This visit had significantly contributed towards the promulgation of the Coal mine labour welfare ordinance in January 1944, which constituted a fund for financing activities to promote the welfare of labour employed in the coal mining industry. Dr Ambedkar played a vital role in increasing the labour welfare fund by doubling levying of tax on the coal brought out. The labour welfare fund was increased and utilised for the safeguarding of the health and safety of the workers. It also took care of drinking water for workers, facility of education, cultural activities for promoting their welfare.

Social Security

Social security for working class was an important aspect which Dr Ambedkar ensured for in those days. His contribution towards social security has been exceptional. He believed that social security was prerequisite to attain social transformation. He laid a strong emphasis on social justice through social security, equality and justice for all human beings. Ambedkar believed that labourers must achieves security through legislation. On 21st February 1946, Dr Ambedkar moved the Factories (Amendment) Bill to further amend the Factories act 1934 for reducing the working hours to 48 hours per week, rate of payment for overtime and provisioning of paid leaves. After scrutinizing by the select committee the historic legislation was passed as advocated by Ambedkar on 4th April 1946.

While addressing the constituent assembly (November 25, 1949), Dr Ambedkar stated: "The consciousness of social security comes to a man when he feels that he is getting his basic rights." As the first law minister of independent India, Ambedkar proposed social security measures for the marginalised, women and factory workers. He believed that the state can help in creating social security for needy people. He got framed many laws for Social Security for workers like The Workmen's Compensation (amendment) Act, The Coal Mines Provident Fund and Bonus Scheme Act, 1948, The Coal Mines Safety (Stowing) Amendment Bill 1944, The Mica Mines Labour Welfare Fund Act, 1946 and specially for women workers in India such as - Mines Maternity Benefit Act, 1941, Women labour welfare fund, Women and child labour protection act, Maternity benefit (later known as Maternity Benefit Act, 1961), Restoration of Ban on Employment of Women on Underground Work in Coal Mines.

For the benefit of workers, he was instrumental in enactment of the Employees State Insurance Act, 1948 to help them with medical care leave and compensation for disablement that could occur during working hours. This act covers the worker and his family members as beneficiaries. The benefits provided under this act are sickness benefit, disablement benefit, dependants benefit, maternity benefit, sickness benefit, funeral expenses and so on. Different procedures have been laid down in the act for availing these benefits

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, in his speech as Member for Labour, at the first session of the Plenary Labour Conference in New Delhi, Monday, September 6 1944 had stated that : "It will not be enough to make industrial development of India as our goal. We shall have to agree that any such industrial development shall be maintained at a socially desirable level. It will not be enough to bend our energies for the production of more wealth in India. We shall have to agree not merely to recognise the basic right of all Indians to share in that wealth as a means for a decent and dignified existence but to devise ways and means to insure him against insecurity.

Dr B.R. Ambedkar the Architect of Indian Constitution:

As well known to us the most valuable contribution of Dr Ambedkar in drafting the Constitution, his thoughts and foresightedness has immensely contributed to the betterment of all citizens the working class and the women in all sectors. The articles stating the welfare and social security based on justice and equality for all

The Constitution of India enshrined a list of Fundamental Rights and Directive Principles of State Policy for the achievement of a social order based on Justice Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity. It is stated in the chapter on Directive Principles that "the state shall strive to promote the welfare of the people by securing and protecting as effectively as it may a social order in which justice, social, economic and political shall inform all the institutions of national life" The need for welfare was emphasized by The Constitution of India in the chapter on Directive Principles of state Policy. The conditions laid down by articles were important to understand as it is the major base which insisted on welfare of all persons and equality in every aspect with justice towards every human being in the country.

Conclusion:

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was a scholar, social reformer, an economist, a jurist powerful advocate of the rights of Dalits and women, chairman of the Constituent Assembly of India, and the country's first law minister. His work and his vision are incomparable apart from many different areas of work as a law minister the most important laws were framed thoughtfully. We as citizens are fortunate today to avail the benefits of his efforts. The laws and also the constitution having laid down the rights to working class had reinforced the implementation. The visionary like Ambedkar the father of Indian Constitution will be remembered and adored by many till the zenith.

Babasaheb Ambedkar: A Great Social And Political Reformer

Swagata Bhattacharya

Sact (Seth Anandram Jaipuria College)
Department Of Political Science Kolkata, West Bengal

Abstract:

Babasaheb Bhimarao Ambedkar is a personality, a name, a great Indian philosopher and the maker of Indian Constitution, is a milestone of the Indian nation. He is one of the architect of the Indian Constitution. His marvelous works and his philosophy enriched Indian polity. Ambedkar focused on poor condition of the oppressed class and tried to protect their rights. He also vocal for rights of the woman. Under the colonial India Ambedkar focused on an alternative way for political mobilization. He firmly expressed his views for the oppressed class specially for the Mahar communities.

First part of my article focused on the concept of social and political reformation under colonial India and next part explain the roll of Ambedkar's on social and political reformation under the colonial period.

Key words: nation, Indian Constitution, Indian polity, Oppressed class, Mahar communities, colonial period, social – political reformation.

Introduction :

The term reformation is very much significant for the human society. Basically, when a society faced several hindrance in different ways and different manners. India faced several challenges under the colonial period. During those days the term reformation allowed with a new essence. The concept of 'reform' or reformation is differ from the concept of revolution. Reform aims to work within existing structures and solve structural problems. On the other hand aims of revolution to dismantle and create new structures. Whereas, reform aims to be gradual and to make tangible changes for members of the community. Social reform is not limited to any specific time period or society, rather it describes the organizing of people to implement gradual changes toward justice. Under the colonial period India faced social and political challenges. To overcome these challenges, Indian philosophers and thinkers tried to reform the Indian society, socially and politically.

A social reform to any attempt that seeks to correct in any injustices in a society. People who are involved in social reforms do so with the aim of improving the condition of life. It is a kind of social movement that aims to make gradual change, or change in certain aspects of society, rather than repaid or fundamental changes. Political reformation also one of the basic dimensions of 19th century. Anti – colonial cultural and ideological hegemony also influenced political reformation in India. Besides that, the British political subjugation and cultural domination, also helped for political reformation during colonial period. Not only the evil causes of colonialism, but also the good components of westernization which influenced political reformation. Liberal thinking, broadness of cultural and religious ideology helped the pathfinder of social political reformer during the colonial period.

Social and political reformation under colonialism gave an other dimension of the Indian struggle movement. Pre independent period not only glorified for our struggle movement but also gave us some basic ideas of socio- political changes of the society. Different political social thinkers and their ideologies, their participation to change the societal curse and their political narratives also enrich this period. There were so many socio – political reformers and thinkers who enrich the colonial period through their ideas and works and immense participation in the freedom struggle. Baba Saheb Ambedkar was one of them, who contributed his whole life under the colonial period and after that.

Early life :

Dr.B.R.Ambedkar stands on a pedestal quite different from other political and social reformers. He re invented the entire notion of anti – untouchability and social reform movement not only in Maharashtra but whole of India. Ambedkar devoted himself for the development of untouchable people. He credited with reconceptualizing the whole notion of emancipating of untouchables in India. Ambedkar’s idea was based on empowerment of the untouchables. His personality exemplifies the unique saga of an untouchable being able to fight the massive social disabilities. Ambedkar flourished himself as an eminent constitutionalist, distinguished parliamentarian, scholar and jurists and above all the leader of the Depressed class. He was born in a Mahar family in Maharashtra on 14th April 1891. Mahars were treated as untouchables by the upper cast Hindus. He suffered all kinds of social humiliation in childhood as well as his subsequent life on account of the stigma of untouchability. He completed his early education at Satra. In his school days he was not allowed to sit with his classmates who belonged upper casts. He successfully completed his matriculation certificate at Elphinstone High School in Bombay. He then enrolled in a scholarship at the prestigious Elphinstone College from where he graduated in 1912 with a B.A. Degree. He secured an M.A. from Coloumbia University in New York and then left in 1916 for London where he was admitted to Grays Inn to study law. He completed his Ph.D. at Coloumbia University. His Ph.D. thesis on the “Evolution of the Provincial Finance in British India”. It was a brilliant contribution to the analysis of colonial economy and politics and to focus anti – colonial economic thought.

As a successful academican Ambedkar choose to settle down as a lawyer in Bombay but as an untouchable found it hard to attract clients. He decided to devote his life to campaign against the evils of cast system and in July 1924 set an association for the welfare of the Ostracized which he hold till 1928. Ambedkar died on 6th December 1956.

Ambedkar as a Social Reformer :

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was known us to be a crusader against cast system. His whole life was full of experience of cast humiliation from childhood days to freedom struggle. He engaged himself as a tireless crusader against the curse of untouchability. He was icon of the Dalit. He expressed his emancipation for cast and liberation. To empower the Depressed class he set up for a separate electorate and separate Dalit party outside of Hinduism. According to Ambedkar empowerment not only the political, it was also social and economic empowerment for the Dalit. He searched for solutions explore strategies for the development of Dalit. Ambedkar fought against upper class rituals and wanted to establish the equal right for lower class people. In his entire life he stood for the protection of Dalit community and tried to expand the socio political economic rights of the lower class people. He introduced a new dimension of emancipation to this particular marginalized section. He organized movement against colonial rules and upper Brahminical society.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar decided to fight against the cast discrimination. He opined that there should be separate electoral system for the untouchables and the other lower communities. Ambedkar began to find ways to reach the people and make them understand draw backs of the prevailing social evils. He published a newspaper named “Mooknayaka” in 1920, with the assistance of Shahaji II, the maharaja of Kolhapur. Ambedkar called a conference for depressed class and his attempt was that to make a direction of consolidating the forces of Depressed class. Under the second decade of nineteenth century Ambedkar achieve some significant incidence like called a meeting on 27th March 1927 at Mahad a Tehsil town in Kankan. On the next day he called a march to the public tank to fetch water from it. The mob wanted to enter into the tank forcibly to fetch water. A number of Dalit women participated in this programme.

In December a satyagraha organized by Ambedkar. He and his followers burnt a copy of “Manu smriti” a sacred text of Hindus. By burning this book the untouchables sent a message that they would no more tolerate any kind of oppression perpetrated upon them by the Hindus. Ambedkar’s another attempt was temple entry agitation in Kalaram temple at Nasik. All the incidence articulated Ambedkar’s emancipation against untouchability. His several writings focused on the cast oppression of the society.

According to Ambedkar the Indian society was most undemocratic society, where the people were compartmentalized into classes and cast. His mission of life was to lead the depressed classes for complete equality in context of Hindus. Ambedkar realized that it was not easy to attack the Indian cast system. So he tried to explain the short comings , negative, disunited features of the cast related Hindu society. He was able to awaken them to an awareness of their lowly participation. Ambedkar focused on the weakness of the depressed class that they were powerless. He sparked on the inner spirit of the soul and organized the several self respect movement among the untouchables. To inspire the Depressed class he wrote a number of books. His famous work was “Annihilation Of Cast” which criticized the Hindu religion and Verna system. Ambedkar immensely conducted the comparative study of religion and felt the emancipatory root of human being and in this period he wrote “Buddha and Dhamma”.

As a social reformer Ambedkar emphasized on education. He realized that unless the lower class people became educated, there voices would not be heard. He pleaded with the government that providing equal educational opportunity to all without discrimination was it’s responsibility. His slogan was Educate, Agitate and Organize.

Ambedkar also focused on the suppressed condition of the woman. They must be equal with men and should not be considered inferior in anyway to men. Democracy can not be successful unless women’s participation was ensured. Ambedkar rightly said that the progress of the society depended upon that of women. He argued for Education for the children and to promote their status. He also introduced the Hindu Code Bill while he was the Law Minister of India. The committee made a number of important changes to the bill, including making the Laws applicable to even non – Hindus. This bill gave the complete property rights to the woman (daughters and widows). This bill basically put forth gender equality in laws of inheritance and marriage.

Ambedkar as a Political Reformer:

As a political thinker Ambedkar focused on the basic changes of political institution. All we know that, Ambedkar was known as the architect of modern India. He was chairman of the Drafting Committee and constructed our Constitution. But as a political thinker he was distinct from his contemporary leaders. He engaged himself as a Messiah of the Depressed class. His political career was involved for the development of the Depressed class. His political thought has three aspect. These are as follows.

- During his early days he and his father used to recite Kabir's Doha and used to read the Ramayana and the Mahabharata which enriched him about Indian culture and tradition. From Doha's philosophy he learned equality for all.
- He was influenced by several Indian scholars and personality. He was very much influenced by Jyoti Rao Phule. In 19th century Jyoti Rao Phule and his wife Savitri Phule fought against cast atrocities and they tried to open up all places for all cast specially lakes and ponds which influenced Ambedkar.
- Western liberal thinkers also influenced Ambedkar. He imbibed with values of liberty, equality and fraternity. J. S Mill and H.J. Laski's concept of individual rights and freedom influenced him. He also influenced by John Dewey's pragmatism.

Social revolution is needed for the society where as, political revolution is constructed our political awareness. Both revolution make a positive change for society. Ambedkar believed that political and economic democracy can establish social democracy. Political democracy could be successful only when opposition was tolerated and encouraged. Ambedkar was convinced that democracy is the only form of government which ensures liberty and equality in society. According to Ambedkar social democracy is a way of life which recognizes liberty, equality and fraternity which are not to be treated as separate items.

Dr Ambedkar's political reformation focused on the concept of social justice. Social justice refers to a distinct aspect of socio economic and political system of the country through which concerned and co – ordinated measures are initiated aimed at eliminating the disadvantages position of the Depressed classes of the society. Ambedkar firmly explained that political democracy required social democracy, social equality and justice. His notion of social justice is the prelude of the Indian politicalisation of the lower class people.

In the year 1930 marked Ambedkar's transition towards party politics. The British government announced separate electorate for the Depressed class. Gandhi feared that measure would threatened Hindu unity, immediately went on a fast at Puna. This move forced Ambedkar to project his demand for separate electorates and to sign the Puna Pact on September 24th 1932. Reservation of seats for the untouchable classes in the provisional leisure within the general electorate. This classes were later designated as Scheduled Cast and Scheduled Tribes. In 1942 he established a new organization known as the Scheduled Cast Federation replacing the Independent Labour Party.

Conclusion :

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was an intellectual personality and he played a pivotal role to architect our Indian Constitution. His political and social thought is the gateway to our constitutional attitudes. He was a statist in both the social and political domain. A man of knowledge, wisdom and vision Ambedkar dedicated himself to the cause of untouchables. He believed that if social order became democratic, the democratic society would be formed. Ambedkar's social reformation not only focused on the condition of the Depressed Class, but also focused on the education. He expressed that education is an important tool for social upliftment. As a true crusader, who fought for the removal of social contradictions. He can be designated as the social prophet of the untouchables.

The Indian Constitution: Iron Frame Made For Indian Administration

Meenu B. Nair

Public Administration Dept of Political Science
University of Kerala Kariavattom campus , Trivandrum

Dr. B.R.Ambedkar, the chief architect of Indian constitution, is more than an architect. Building a modern democratic nation is not just simple task we need a strong base: law of land. Before that we have to know which is planned and how is our land. Illiterate, poor, diverse nation became independent at the midnight of August 14 1947. Rulers left, partition happened on the basis of religion, caste system and untouchability existed. In the midst of this midnight what is required, what India dreamt was peaceful, secular, democratic nation.

After a long struggle, discrimination and torture a new barrister from Mahar caste came to save India, came to give birth to law of our land. Gold becomes beautiful ornaments after a lot of beating and smelting and Ambedkar as an ornament beautified mother India making socialist, secular, Democratic, Republic. This architect gave iron backbone to India. It was his sole idea to incorporate the ideologies and concepts from different countries and made the Indian constitution diverse like the people in India. During the independence world nations believed that diverse India will not exist united for a long time. But it even exists today as diverse and united on the pillar of Indian constitution. It was a really tough journey from a poor untouchable village boy to the architect of a constitution. not just a constitution not just a law book It is the Bible that binds millions of people belonging to thousand culture to one culture: INDIAN.

Dr Ambedkar built it in such a way that no earthquake can shatter, no cyclone can uproot the basis of Indian constitution. The predictions related to the unity and existence of India shattered and bowed in front of the ignited mind who is pledged to tie the diversity under one roof. His work, dedication and determination can be seen in the very first page of Indian constitution: THE PREAMBLE. In millions of Indians can be seen, their passion dreams can be seen. The largest Democratic country became Republic due to a barrister from Madhya Pradesh.

Lot of renowned leaders were there in the constituent assembly, in framing of constitution but the touch of one among them was history and is memorable after decades. That's why, the word Indian constitution is put along with Dr.B.R. Ambedkar. The nation was bearing sizeable chunk of illiterate, poor and downtrodden people, that was the real burden of the nation. It really needed as support hold the weight. The architect of the nation, no other word suit for person building support and giving a structure to the nation

The basic concepts of constitution like socialist, secular, Democratic, sovereign, republic are the iron pillars of the nation, which are the contribution of Ambedkar. Supreme Court verdict on Kesavananda bharti case gives light to the strength of these constitution ideologies which were not amenable and it is the unshakable base of our land. As foundation base is strong then, multi storeyed huge constructions can be made. Likewise, the growth of India as a nation will be safe and strong with the base given by Dr. Ambedkar. Equality, fraternity, social inclusion etc. are the soul of India. India,

World's largest Democratic nation have to maintain and protect the democracy, for that these ideologies will play a crucial role.

The constitution of India adopted in 1950 gave the real shape of modern India and was the idea of Ambedkar. As he was the crusader of minority rights and women rights added provisions for the protection of these rights. As per his ideology the people's proximity to justice is really important as he considers article 32, constitutional remedies are the most relevant article in the world's largest constitution. The need of justice and Ambedkar's devotion of justice is exposed through this word.as Ambedkar framed the constitution it is like framing by common man, the real picture of India and worst reality in Indian society is being experienced by him. Making of law of land in ivory towers is not good for any nation the realities of the society should be experienced by the leaders. India is blessed with one. The directive principles of state policy are the real culture and goodness and ethics of Indian culture. It covered all the spheres of modern India. Ambedkar's vision and idea of future India was highlighted in DPSP.in fundamental rights the ideology of equality, protection of minorities, social and educational rights, freedom etc are broadly explained and provided for common citizen of the country.

According to Dr. Ambedkar the parliamentary form of government and the ornamental position of president was considered as the most democratic form of government. Both direct and indirect election were also enabled in the parliamentary elections. India faced the first election in 1951-52 and the circumstances of India not similar to any third world independent nation in those times. India constituted with diverse in the sense culture, language, religion and poverty untouchability and illiteracy was in its peak. bringing these people to polling station was a challenging ordeal and was successful in the first attempt because of the elaborate idea and plan regarding the procedure and method of election given by Ambedkar. This the example of importance of coordination by a leader in challenging situations. The constitution of India has unique characteristics like quasi federal, quasi flexibility to constitution etc .no other country have a semi nature in the federalism or flexibility. In most of the countries the constitution may be rigid or flexible and the country will be having a government which is either federal or unitary.it was being changed and mad a new innovation through the ideology of Dr. Ambedkar.

The knowledge of Dr. Ambedkar helped in the creation of constitution his knowledge regarding by laws and constitutions of different countries like USSR France England Canada us brought a diversity in the constitution of India and created an enormous and all-inclusive law of land. The foresight and the intellect of Ambedkar help in incorporating the rigidity in the constitutional amendment and also the federal as well as the unitary nature of Indian constitution help from not getting into more turbulent times in a diverse society. The urge of the Indian states to become independent nations especially from the part of Khalistan, Jammu and Kashmir and southern India was not in ignored by Ambedkar and he incorporated the federal nature and autonomy to state regarding its own affairs it for some extent helped to remain India as a union. Judiciary became an independent authority to resolve conflict between the union and the state government and it helped to maintain a peaceful coexistence of States and union. In order to maintain a peaceful existence of all the language or linguistic diversity constitution gives importance to the regional languages as well with the national language. The constitution of India in its Second part includes the need of citizenship and the procedures and the necessities of the Indian citizen as it is discussed in this period with great turbulence.

Even though the atrocities towards Minority is not fully eradicated but to some extent Minority rights are protected and untouchability is abolished in some part of India due to the efforts took by Dr. Ambedkar in framing the constitution and incorporating and adding minority rights, abolition of untouchability and discrimination in the constitution. The concept of unity diversity was also envisioned by Ambedkar while drafting the constitution.

“If we wish to preserve the Constitution in which we have sought to enshrine the principle of Government of the people, for the people and by the people, let us resolve not to be tardy in the recognition of the evils that lie across our path and which induce people to prefer Government for the people to Government by the people, nor to be weak in our initiative to remove them.

That is the only way to serve the country. I know of no better.” This is the final words of Dr. Ambedkar in constituent assembly these words say about his vision on people Government and democracy of India he preferred using the people of India rather than the Indian nation. The ideology of nation is also seen in the preamble of our constitution. The preamble itself start with we people of India solemnly resolved to constitute India into a sovereign socialist democratic republic. it says a lot about the nation and these words says that he is not looking to our nation just as a territory but the union of diverse religion caste custom colours creed etc. And he also warns the nation that “if things go wrong nobody can be playing but ourselves.” In his speech the three pillars of government legislature, executive and judiciary and also mentioned judiciary is an independent authority to ensure justice in the society and legislature and executive are closely related and legislature provides a democratic setup to nation.

Ambedkar was known for his books for the emancipations of women and Dalit community in India and his journey towards success was really an inspirational one for the youth in India. and his ideologies related to French Revolution was adopted in the Indian constitution Liberty, Fraternity and Equality the social scenario in India during independence was against the ideology of French Revolution even though she thought that 3 pillars of French Revolution have role in the upliftment the nation. The atrocities and discrimination faced by Babasaheb Ambedkar was unimaginable for youth in modern period. But the difficult journey had become successful due to the determination hard work and dedication brought a Dalit common man to the father of Indian constitution. He opposed his own religion, Hinduism for the prevalence of untouchability and caste system. He opted Buddhism and Buddhist philosophy which was against caste system and Untouchability. He is well known as a lawyer, feminist, activist, politician etc.

In the last speech of constituent assembly Dr. Ambedkar give certain cautions regarding the existence of constitution and democracy in the diverse environment as Woodrow Wilson the former president of United States stated running a constitution is more difficult than framing one this is also set in directly by Dr. Ambedkar in every state running a constitution or maintaining democracy and constitution is really difficult. In India, with a diverse and vast population difficulty will be twice more than other countries but when we compare democracy and the value of constitution the respect for constitution is more than countries having a single religion ethnic group etc. Constitution of India is apt for a diverse country to hold a diverse country and its existence till now is an evidence for the effort taken by Dr. B R Ambedkar in framing constitution. Before the adoption of constitution India was fragmented piece of lands and kingdoms structure of the country came only after Ambedkar's idea of constitution. It gave skeleton, a structure to Indian administration. The modern India came into existence all developments made in India yes due to this strong skeleton and structure the framework that Ambedkar given to India. The major characteristics of the ideology that Dr Ambedkar given to the constitution is all-inclusiveness. All the groups of people, all caste, all community, all religions are incorporated and all brought together under an umbrella. The coexistence of all the religion, all the caste, and abolition of discrimination and the secular existence of India is the philosophy of Ambedkar. He also incorporated tribal community to the mainstream and later tribal community also became the part of Indian mainland. The outer caste people who were considered as untouchables became the crucial part off India. As it is said that what is a leader is what the leader does. In case of Ambedkar's contribution towards the building of a nation what Ambedkar as a leader did is what India is now.

India's first law minister did a lot to make the country lawful, peaceful and Democratic and his work is incomparable with any other leader because What his did is not just for a community, for not just for group of people he did it for all. The interpretations he given to the different parts of Indian constitution, when we check these interpretations and explanations that Ambedkar given is extraordinary and he had a vision about India thorough knowledge about India and he was farsighted about what will happen in India after ten, twenty or sixty years. His predictions and his ideas about India in future was not wrong. He warned 60 years ago about the threats and challenges that the democracy of India is going to face. The rulers of the country issue take these warnings as certain advices to maintain the democracy and constitution of India without any distraction. Ambedkar was not just building and framing the constitution or India as a structure but he also gave certain advices and warnings to maintain it and protect it for a long time. He couldn't stop his work his efforts by framing structure to the nation but also, he wanted the next generation to maintain, protect these structures and preserve it for further generations. Thus, he becomes an inspirational figure, leader to youth in all periods, all generations. His foresightedness and passion towards the success of nation deserves a great applause and respect and literally a role model to the youth in our Times. May likeminded leaders from this generation also emerge and arise for the betterment of the nation. May young ignited minds come forward on this occasion of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's birthday to revive India and provide a strong base as India need it in these hours.

Impact of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar on Literature and Society

Assistant Professor,
Aniket College of Social Work, Wardha

Abstract:

This paper focuses on the influence of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's thought on literature and society. Dr. Ambedkar was the man of action who did not only say but himself suffered, faced, struggled and acted in his life. Dr. Babasheb Ambedkar has correctly pointed out the raising issues of the period through his writing. He was motivation for not only Dalit community but also for the whole society. He was an intellectual person who properly understood the real hurdles of the society. He also continuously fought for the dignity of Dalits. He was the ultimate inspiration for Dalit literature.

Keywords: Impact, society, democracy, literature

Introduction:

Ambedkar is probably India's greatest thinker on democracy which he understood in terms of the principles of liberty, equality and fraternity. His famous slogan 'Educate, Agitate and Organize' was great inspiration for all. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was thus a humanitarian and truly an emancipation of Dalits. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was India's most despised writer for the orthodox society. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was the anthropologist and the true scientist of society who did not only identify real problems of the society but paved the way towards social democracy. Ambedkar was a realist about the social order and its effects. He had trust about the 'power of democratic institutions to bring about equality'. So he emphasized on real democracy implementation.

In the beginning of the 20th century there was big impact of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar Ambedkar on society. People experienced continuous humiliation of caste discrimination and violence in society. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar fought against this inhuman outrage and devoted his entire life to solve such issues of society. The society is becoming aware of the importance of Dr. Ambedkar as a great thinker and leader. Unknowingly he has become one of the great leaders of India who continuously shaped history. He was profound reader of all kinds of books. Through reading he acquired deep knowledge of economical system and social system. His influence goes beyond India because of his work regarding discrimination and violence.

The major area of Ambedkar's work was on constitutional democracy. He was a scholar and expert in interpreting different constitutions of the world. Mainly these constitutions were associated to democracy. His commitment to democracy as the mode of governance was steady but he argued that democracy needed to become a way of life. He developed some interesting arguments on why parlia-mentary democracy was the most suitable form of government for India. His opinions on constitutional democracy were reflected in his relations with Gandhi and Nehru on the issues of untouchability and the Hindu Code Bill respectively. He was a key figure in the constitutional developments of India. He had minutely studied all the constitutional developments of different countries while adopting the features of constitution.

According to Dr. Ambedkar, religion has a major role in lightening the task of law. He thought that governance must reflect socio-logical reality. Hence he paid attention to power and governance. Ambedkar also spent a great deal of his time and energy in the efforts of advancing proposals for the purpose focusing the need to respect justice and equity. While he was opposed to overrepresentation to Muslims as expressed in the constitutional reforms of 1909, he did not accept that minority representation should be exactly in proportion to its population.

Dr. Ambedkar's ideas are so important and relevant today while understanding the issues of the oppressed people. His thoughts are really useful today. He took the perspective of those at the bottom who are oppressed and he insisted that the conditions of the poor were the result not of individual disappointments but of the working of the social system under which they lived. According to him identity and status have not made people downtrodden but the treatment they received made them downtrodden. So he tells the world that his people are named as Dalit the downtrodden, the broken.

Dr Ambedkar was an anthropologist of 20th century. He was able to observe Indian society and its caste system from a distance as well as in the light of a different culture. He understands his adversity, not as that of an individual man, but as the consequence of the workings of a social system having millions of oppressed Dalits in its grip. Dr. Ambedkar properly understood individual suffering as social suffering and finding the root of India's social suffering to be caste. According to him the last stage of suffering is 'annihilation of caste'.

He does not separate social inequality from economic inequality, or caste from class. Indeed, Dr Ambedkar was the only person in his time to link the rights of the oppressed classes and the right of Dalits. According to him the oppression of caste cannot be treated as a religious matter separate from society and economy. The discrimination does not lay in religious reform but in legal rights and state intervention on behalf of the downtrodden. The discrimination he fought against was a violation of civic and human rights in any community, any religion, region or country. The conditions of the marginalised and exploited are not the result of their individual capacities but the working of social systems that allow discrimination and exclusion of certain categories of people. Dr Ambedkar explains that caste system is not only observed in India but internationally.

Religion had become so important to Dr Ambedkar as a fulfilment of his deep thinking about society and democracy. He taught that we should not see religion as a matter of personal belief or doctrine. Religion has importance because of its social practices. He preferred a religion of principles and was against the religion of rules. According to him principles gave people the freedom to act, whereas a religion of rules gave blind belief. Dalit is a by-product of the Ambedkar movement and indicates a political and social awareness. Ambedkar adopted a different approach and philosophy for the emancipation of Scheduled Castes. He wanted to liberate the Dalits by building an egalitarian social order. He asserted that the Dalits should come forward and assert for their own cause. He inspired them educate, organize and agitate.

The contribution of Dr. Ambedkar in Dalit literature is remarkable. After a long time Dalit literature emerged as one of the famous literary representation of Post-colonial writings in India for Dalit community for their rights, equality and freedom. Dr. Ambedkar was the only motivation behind the creation of dalit writing. Many Dalit writers get inspiration from Ambedkar's writings, speeches and actions. Today many dalit writers are composing their works through the help of Ambedkar's ideas. Nobody can think of Dalit literature or marginalized literature without thinking of Dr. Babasaheb

Ambedkar because he was the ray of light for Dalit Life and the Dalit literature. He desired to create India as a great nation through social and economic revolution without bloodshed, as the real democratic, state is the everlasting gift to the people of India. All the writers proudly hold him in high esteem as the father of Dalit-literature.

Conclusion:

Dr Ambedkar was one of the great nationalists who dedicated his life for ensuring protections and equality for the victims. He knows well that democracy needs oppressed community's involvement. He favored democracy because according to him democracy will offer to everyone equal opportunities and backward society would progress on the basis of claims to rights. Dr. Ambedkar thinks honor can be achieved only through reform of the social order. He embarked upon by all manner of means political, legal, institutional and religious. At every step his faced resistance because his simple but powerful idea of the fundamental and universal human right of the downtrodden and the broken, were radical.

The Roots Of Untouchability : A Socio-Political Perspective

Guest Lecturer, Institute of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar Studies and Research, Gulbarga University, Kalaburagi – 585106. Karnataka, India.

Introduction:

Untouchability is a direct product of the caste system. It is not merely the inability to touch a human being of a certain caste or sub-caste. It is an attitude on the part of a whole group of people that relates to a deeper psychological process of thought and belief, invisible to the naked eye, translated into various physical acts and behaviours, norms and practices. Untouchability is prompted by the spirit of social aggression and the belief in purity and pollution that characterises casteism. It is generally taken for granted that Dalits are considered polluted people at the lowest end of the caste order. The jobs considered polluting and impure are reserved for Dalits, and in many cases Dalits are prevented from engaging in any other work. These jobs include removing human waste dragging away and skinning animal carcasses, tanning leather, making and fixing shoes, and washing clothes.

The roots of Untouchability is an associated with traditional Hindu society. It is being practiced since times immemorial and despite various efforts made by social reformers such as Dr. B. R. Ambedkar; and despite there being provision on abolition of untouchability in our Constitution under Article 17, the evil is still in practice in our country. But we the people of India are going against the interest of the Indian Constitution. The architecture of the Indian constitution Dr. B. R. Ambedkar spoke about the constitution on 26th November, 1949 warned the rulings, saying, "On 26th January, 1950, We are entering into a life of contradictions, wherein we accept the principle of 'one man one vote, one vote one value and therefore, one man one value' in politics. But we refuse to accept this principle in our social and economic life. If we continue to refuse this principle in our social and economic life, the people who suffer from the social and economic inequalities, will blow-up the political democracy which we built so laboriously". Even after more than six decades we failed to bring social equality in our society.

Origin of Untouchability

The untouchables have been in existence for more than 2500 years. These are different theories of origin of untouchability is consider briefly some of these theories.

- Traditional Theory:

According to Manu, the prohibited pratiloma marriage was the cause of the origin of untouchability. Children, born out of such a marriage, were kept out of the Varna fold and were branded as chandalas who constituted an untouchable group. In the Chandukya Upanishad also there is reference to chandalas.

- Racial Theory:

According to Sir Herbert Risley and Majumdar consider the origin of untouchability in a different way. They say that the Indo-Aryans regarded the aborigines of India as a kind of inferior human beings and addressed them as 'dasas' or 'dasyaus' meaning slaves or servants. They also placed them in the lowest strata of the society and deprived them of all social and religious ceremonies.

Majumdar argues that the disabilities of the so-called 'depressed castes are not ceremonial, but are founded on racial and cultural differences'.

- Occupational Theory:

According to Nesfield, association with dirty and impure occupations gave rise to the feeling of untouchability. It means low social status attached to certain occupations is the cause of untouchability. It relates to impure occupations such as removal of human waste and carcass, leather works, spinning, tanning, and scavenging. There are also other explanations for the origin of untouchability. It is evident from all these theories that the caste system, to a very great extent, is responsible for the development of the feeling of untouchability. Conservation of the caste always supported the feeling of untouchability. The caste system also gave rise to the feeling that 'untouchables' are born into untouchable castes and remain so till their death. This feeling perpetuated untouchability. The practice of untouchability assumed different forms and proportions in the prolonged history of more than 2500 years

- According to Dr. B. R. Ambedkar,

Untouchability originated in India around A. D. 400 and it arose out of the struggle for supremacy between Buddhism and Brahmanism and it has molded the history of India. Untouchability is the word used by Ambedkar himself for those lowest castes in the Hindu scale of pollution. During the pre-independence era the term Depressed Classes was used to denote the untouchables. This was replaced by Scheduled castes in 1935 when these castes were placed on a Schedule as qualifying for special rights. The origin of untouchability is an enigma. But it is generally held that it is a perverted outcome of the caste system. The Vedic Aryans knew no caste system. As time went on, the Aryans divided themselves for different occupations of labour and according to aptitude, liking and the capacity of the individual. Those who took to learning were called Brahmins, those who undertook governance were classified as Kshatriyas, those who resorted to trade were termed Vaishyas, and those who served the forgoing three classes were known as Shudras. Brahmins continued to be regarded as someone next to God whereas a man from the lowest class, as a Shudra. The result was that the original four divisions became watertight compartments and degenerated later into the present caste system. In this way the four Varnas came to stay as four castes. Henceforth, different professions, barriers of provinces, varying ways of living, different superstitions, and customs broke up the main four castes and further led to the creation of various sub-castes. The untouchables were from the lowest strata of the Hindu society and were condemned as untouchables by the caste Hindus down the century.

Untouchability in India:

Untouchables were lived outside from the villages:

The British government census report of India published in 1870 by the census Commissioners at the interval of every ten years contained a wealth of information nowhere else to be found regarding the social and religious life of the Indian people. Before the 1911 census the commissioner had a column called population by religion like Muslims, Hindus and Christians. The census report for the year 1911 marked a new departure from the prevailing practice and divided Hindus for the first time under three separate categories Hindus, Animists and Tribal and the depressed class or untouchables. The 1911s classification has been continued ever since. Although there is no clarification about the criteria adopted by the commission of this new classification but possibly the presentation of Muslim Community under the leadership of Aga Khan in 1909 to the Viceroy, Lord Minto for a separate electoral is the root of this separation in which they mentioned. "The Mohamedans of India number, according to the census taken in the year 1901 over sixty two millions or between one-fifth and one-fourth of the total population of his Majesty's Indian dominions and if a reduction be made for the uncivilized portion of the community enumerated under the heads of animist and other minor religion, as well as for those classes who are ordinarily classified as Hindus but properly speaking are not Hindus at all, the proportion of Mohamedans to the Hindu majority becomes much larger. We therefore desire to submit that under any system of representation extended or limited a community in itself more numerous than the entire population of any first class European power except Russia may justly lay claim to adequate recognition as an important factor in the state." It was very surprising that the commission on the basis of the presentation of Muslims categorized the Hindus into two categories one is those who were hundred percent Hindus and another is those who were not, and those who were not hundred percent Hindus were included caste and tribes which

1. Deny the supremacy of Brahmins.
2. Do not receive the Mantras from a Brahmin or other recognized Hindu Guru.
3. Deny the authority of Vedas.
4. Do not worship the Hindu Gods.
5. Have no Brahmin priest at all.
6. Are not served by good Brahmins as family priests.
7. Are denied access to the interior of the Hindu temples.
8. Cause pollution either by touch or within a certain distance
9. Bury their dead.
10. Eat Beef and do no reference to the cow.

May be because of not receiving any mantras from any Brahmin or not having any Brahmin priest they were started to treat lower than Brahmins and because of eating beef and doing minimal jobs they were started to stay out of the village and that's why called Outcaste. Most importantly they have their own priest most knowledgeable and intellectual person reared for themselves. Although these are considered as mere speculations because no clear cut details or evidences are available. Even the enquiry of commission considered one-sided only with the perspective of Brahmins only. The fact was that untouchables were also not looked upon themselves as untouchables and Brahmins as superior. This fact is noted down by Mr. Hemingsway, the Editor of the Gazetteer of the Tanjore district. Who says- "These castes strongly object to the entrance of a Brahmin into their quarters believing that harm will result to them there from." What is the explanation of this strange phenomenon? Brahman were not having any sensible exposition of this discern but on a factual ground the untouchables were not untouchables but the members of other caste outside the door of the house of the society and later on of the village.

Social Movement against the Untouchability:

The movement of the untouchables against the injustice of the Hindu social order has a long history behind it, especially in Maharashtra. This history falls into two stages. Petitions and protests marked the first stage. The second stage is marked by open revolt in the form of direct action against the established Hindu order. The burning of the Manu Smiriti took place at Mahad on December 20th, 1927. The function was a part of the campaign for establishing the right to take water from the Cawdar tank. One of the duties of the untouchables is to remove the skin off and carry the dead animals of the Hindus in the villages. If the untouchables refuse to perform these duties to the Hindus the land on which they live is liable to be confiscated. They have to choose between doing the dirty work or facing starvation. The important thing to note is that the conference of the untouchables, which met in Mahad, resolved that untouchables would neither remove the skin of the dead animals of the Hindus nor carry it or eat the carrion. The minor and major objectives of these resolutions were to foster among the untouchables self-respect, self-esteem and to strike a blow at the Hindu social order.

Ambedkar carried out his fight on political as well as religious fronts. He wanted the untouchables to have the right to enter a Hindu temple. In 1929, the Parvati temple entry Satyagraha was organized at Poona wherein the unarmed untouchables and caste Hindu participants were attacked and injured among the untouchables. After this there was a famous Kalaram temple entry at Nasik. The Satyagraha was carried out from 1930 to 1935, but when obduracy of the orthodox Hindu did not relent, Ambedkar made his resolve before the public that though he was born a Hindu, he would not die as a Hindu. He fulfilled this promise by embracing Buddhism till his death. The main aim of the temple entry Satyagraha was to make the entry possible in the temple for the untouchables.

Political Safeguards for Untouchability:

The systematic articulation of arguments in favour of remedies against caste and untouchability discrimination was spelled out, in Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's first statement, submitted in January 1919 to the Southborough Committee, at the time of the reform in the Government of India Act, 1919. About ten years later, when second attempt was made to revise the 1919 Act, through a series of Round Table Conference, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar submitted two statements, one to the Simon Commission in May 1928 and another, two years later in 1930, at the First Round Table Conference. The Government of India act – 1935, provided representation to the Depressed Classes of untouchables in the Federal Assembly as well as in the provincial legislative assemblies as settled under the Poona Pact. The final representation came at the time of framing of India's Constitution in 1947. The independent Indian constitution provide the reservation policy under the article of 15 (4), 16 (4), 332, 243T and 243D. The reservation intends to give proportional representation as it is a proportion of population in education, employment and politics 15 percent for scheduled caste, 7.5 percent for scheduled tribe and 27 percent for other backward communities. Therefore, Depressed Classes have got opportunities to get education, employment, voting power and reserved seats with struggle of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar.

Conclusion:

The 1950 national constitution of India legally abolishes the practice of “untouchability,” and there are constitutional reservations in both educational institutions and public services for deprived communities. Unfortunately, these measures have not changed the reality of daily life for most Dalits, as the Indian government frequently tolerates oppression and open discrimination aimed at this group. Dalits usually live in separate areas away from the caste Hindu communities, and they are often forbidden to access public wells. In many areas, when Dalits eat in public restaurants or patronize street vendors, they must use a special glass for drinking tea or coffee to prevent sharing between Dalits and caste Hindus. Dalits in different parts of India cannot enter Hindu temples and caste leaders forbid inter-caste marriages.

The Indian constitution starts with “We the people of India” there is no mention of we the people of particular religion, caste, language and culture. Therefore, we have accepted Sovereign, Socialist, Secular and Democratic system of the Indian Constitution. We are all different from each other but we are all Indians first and last with liberty, equality and fraternity as per the preamble of the Constitution. If every Indian citizen accepts and adopt the constitution, there will be no problems like Caste discrimination and Untouchability in the Indian society. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar is quoted the roots of untouchability as “The roots of Untouchability, lies in caste system, the roots of Caste system, lies in Varnashrama Dharmma, the roots of Varnashrama Dharmma, lies in Brahmanism, the roots of Brahmanism, lies in power” ultimately, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar is Saied “Power less is the untoucahability”.

Abstract

In an unassuming street in London's posh primrose Hills, there is a buzz about a particular house that was purchased last September by India's state government of Maharashtra, and opened as a museum and learning centre by prime minister Narendra Modi. Its blue plaque reads as 'Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, 1891-1956, Indian crusader for social justice, lived here 1921-1922'. To Dr. Corinne Lennox, he was also a true visionary and one of the world's greatest defenders and philosophers of human rights.

Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar is a key figure in the global story of human rights but his contributions are not adequately understood or recognised. His birthday is widely celebrated in India. He drafted a constitution, in which he embedded several provisions for the most marginalised. His statue is dotted though the country but this leadership is most significant for the Dalit's of India who continue to occupy the lowest rungs of Indian society despite the elevated heights to which Dr. Ambedkar, himself a Dalit, was able to reach.

Introduction:

It is a history of human when one man's life changes the destiny of millions. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar was one such remarkable leader. An untiring crusader for human rights for the oppressed untouchability of India. Babasaheb as he was fondly and reverently known strove throughout his life to purge from society the evil of prejudice and injustice against his fellow brethren. Having suffered humiliation in his early years purely on the circumstances of his birth during a lower caste Babasaheb Ambedkar became the voice of redemption from oppression for many his fellow men. From humble background he overcame many challenges by first enrolling in Columbia University within the US where he imbibed a deep sense of justice and equality then on to the united kingdom to urge academic degree. After India's independence his commitment to equality and freedom was enshrined by his add the framing of the Indian constitution together of its principal architects. Babasaheb Ambedkar hope of equality and dignity for the oppressed castes in society remains so far an unfulfilled dream in modern India within the telling of the story on the life and times of this great icon of free India through this beautifully illustrated biography. Campfire aims to renew the spirits so dear to Ambedkar's heart of a just and tolerant India.

Explanation:

He is one among the world's greatest defender and philosopher of human rights. He was a real visionary contributing to a worldwide enrichment of rights and to the present day, he continues to inspire human rights defenders.

Why do I call Dr Ambedkar a person's rights defender? Some might see him narrowly as a defender of the rights of Dalits but not of human rights more broadly. His lifelong efforts to eradicate caste-based discrimination arguably count as his greatest achievement. Moreover, the language of 'human rights' was still in its infancy during his lifetime, albeit the standards had earlier roots. a correct examination of his writings and his actions show, however, that he was considerably cosmopolitan in his philosophy of justice and in his legal and political work, which demonstrate his support to norms embodied in universal human rights as we've since come to understand them.

To illustrate my point, i will be able to highlight three key progressive strands of his thinking on principles of human rights, and the way this projected where the international human rights movement would enter the decades to follow.

First is that the interdependence of human rights. a continuing refrain in his writings is his involve 'liberty, equality and fraternity'. Equality and non-discrimination are clearly at the core of his conceptual framework of human rights. Yet, in contrast to the utilization of those principles within the French and American declarations, Dr Ambedkar placed social and economic equality alongside political and civic equality.

For example, as India became an independent state, he said, 'On the 26 January 1950, we are getting to enter into a lifetime of contradictions. In politics we'll have equality, and in social and economic life we'll have inequality. How long we could still deny equality in our social and economic life? If we still deny it for long, we'll do so only by putting our political democracy in peril.' He was also critical of the efforts in Communist states of the amount in supporting economic and social rights at the value of liberty.

The global human rights movement was dominated for many years by attention on civil and political rights and only latterly brought economic and social rights more to the forefront of human rights advocacy. Dr Ambedkar was prescient in his recognition of the interdependence of civic and political rights with social and economic rights, even at a time when states were working to divide these norms across the 2 international human rights covenants.

Second, Dr. Ambedkar said, 'I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress which women have achieved.' He strived through efforts, including his proposed Hindu Code Bill, to secure rights for ladies in India in areas like inheritance and divorce. Importantly, he was in fact pertaining to all women, not just the progress of elite women, approaching gender equality as he was from the purpose of view of Dalit women.

The recognition of inequalities within the international women's movement itself remains something that we are grappling with, and which came relatively late to the gender equality debate. Emphasis on the concept of 'intersectionality' in gender discrimination is additionally fairly recent.

Today the voice of girls within the Dalit movement has been growing ever stronger, as has the voice of Dalit women within the women's movement, both nationally and internationally. for instance, Asha Kotwal, general secretary of the All India Dalit Mahaila Adhikari Manch (All India Dalit Women's Rights Forum, or AIDMAM), led a gaggle of Dalit women on a US tour last autumn, bringing attention to the egregious human rights violations faced by Dalit women, and connecting with others within the global movement, like the ladies leaders of Black Lives Matter.

Third, Dr Ambedkar was visionary in his understanding that democracy alone isn't a guarantee for the protection of the rights of minorities. He attempted to create into the constitution several protections for various minority groups in India (as later detailed alongside other minority rights proposals in his 'States and Minorities' (1947)). Many of his efforts during this regard were blocked, including by Gandhi, pushing him to settle just for reserved seats for Dalits in government under the Poona Pact (1932).

This is still a neighborhood of human rights where there's an excellent deal of confusion of how protecting minority groups from discrimination through various tools, like social action 'reservations' utilized in the general public sector in India today, is important to members of these groups fulfilling their human rights. far away from being a privilege, these measures are a basic tool for achieving substantive equality within the face of discrimination. within the words of Dr Ambedkar, 'Discrimination is another menace which must be guarded against if the elemental rights [of the Indian Constitution] are to be real rights.

The global Dalit movement continues to strive towards these aims in their struggle to eliminate caste-based discrimination, to realize fulfilment of their human rights and for the restoration of dignity and justice. Leaders of this movement look to Dr Ambedkar for inspiration, putting into practice his famous mantra: 'My final words of recommendation to you're educate, agitate and organise; have faith in yourself'. Indeed, his words might be a rallying cry out for human rights defenders everywhere. As Ambedkar was educated by the Princely State of Baroda, he was sure to serve it. He was appointed Military Secretary to the Gaikwad but had to quit during a short time. He described the incident in his autobiography, expecting a Visa. Thereafter, he tried to seek out ways to form a living for his growing family. He worked as a personal tutor, as an accountant, and established an investment consulting business, but it failed when his clients learned that he was an untouchable. In 1918, he became Professor of economics within the Sydenham College of Commerce and Economics in Mumbai. Although he was successful with the scholars, other professors objected to his sharing a drinking-water jug with them

Ambedkar had been invited to testify before the Southborough Committee, which was preparing the govt of India Act 1919. At this hearing, Ambedkar argued for creating separate electorates and reservations for untouchables and other religious communities. In 1920, he began the publication of the weekly Mooknayak (Leader of the Silent) in Mumbai with the assistance of Shahu of Kolhapur i.e. Shahu IV (1874–1922).

Ambedkar went on to figure as a legal professional. In 1926, he successfully defended three non-Brahmin leaders who had accused the Brahmin community of ruining India and were then subsequently sued for libel. Dhananjay Keer notes that "The victory was resounding, both socially and individually, for the clients and therefore the doctor".

While practising law within the Bombay supreme court, he tried to market education to untouchables and uplift them. His first organised attempt was his establishment of the central institution Bahishkrut Hitkaraini Sabha, intended to market education and socio-economic improvement, also because the welfare of "outcastes", at the time mentioned as depressed classes. For the defence of Dalit rights, he started many periodicals like Mook Nayak, Bahishkrut Bharat, and Equality Janta.

He was appointed to the Bombay Presidency Committee to figure with the all-European Simon Commission in 1925. This commission had sparked great protests across India, and while its report was ignored by most Indians, Ambedkar himself wrote a separate set of recommendations for the longer term Constitution of India.

By 1927, Ambedkar had decided to launch active movements against untouchability. He began with public movements and marches to open up public beverage resources. He also began a struggle for the proper to enter Hindu temples. He led a satyagraha in Mahad to fight for the proper of the untouchable community to draw water from the most cistern of the town. during a conference in late 1927, Ambedkar publicly condemned the classic Hindu text, the Manusmriti (Laws of Manu), for ideologically justifying caste discrimination and "untouchability", and he ceremonially burned copies of the traditional text. On 25 December 1927, he led thousands of followers to burn copies of Manusmriti. Thus annually 25 December is widely known as Manusmriti Dahan Din (Manusmriti Burning Day) by Ambedkarites and Dalits.

In 1930, Ambedkar launched the Kalaram Temple movement after three months of preparation. About 15,000 volunteers assembled at Kalaram Temple satyagraha making one among the best processions of Nashik. The procession was headed by a concert band and a batch of scouts; women and men walked with discipline, order and determination to ascertain the god for the primary time. Once they reached the gates, the gates were closed by Brahmin authorities.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Contribution in the field of Education

Dr. Asha Bhausaheb Kadam

Assistant Professor, Department of Botany, Dada Patil Mahavidyalaya, Karjat, Dist. Ahmednagar (M.S.) India.

Abstract-

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar took a realistic read of things. He thought-about education as a method for expressive style, for building shallowness and character, for deciding correct conduct and for learning through expertise. He believed that the scholars ought to try and perceive and unravel sublunary and transcendental mysteries. Dr Ambedkar unambiguously expressed that associate education that doesn't build an individual capable, that doesn't teach him equality and morality, isn't true education. True education cradles humanity, generates sources of living, imparts knowledge and imbues US with ism. True education makes society alive.

Key words - Education, Transcendental mysteries, Society, Wisdom.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar continuously believed that education could be a movement. If it doesn't fulfil its objectives, it's useless. True education cradles humanity, generates sources of support, imparts knowledge and imbues USA with doctrine. Dr Ambedkar's views on education have nevertheless to be studied deeply – this despite the actual fact that he had been operating within the field of education since he based the Hitkarini Sabha in 1924. guaranteeing that a lot of associate degreed a lot of of the backward categories got an education was among the priorities of the Sabha and therewith purpose, it established variety of schools, hostels, libraries and reading centres.

At the initiative of the scholars and underneath the steering of the Sabha, a monthly titled Saraswati Belas was launched. The Sabha established hostels in Sholapur and Belgaun in 1935 and a free reading centre, a hockey club and 2 hostels in urban center. In 1928, Dr Ambedkar brought about the Depressed categories instructional Society. In 1945, he based the Lok Shaikshik Samaj for to confirm that the backward categories got education. This organization started variety faculties|of faculties} and middle schools. It additionally extended money help to hostels. In brief, the Lok Shaikshik Samaj contend a crucial role in creating education accessible to the Dalits.

Dr Ambedkar's writings pertained not solely to political economy, the law, the Constitution and social science, however additionally to social science, philosophy, religion, social science, etc. He additionally had associate degree enduring interest in education. it absolutely was not restricted to theorizing. He took pains to offer a sensible form to his views.

Ambedkar believed that education was the foremost vital suggests that of raising the people's customary of living. His saying was "Educate, unite, struggle". However, his views on education were eclipsed by his seminal work for Dalite mancipation. "Educate" is that the initial word of his noted saying. the explanation is education's plain role within the building of human character and consciousness. solely an informed person will perceive his category interests and produce regarding category unity. Education propels someone on the trail of struggle.

Dr Ambedkar same, "Education is what makes someone fearless, teaches him the lesson of unity, makes him responsive to his rights and evokes him to struggle for his rights." He believed that education could be a movement. If it doesn't fulfil its objectives, it's useless. Dr Ambedkar unambiguously declared that associate degree education that doesn't build someone capable, that doesn't teach him equality and morality, isn't true education. True education cradles humanity, generates sources of support, imparts knowledge and imbues USA with doctrine. True education makes society alive.

Ambedkar's Social-Philosophical views untired on the bedrock of doctrine. Human dignity and dignity were central to his Social Philosophy. He wished to use education to ascertain justice, equality, fraternity, freedom and fearlessness in society. He wished to exchange the birth-based society with a value-based one. It goes while not language that these ethical values may be promoted solely through education.

Ambedkar was deeply influenced by Buddhist Philosophy and he advocated development of morality all told folks. He same solely such objectives of education area unit meaning that aid in creating humans happy and prosperous and serving to society progress. He was additionally in favour of creating education relevant to employment. Education will facilitate build society stable. sensible behaviour and sensible conduct arise from logical reasoning which may be nonheritable solely through education, expertise and dialogue.

Ambedkar's objectives of education were an equivalent as his social, economic and political objectives. He was a powerful individual of logical and scientific education. Dr Babasaheb Ambekar had a sensible approach concerning curricula. He believed that utility ought to be the idea for deciding curricula. however he wasn't favour of inflexible curricula. He said, "Nothing is immortal. Nothing is binding for associate degree indefinite amount of your time, everything has to be tested and examined, nothing is final, everything is sure by the cause-effect relationship, nothing is everlasting, everything is changeable. Things area unit happening unendingly."

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar wasn't in favour of associate degree external agency imposing curricula on an academic establishment. He believed that the academics involved ought to style it themselves. He believed in democratic curricula, that ought to be place along by academics involved, keep with the strain of the topic and therefore the students. He was in favour of curricula that might facilitate students get employment and would build them capable. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar emphasised complete and obligatory education. For him, technical education was a priority, as were scholarships for the weaker sections and better education generally.

Ambedkar took a realistic read of things. He thought-about education as a way for style, for building vanity and character, for determinant correct conduct and for learning through expertise. He believed that the scholars ought to try and perceive and unravel sublunary and transcendental mysteries. He advocated instructing kids in several regional languages. Despite having respect for all languages, he felt the necessity for a typical language that might become the suggests that of communication between folks of various components of the country and therefore promote unity and integrity. He was for scientific ways of teaching, particularly in education. He same that real education mustn't awe USA, it ought to attractiveness to our logic and reason. He believed that non secular instruction had no place in curricula. He was for employing a worldly yardstick to assess the worth of education. He stood for a standardized education for all categories which was why he advocated scientific and progressive curricula, supported the principles of political theory.

In Dr Ambedkar's theme of things, the teacher had a giant role to play within the method of learning and drinking. He himself was deeply influenced by his academics, in fact, he had other the cognomen "Ambedkar" of 1 of his academics to his name. That teacher, incidentally, was a Brahmin. This shows the nice respect Ambedkar had for his academics. He wasn't against the Brahmins as a caste. He was against brahmanical ideology. Talking regarding the best teacher, Ambedkar same, "He should not solely be well-read however additionally a decent associate degree seasoned person."

In Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar's read, "It isn't necessary that we should always trust the conclusions of our teacher, and therefore the teacher WHO acknowledges this truth is that the true teacher. The teacher's job is to grasp the mental talents of the scholars and to develop them. He ought to guide his students. a decent teacher is that the friend, thinker and guide of his students." consistent with Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, a tutor ought to be experienced the fact of society so they'll intersperse their teaching with anecdotes and create it relevant to the important world. Such a tutor deserves the respect of his students.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar favoured the employment of scientific teaching methodologies beginning with primary education. physiological state is vital, he said, and therefore the stress ought to air hygiene and education. As for the kids of the disadvantaged categories, he said, "The initial daily lesson during a faculty for these youngsters ought to be a shower followed by turning into clean garments and therefore the second ought to be a meal of unpolluted, wholesome food, those that do that ought to be inspired so others learn from them." He additionally stressed on inculcating the correct values and therefore the right habits within the youngsters from the start.

According to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, "Good manners, for example, area unit the results of continual and rigid self-control, and of thought for the comfort and convenience of others, youngsters learn manners mainly by imitation from well-mannered folks and lecturers and, secondarily, by appropriate precept and reproof. If, at the varsity, they're to be created to come with youngsters not therefore trained, they'll quickly represent the ways that} which they see around them. For, till sensible habits area unit rendered fastened by long observe, it's so much easier to be careless than correct, to be careless than careful. mild speech, well-modulated voice, pleasant ways that, these area unit the precious results of long culture."

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar wasn't knowledgeable specialist and he has not created any theoretical analysis of teaching methodologies. however despite that, he has proposes glorious concepts on education. He was convinced that there shouldn't be a lot of distinction between the teaching methodologies for graduate and postgraduate categories. He believed that teaching shouldn't be separated from analysis. He advocated autonomy of universities in admissions, teaching, examinations and appointments.

For Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, the shortage of education among girls was the most important drawback facing Indian society. He control Brahmanism accountable for the pitiable state of ladies in Republic of India. He believed that Brahmanism and masculism were inextricably joined. "There isn't any social evil and no social wrong to that the Brahmin has not given his support. Man's inhumanity to man, like the sensation of caste, untouchability, aloofness and unsuitableness may be a faith to him. It would, however, be an error to suppose that solely the wrongs of man area unit a faith to him. The Brahmin has given his support to a number of the worst wrongs that ladies have suffered from in any a part of the planet. In Republic of India widows were burnt alive as suttees and therefore the Brahmin gave his fullest support to the observe. Widows weren't allowed to marry. The Brahmins upheld the philosophy. women were needed to be married before eight and therefore the husbands were permissible to say the correct to consummate the wedding at any time thenceforth.”

It is believed that ladies enjoyed several rights within the religious writing age, however that their position deteriorated subsequently. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar showed that the Manusmriti had accorded girls a standing even under that of servants. They were bereft of education and therefore the right to possess property was snatched off from them. He insisted that ladies be treated with dignity and given adequate opportunities for growth.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar drafted the Hindi Marriage Act, which didn't permit men to have more than one wife. It also gave women succession rights and the right to hold property, which had been denied to them by the Manusmriti. Ambedkar's Constitution gave women equal status in the eyes of the law. He bitterly criticized all such traditions and norms which militated against equality of women. He favoured economic independence of women. Madanmohan Malaviya and Dr Shyamaprasad Mukherjee had opposed the Hindu Marriage Bill. But despite that it was passed. Its passage marked a milestone in the history of women's struggle in the 20th century. Articles 14, 15(3), 16(1) and 16(2) of the Constitution have provisions to ensure that women are not discriminated against.

Ambedkar's views on women's education and development of their personalities were no less radical than those of the feminist movements below means nowadays. He was in favour of obligatory education for ladies, however solely up to the admission level, when that, he urged that they acquire home-management skills. He wasn't in favour of uniform education for men and girls. He felt that each have totally different roles in society, thence their education ought to even be totally different. However, because the chairman of the drafting committee of the Constitution, he created ample provisions for development of ladies and their economic self-dependence. These provisions enabled girls claim a standing adequate to that of men in freelance Republic of India.

Most of the educationists haven't processed their views on spiritual education for the concern of sinning the spiritual feelings of the plenty. They concern the opprobrium it might earn them. however Dr Ambedkar wasn't a timid man. He took a clear-cut stand on the problem. He had already emerged because the most moot Hindu of his time. He had to face brickbats all his life however that didn't have an effect on him a touch. He unbroken on job a spade, a spade. He said, “My social philosophy may be a mission. I even have to figure for spiritual conversions.”

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had no faith in God. He wanted to reorganize Indian society, not on the idea of spiritual but on the idea of liberty, equality and fraternity. He never avoided borrowing goodies from different religions but he was inclined to Buddhism. He admitted that his philosophy was rooted within the teachings of Buddha. Liberty and equality were the cornerstones of his philosophy but he also knew that unlimited freedom destroys equality, and excellent equality undermines freedom. Law could protect freedom and equality to an extent, but he believed it had been fraternity that was the important protector of freedom and equality.[3] For him, there was nothing better than religion to show fraternity and therefore the inclusion of the worth of fraternity in education was imperative.

“They [Scheduled Castes] haven't progressed in science and engineering education,” Ambedkar said. “Education in Arts and law can't be of much value for the scheduled castes. they're going to benefit more by advanced education I science and technology.” At the time, technology and technical education weren't as advanced in India as they're now, but specialized educational institutions in these fields had been found out. If Ambedkar emphasized engineering and science education for the Dalits, there was a reason for it – which was the employability of scholars who had studied engineering and science. that's true even today. In India, even now, students who have studied science and technology stand a far better chance of securing employment than those that are trained in humanities.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar urged the govt of India to require steps to make sure that Dalit students are admitted to the Indian School of Mines after he discovered that not even one among the 97 students within the school was a Dalit.

Technical education, being very costly, was out of the reach of the Dalits.

According to Ambedkar, “The Government of India can do tons for improving the longer term of the Dalits. The SC boys are often kept as apprentices in such industrial units such because the government press or railway workshops] which are under the control of the govt of India or are travel by it, where there's an opportunity of giving technical education.”

Dr Ambedkar demanded scholarships for Dalit students. Then, scholarships were being given only to students of spiritual minorities. He said, “Without government aid, the Scheduled Castes will never be ready to gain access to advanced education in science and technology and it'll only be just and proper that the govt of India comes forward to increase help to them during this regard.” He proposed that “Such Scheduled-Caste students who take admissions in science and technology courses in universities or in other scientific and technical training Institutions should tend scholarships worth Rs 2 lakh per annum. Rs 1 lakh as grant-in-aid should be provided to SC students for studying science and technology in universities in England, Europe, America and therefore the Dominion.”

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar also showed to the govt the way this might be done. He proposed that the rather than grants, scholarships should tend within the sort of loans. Reservations proved to be the foremost successful instrument for ensuring the representation of Dalits in institutions of upper learning. Ambedkar proposed “reservation of of Scheduled Castes who have attained the minimum standard of education for seeking admission.” He proposed setting aside of 10 per cent of the seats for such students. His objective was clear – to offer representation to Dalit students. He also wanted similar participation of the Dalits in statutory bodies. He raised the difficulty of representation of SCs within the Central Education planning board.

Key words: Women Education, social justice, social behaviour, status, women empowerment

Introduction:

The word 'women ' signify for suppression, exploitation and vulnerability before independence. The assumptions and behaviour towards the women change time to time. The evidences from the available resources prove the higer status of women in Vedic period. The continuity of higher status of women is disrupted in post Vedic period to modern age. However the contribution of social reformer in British and post British period has brought the changes in worsen condition of women. The contribution of Dr.B.R.Ambedkar is milestone in women empowerment. Dr . B.R. Ambedkar an Educationist, reformers an activist has founded women's issues and strived to improving the condition of women by participating women in movement educating them and on the- contrary attacking on the orthodoxy mentality towards women. The rise of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar in the field of social justice is milestone towards liberty of women. The work of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar is a ray of hope for the Downtrodden and underprivileged section of the society.

Objectives of the study:

- To study the women's status prior to rise of Dr. Ambedkar
- To study the Dr B.R. Ambedkar's contribution towards women empowerment.
- To study the of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's Steps and efforts for the empowerment of India.

Methodology:

This paper is purely based on secondary data. To study the contribution of Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar towards women empowerment articles, newspapers, books, published papers, internet,

Analysis and Discussions:

The Indian women were enjoying high status in the Vedic times. The actual misery of women became started in Vedic period. The Manusmriti age has strictly restricted women for education and imposed certain binding which lead to a bandit life. As references indicate the higher status of women in Vedic period also depicts the restrictions on women. In post Vedic period, tremendous changes are seen in women's status, the restrictions on social behaviours and education was important.

Dr. Ambedkar started his movement in 1920. He stated 'We shall see better days soon and our progress will be greatly accelerated if male education is persuaded side by side with female education.' He started fierce propaganda against the Hindu social order and launched a journal Mook Nayak in 1920 and Bahiskrit Bharat in 1927 for this purpose. Through its issues he put due stress on the gender equality and the need for education and exposed the problems of the depressed as well as women. In January 1928, a woman's association was founded in Bombay with Ramabai, Ambedkar's wife, as its president. In the Kalram Temple Entry Satyagraha at Nasik in 1930, 500 women participated and many of them were arrested along with men and ill treated in jails. The encouragement of Dr. B.R.Ambedkar to empower women to speak boldly was seen when Radhabai Vedal addressed a press Conference in 1931. She said "It is better to die a hundred times than live a life full of humiliation. We will sacrifice our lives but we will win our rights ". The credit for this self-respect and firm determination of women goes to Ambedkar.

Dr.B.R Ambedkar believed in the strength of women and their role in the process of social reform. The historic 'Mahad Satyagraha' witnessed participation of 300 women along with their Male counterparts. Addressing another meeting of about 3000 women, he said, " I measure the progress of community by the degree of progress which women had achieved. Let every girl who marries stand by her husband, claim to be her husband's friend and equal and refuse to be his slave. I am sure if you follow this advice, you will bring honour and glory to yourselves ". He strongly advocated for family planning measures for women in Bombay Legislative Assembly In 1942, being a labour Minister of Execution Council of Governor General, he introduced a Maternity Benefit Bill. He provided several provisions in the constitution for protecting the welfare and civil rights of women. He introduced the Hindu Code Bill in the Parliament and highlighted the issues about women's property rights. The constitution has laid down as a fundamental right the equality of women and men. But the change from a position of utter degradation and subjugation of women in the 21 century is not a simple case of progress of women in modern era. Revolutionary changes have taken place in the position of women in India after independence. The Constitution of India provided for special steps to be taken by government to improve the condition of women by separate institutions. A quick and effective change in the status of women was contemplated through social legislations. The Constitution of India guarantees certain fundamental rights and freedom such as protection of life and personal liberty. Indian women are the Beneficiaries of these rights in the same manner as the Indian men.

In the post-independent India we had series of laws passed for the upliftment of women. These legislations have been brought in order to give equal rights and privileges with men, to eliminate discriminations against women, remove inequality between sexes, The important Acts passed for the upliftment of women are:

- The Hindu Marriage Act of 1955.
- The Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act of 1956.
- The Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act of 1956.
- The Hindu Women Right to Property Act of 1973.
- The Dowry Prohibition Act of 1961.
- The Equal Remuneration Act of 1976.

Constitutional Provisions:

The Constitution of India contains various provisions. which provide for equal rights and opportunity for both men and women.

- Article 15 prohibits discrimination against any citizen on the ground of sex,
- Article 15 (3) empowers the State to make positive discrimination in favour of women and children,
- Article 16 provides for Equality of opportunity in matters of public employment,
- Article 23 prohibits trafficking in human beings and forced labor,
- Article 39 (a) and (d) enjoins the state to provide equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work,
- Article 42 enjoins upon the state to make provisions for security just and humane conditions of work and for maternity relief,
- Article 51 A(e) imposes a Fundamental Duty on every citizen to renounce the practice derogatory to the dignity of women.
- Article 243D (3) provides that not less than 1/3 rd of the total number of seats to be filled by direct election in every Municipality shall be reserved for women and such seats may be Allotted by rotation to different constituencies in Municipality,
- Article 243 (4) provides reservation of offices of Chairperson in Municipalities for SC, ST Women in such manner as the legislature of a State, may by law provide,

In pursuance of the above Constitutional provisions, various legislative enactments have been framed to protect, safeguard and promote the interests of women. Many of these legislative enactments have been in the sphere of labour law to ameliorate the working conditions of women labour.

Steps taken by the Government of India for women’s empowerment:

It is the education which is the right weapon to cut the social slavery and it is the education which will enlighten the downtrodden masses to come up and gain social status, economic betterment and political freedom- Dr. B.R. Ambedkar .Education of women, Self-Help Groups, Capacity Building and Skilled formation, Skill Up-gradation Training Programme, Women and Child Development, Working Women’s Hosts, Employment and Work Participation Rate, Women and political participation, National Commission for Women .

Dr. B.R Ambedkar’s Efforts for the Empowerment of women:

Considering the guidelines, recommendations, suggestions and status given by Dr.Ambedkar, the Government of India and other State Government have implemented large number of schemes for the empowerment of women in India. On Dr. Ambedkar’s death, in the condolence message in parliament, then Prime Minister Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru said “Babasaheb Dr.Ambedkar was a symbol of revolt against all oppressive features of Hindu society “, His dream of society, based on gender equality is yet to be realized and therefore his thoughts are important for the social reconstruction that favours women empowerment.

Government Schemes for Women Empowerment :

The government programmes for women development began as early as 1954 in India but the actual participation began only in 1974. At present, the Government of India has over 34 schemes for operated by different department and ministries. Considering various article in the constitution, many schemes for the empowerment have been launched by the part and current government.

- Beti Bachao Beti padhao scheme
- One stop Centre scheme
- Women Helpline scheme
- UJJAWALA, A comprehensive scheme for Prevention of trafficking and Reuse
- Rehabilitation and Reintegration of Victims of Trafficking and Commercial Sexual Exploitation
- Working Women’s Hostel
- Miniistry approves new projects under Ujjawalas scheme and continues existing projects
- Rajiv Gandhi National Creche Scheme for the Children of Working Mothers
- SWADHAR Gres (A Scheme for women in Difficult Circumstances).
- Revision under IGMSY in Accordance with National Food Security Act 2013 in XII th Plan
- Suport to Training and Employment Programme for Women (STEP)
- NARI SHAKTI PURASKAR
- Awardees of Stree Shakti Puruskar, 2014 and Awardees of Nari Shakti Puruskar
- Awardees of Rajya Mahila Samman and Zila Mahila Samman
- Indira Gandhi Matriva Sahyog Yojana IGMSY a conditional Maternity Benefit Scheme,
- Mahila police Volunteers
- Mahila Shakti Kendras etc.

The efforts of government and its different agencies are ably supplemented by NGOs that are playing an equally important role in facilitating women empowerment. Despite concerned efforts of Government and NGOs there are certain gaps. Of course we have come a long way in empowering women yet the future journey is different and demanding.

Conclusion:

Dr. B.R Ambedkar sacrificed his whole life for the betterment, rights and justice to underprivileged sections Society. He made such provisions and included such articles in the constitution of India which helped a common man to fight against in justice .Women is treated as sources of enjoyment and exploited by man in Hindu culture prevalence during and after Vedic period because the society move according to Manusmruti at that time. Due to Ambedkar reforms , women got independence and learnt to live with pride. With self confidence, women started education, employment and become a part of whole system like man. It is only due to the steps, efforts and contribution of Dr. B.R.Ambedkar that women are self dependent today and government has initiated many schemes and implemented for the empowerment of women development development society. All the Indian women to remember and salute Dr.B.R.Ambedkar. The only man who fought for the women's rights and provid all the rights to women in constitution of India on the day International women's day.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar: Architect Of Modern India

Unlike a drop of water which loses its identity when it joins the ocean, man does not lose his being in the society in which he lives. Man's life is independent. He is born not for the development of the society alone, but for the development of his self. -- Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar may be unrivalled by any great in human history in terms of all conceivable markers of greatness. Whether it is the number of his busts and statues; pictures and posters, songs and ballads, books and pamphlets, conferences and seminars, roads, squares or localities named after him; or the numbers and sizes of congregations in his memory, there is no one who could even come close. Interestingly, even he is getting more and more distant from us with the passage of time, his legend is growing, diffusing the contours of a historical persona and thereby making him increasingly unavailable for us to draw lessons from. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar as a global thinker addressing some of the most intricate problems that our world still wrestles with. Since Indian society is a caste-based society, it is not egalitarian and is hierarchical. Hence, it is very difficult to ensure liberty, equality, fraternity and justice for all. Therefore, Ambedkar led his movement for justice, liberty, equality and fraternity both in social and political spheres.

This paper intends to highlight the outstanding achievements and work done by Dr. B. R. Ambedkar to develop and uplift the nation and the people of the nation to stand nation as a modern India. His works and suggestions represented in the form of the constitution of India indicate his foreseeing vision to make India a modern nation.

Father of the Constitution

The Indian Constitution and its drafting process are often seen as synonymous with Ambedkar. He was often seen as the father of the Indian Constitution and is probably the most well-known of all Constituent Assembly members. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar became a key figure in India's constitution-making process due to the offices he held and his interventions and speeches in the Assembly. He was the Chairman of the Assembly's most crucial committee – the Drafting Committee – and was also a member of another important committee. As chairman of the Drafting Committee, he had to defend the Draft Constitution which it prepared and therefore intervened in nearly every debate. On behalf of the Scheduled Caste Federation party, Ambedkar wrote and submitted States and Minorities to the Sub-Committee on Fundamental Rights of the Constituent Assembly. A mini-Constitution in itself, States and Minorities framed strong social and economic rights. Comparatively, Ambedkar's interventions and speeches, on various aspects of the Constitution, were often insightful, well-reasoned and scrupulously researched. This won him the support and respect of other members of the Assembly who allowed him to lead the constitution-making project.

Fight for Justice

His cherished goal of an ideal society is to guarantee to all its members justice-political, social and economic, and according to him the attainment of this human ideal should be by the democratic process. Justice is simply another name for liberty, equality, and fraternity. He proposed a strategy of development based on growth with justice. The specifications and determinations of the meaning and the urgent necessity of social justice, economic justice and political justice have been spelt out in numerous places throughout Dr Ambedkar's works. Ambedkar's life was a search for social justice. The term "social justice" is based upon equality, liberty and fraternity of all human beings. The aim of social justice is to remove all kinds of inequalities based upon caste, race, sex, power, position, and wealth. Social justice brings equal distribution of the social, political, and economic resources of the community. With respect to the fundamental issues of social justice, Dr Ambedkar's preoccupations during the first half of the twentieth century remain our preoccupations in the first half of the twenty-first century. Dr Ambedkar's understanding of the nature of economic justice evolved, but his commitment to it never faltered. He envisaged a proactive role for the state and public policy to intervene in order to support the disadvantaged and marginalized sections. While he supported the state's intervention in the economy, he also stressed the need to adopt strong policies for affirmative action that would reshape the state and make it representative, responsive and accountable.

Role in RBI's Conceptualisation

The Reserve Bank of India was conceptualised in accordance with the guidelines presented by Dr Ambedkar to the Hilton Young Commission based on his book, The Problem of the Rupee – Its Origin and Its Solution. The legislative assembly passed this under the name of RBI act 1934, its need, working style and outlook were presented by Dr Ambedkar in front of the Hilton Young Commission. For more details read, "Evidence before the Royal Commission on Indian Currency and Finance" and "The Problem of the Rupee – Its origin and its solution."

Hilton Young Commission submitted its report in 1926 and it was on the recommendations of the report RBI was established. Reserve Bank of India (RBI) came into the picture on 1st April 1935. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar had submitted a statement of evidence to the commission and one can find clear authority and evidence of Babasaheb's expertise on the matter in the statement submitted. It is really shameful that India has not recognized Babasaheb's thoughts.

Saviour of Labour Rights in India

Under previous Colonial rule in India 14 to 12 Hrs of work by the law, your Employer could make you work up to 14 Hours but Dr Ambedkar as a Labour Minister and as the Labour Member of the Viceroy's Executive Council between 1942 and 1946 changed this law and reduced it to 12 to 8 Hrs. The Department of Labour was established in the year November 1937 and Dr Ambedkar took over the Labour portfolio in July 1942. The policy formulation and planning for the development of irrigation and electric power was a major concern. It was the Labour Department, under the guidance of Dr Ambedkar, that decided to establish the "Central Technical Power Board" (CTPB) for power system development, hydel power station sites, hydro-electric surveys, analysing problems of electricity generation and thermal power station investigation.

If there is any one person who secured the rights of labourers in India, it was none other than Babasaheb Ambedkar. Without Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar, today the future of India workers would have been in pitch darkness. He is the only leader in India who was multi-dimensional and a great visionary.

The so-called upper castes never gave credit to Dr Ambedkar's contribution to building a great nation, which is today one of the biggest developing economies of the world. All this has become possible only because of Dr Ambedkar's robust economic policies, which have saved India even in times of great economic depressions. Be it the founding guidelines of the RBI or the principles governing any other aspect of the economy, Dr Ambedkar has given the best India could ever have had. It was Dr Ambedkar who brought in the 8-hour working day to India, bringing it down from 14 hours. He brought it in the 7th session of the Indian Labour Conference in New Delhi, November 27, 1942. All workers should be grateful to Dr Ambedkar, especially women employees, as Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar framed many laws for women workers in India such as 'Mines Maternity Benefit Act', 'Women Labour Welfare Fund', 'Women and Child Labour Protection Act', 'Maternity Benefit for Women Labour', and 'Restoration of Ban on Employment of Women on Underground Work in Coal Mines'.

The Champion of Women's Rights

I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress which women have achieved. —
Babasaheb Ambedkar

Dr. Ambedkar championed the cause of women as well as the miserable plight of Schedule Castes and Scheduled Tribes throughout his career. He discussed a number of problems of Indian women and sought their solutions in the Bombay Legislative Council, in the Viceroy's Assembly as the chairman of the Drafting Committee and also in the Parliament as the first Law Minister of Independent India.

Dr. Ambedkar was sworn in as a nominated member of the Bombay Legislative Council on 18th Feb. 1927. He advised Indians to participate in the world war on behalf of the British Government. His arguments on the Maternity Benefit Bill and on Birth Control were quite relevant to recognize the dignity of women. He vehemently supported the Maternity Bill.

His argument was –

“It is in the interest of the nation that the mother ought to get a certain amount of rest during the pre-natal period and also subsequently, and the principle of the Bill is based entirely on that principle”.

Ambedkar was the one to introduce the Hindu Code Bill through which Inheritance of property, Right to adopt children, Right to Divorce, Right to remarry came to our Parliament. He worked to improve the status of women by granting the fundamental rights to all the citizens irrespective of caste, creed, race and sex. He also brought the Mines Maternity Benefit Bill for women all over India. Under this act, a woman working in the mine is entitled to maternity benefit 8 weeks.

At the All-India Depressed Classes Women's Conference held at Nagpur on 20th July, 1940 Dr. Ambedkar emphasized that there could not be any progress without women. He spoke “I am a great believer in women's organization I know that what they can do to improve the condition of the society if they are convinced. They should educate their children and instil high ambition in them.

Ambedkar made some memorable speeches at the Round Table Conference. He placed the viewpoint of the depressed classes and pleaded for Dominion Status. His speeches created a good impression upon the British public. He served on a number of important sub-committees and prepared a scheme of political safeguards for the protection of depressed classes in the future constitution of a self-governing India. Ambedkar also advocated the immediate introduction of the adult franchise.

When Ambedkar returned to India after attending the round table conference in 1932, hundreds of women were present for the committee meetings. Since Ambedkar was well convinced about the status of women, as the Chairman of the Drafting Committee he tried and adequate inclusion of women's rights in the political vocabulary and constitution of India. Therefore, by considering women's equality both in formal and substantial senses he included special provisions for women's equality both in formal and sustainable senses he included special provisions for women while all other general provisions are applicable to them, as to men constitutional provisions. Hence, there are Articles like 15(3), 51(A), and so on. His key work in the preparation of the Indian Constitution made it to be known as a New Charter of Human Rights. He looked upon law as the instrument of creating a sane social order in which the development of an individual should be in harmony with the growth of society.

Conclusion

A man who faced caste discrimination right from his childhood, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar emerged as a Champion of socially discriminated castes of the society including women of all religions and labours. He crusaded against the social victimization of the Dalits and Untouchables and the exploited people of India. The above-mentioned contributions of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar show his strong views on social development, communal harmony, the constitution he drafted. Dr. Ambedkar was an academician and scholar par excellence who had studied in the most prestigious institutions of the globe. And above all, he was a great national hero and a genuine patriot.

“Until the lions have their own historians, the history of the hunt will always glorify the hunter.”

Elimination of Hinduism : Ambedkarait Buddhism

Violina Patowary

Department of Philosophy Gauhati University

Abstract:

The present paper makes a humble attempt to show Ambedkar's rejection of Hinduism and reasons behind it. In this context concept of Untouchability is coming under its purview. Since the main reason behind his rejection of Hinduism is its division of caste system and considering Dalits as avarnas. This social stratification ultimately made a deterioration and life threat to the lower caste people. This along with many other factors made Ambedkar who was then considered as untouchable, rejects Hindu views and embrace Buddhism with some modifications and gave birth to a new kind of Buddhism named as "Navayana" or Ambedkarait Buddhism. The paper wants to show the main tenets of Ambedkarait Buddhism, and the objectives of Navayana are also in the ambit of its discussion.

Keywords: Dalit, Untouchable, Hinduism, Buddhism, Caste.

Introduction:

Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar was an Indian jurist, economist, politician, social reformer and a "Dalit". The term "Dalit" here is specifically focused, because the "Elimination of Hinduism" as the title of the paper is dealing with is born out of the concept of Dalit or untouchable. Untouchables are regarded as classless at that time. And Ambedkar campaigned against this social discrimination towards them. Since Varna system is the prime things of Hindu philosophy, so ultimately his revolt was against Hindu views. And since Buddhism is liberal in caste discrimination and there are no such class division in Buddhism, he was attracted towards Buddhism and as a result a new kind of Buddhist philosophy was emerged i.e. Navayana or Ambedkarait Buddhism.

Concept of Dalit or Untouchable:

The question is who are the untouchables and where did it all start? The reply is the Varna or caste division propounded in the Rig Veda describes the society as a four-varna named as Varna dharma or caste system. The supreme varna is Brahman, the second is Kshatriya, the third is Vaishya and the last is Sudra. And works are also divided according to the classes. Brahmans are the priest class. Kshatriyas are the kings and ministers. Vaishyas are the business class people and sudras are the sweeper class, who serve the upper classes. This idea of social stratification was further developed in the Laws of Manu, written in Manusmriti. No mention of the untouchable class can be found here, as the Varna division system excluded the untouchables altogether. They have been identified as Ati Sudra or inferior to the Sudras. Later, they came to be known as Avarnas or the people with no caste or in Upanishads it is mentioned as the 'fifth caste' or Panchama, which spawned from the contact between Sudra men and Brahman women.

Born into an untouchable home, Ambedkar, was on the receiving end of stigma and social disabilities that came with his birth. As an untouchable, the religious and social constraints like, the lack of access to public wells, education, entering into Hindu temples, and various other such kind of discrimination etc. were an inescapable part of his childhood experiences. Yet he didn't fully awaken to the depth of caste-based oppression until he began to travel beyond his familiar village setting, which became necessary for his studies. Ambedkar's first rude and shattering shock "came when one summer on a visit to home from high school to see his father, he along with his brother and nephew were denied access to drinking water, only because they belonged to the lower castes. It was then that Ambedkar learned anew that he was an untouchable. On another occasion, when he stealthily drank water from a public facility, Ambedkar was "beaten black and blue." His experiences at school were no different; he would sit in a corner, so as not to "pollute" caste Hindus.

Revolt against Untouchability and Elimination of Hinduism:

Ambedkar stand against untouchables and tackling the root cause of Untouchability. In India the term untouchables or harijans are replaced by "Dalit" by Ambedkar. He feared that without the social and economic equality, the caste Hindu would continue to oppress and suppress the Dalit people. Ambedkar found that oppression was not only made by the Hindu high class people, actually it was written in the Hindu scriptures itself. Scriptures itself gives the concept of caste divisions and alot works according to the caste. Ambedkar was disappointed by that whole thing. In his words, "we refused to be controlled and bound by the 'Shastras' and 'smrities' composed in the dark ages and base our claims on justice and humanity." As a protest to these class divisions, Ambedkar publicly condemned the classic Hindu text, the Manusmriti (Laws of Manu), for ideologically justifying caste discrimination and "untouchability", and he ceremonially burned copies of the ancient text. As he found that Manusmriti is a violation of human rights.Thus annually 25 December is celebrated as Manusmriti Dahan Din (Manusmriti Burning Day) by Ambedkarites and Dalits. As a response to the various questions for burning the Manusmriti, Ambedkar said, "the bonfire of Manusmriti was quite intentional. We made a bonfire of it because we view it as a symbol of injustice under which we have been crushed across centuries."

He also led a Satyagraha in Mahad termed as "Mahad Satyagraha" to fight for the right of the untouchable community to draw water from the main water tank of the town. Basically untouchables were not allowed to drink water from the public tank that time. Ambedkar faced that problem from his childhood onwards. Apart from this, he also began a struggle for the right to enter Hindu temples. "Temple Entry Movement" was also a part of the caste distinction problem. Since untouchables are not allowed to visit temples, Ambadkar along with a large majority of Dalit people launched the Kalaram Temple movement in the year 1930. Ambedkar raised the question of untouchables' entry and worship in Hindu temples. Ambedkar said that the image of God should be accessible to all seekers and rejected the notion that a temple is polluted by the presence of an untouchable. He also rejected the idea of separate temples for the untouchables and insisted on access to the existing ones. Kalaram Temple Satyagraha making one of the greatest processions of Nashik. The procession was headed by a military band and a batch of scouts, women and men walked with discipline, order and determination to see the God for the first time. They are opposed by Brahmins to not to allow them into the temple. This movement was last till 1935 and finally, Ambedkar gave up on temple entry as a way of raising the social standing of the untouchables.

Because of these caste divisions Dalit were faces many such problem, to which Ambedkar console them by protesting against the unfair things done by the higher class Hindu people. Ambedkar finally ended up with rejecting Hinduism. In his words, his reasons for why he left Hinduism is, "I thought for long that we could rid the Hindu society of its evils and get the depressed classes incorporated into it on terms of equality... Experience has taught me better. I stand today absolutely convinced that for the depressed classes there can be no equality among the Hindus because on inequality rest the foundations of Hinduism.”

Ambedkarait Buddhism: Province and Limitation:

Ambedkar had been long been critic for Hinduism and for him Buddhism gave him solace in overcoming the negativity of Hinduism. Ambedkar's conversion to Buddhism is a great move, because he was not converted to Buddhism alone, rather it was a mass conversion of almost 365000 Dalit people. Ambedkar's conversion have new impetus to the Dalit movement in India, breaking the boundaries of four fold Varna system of Hinduism. He stated that, "I tell you all very specifically, religion is for men, and not men for religion. To get human treatment, convert yourself."

The rational outlook and flexibility is the main source of attraction towards Buddhism for him. But Ambedkar's Buddhism was not the exact age old Buddhist Philosophy. It was the modified version or we can say it was the reinterpretation of old Buddhism in a new way. It was named as New Vehicle or Navayana or Ambedkarait Buddhism or Bhimayana after the first name of Ambedkar I. e. Bhimrao.

The Neo-Buddhist Movement or Dalit Movement is to reject Hinduism, challenged caste system in India and promote the rights of Dalit community. The movement also rejected the teachings of Theravada, Mahayana and Vijnanavada form of Buddhism. It also negates the concepts of institution of monk after renunciation, rebirth on after life, samsara, meditation, nirvana etc. In fact Bhimayana is the reinterpretation of Buddha's religion interms of class struggle and social equality.

Although, Ambedkar stated Navayana to be Atheist, Navayana Viharas and Shrines features images of Buddha and Ambedkar and the followers bow down and offer their prayers before them. According to Junghare, for the followers of Navayana, Ambedkar has become a deity and he is worshipped in practice.

The dharma diksa i.e. given by Ambedkar to new convert includes 22 vows. These 22 vows struck a blow at the roots of Hindu beliefs and practices. These vows could serve as a bulwark to protect Buddhism from confusion and contradictions. These vows could liberate converts from superstitions, wasteful and meaningless rituals, which have led to pauperisation of masses and enrichment of upper castes of Hindus. Without knowing these views Navayana Buddhism is incomplete. They includes,

1. I shall have no faith in Brahma, Vishnu and Mahesh nor shall I worship them.
2. I shall have no faith in Rama and Krishna who are believed to be incarnation of God nor shall I worship them.
3. I shall have no faith in 'Gauri', Ganapati and other gods and goddesses of Hindus nor shall I worship them.
4. I do not believe in the incarnation of God.
5. I do not and shall not believe that Lord Buddha was the incarnation of Vishnu. I believe this to be sheer madness and false propaganda.
6. I shall not perform 'Shraddha' nor shall I give 'pind-dan'.
7. I shall not act in a manner violating the principles and teachings of the Buddha.
8. I shall not allow any ceremonies to be performed by Brahmins.
9. I shall believe in the equality of man.

10. I shall endeavor to establish equality.
11. I shall follow the 'noble eightfold path' of the Buddha.
12. I shall follow the 'paramitas' prescribed by the Buddha.
13. I shall have compassion and loving kindness for all living beings and protect them.
14. I shall not steal.
15. I shall not tell lies.
16. I shall not commit carnal sins.
17. I shall not take intoxicants like liquor, drugs etc.
18. I shall endeavor to follow the noble eightfold path and practise compassion and loving kindness in everyday life.
19. I renounce Hinduism which is harmful for humanity and impedes the advancement and development of humanity because it is based on inequality, and adopt Buddhism as my religion.
20. I firmly believe the Dhamma of the Buddha is the only true religion.
21. I believe that I am having a re-birth.
22. I solemnly declare and affirm that I shall hereafter lead my life according to the principles and teachings of the Buddha and his Dhamma.

Relevance and conclusion:

Ambedkar's revolt was against the casteist society that refuses to acknowledge them as equals. The reason for choosing Buddhism is that the caste divisions are not found in Buddhism and according to him to serve humanism is the soul aim of Buddhism. Ambedkar was attracted to Buddhism's rational outlook tuned with morality. It's scientific temper, teaching of equality, solidarity and its emphasis on transforming both the self and the world through self effort attracted him the most and gave him strength to fight against the brutality of high class people like Brahmins. Critic may point out that Ambedkar's conversion to Buddhism was a political move. He had for years demanding a separate electorate for the untouchables but did not able to succeed. So the conversion was more of a political protest than other. Another one goes like that conversion was a product of his life long personal experience of Hinduism. However, the reason behind his conversation may be differently interpreted different critics , but it was a great move. And the positive effects are more. Ambadkar's anti-caste revolution is still relevant today. Schudled Caste, schudled Tribe are given reservation, women are secured, these are some of the impact of his doings. Hindu concept of caste division is the backbone of caste distinction for him. So ultimately he ended with eliminating Hinduism from his life. In his words, "Religion must mainly be a matter of principles only. It can not be a matter of rules. The moment it degenerates into rules, it ceases to be a religion, as it kills responsibility which is an essence of the true religious act."

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar and Human Right

Dr. Prashant N. Shambharkar

Assistant Professor

Aniket College of Social Work, Wardha

Abstract:

The present paper focuses on the basic issues which are barriers to the egalitarian democracy of Indian social system: Brahmanism and equivalent to the caste and class systems respectively. The paper adopts a novel perspective that is quite unknown to the west which perceives basic human rights as natural rights. In fact, the state is a social construction and human rights are the legal output. The paper proposes an alternative remedy to human rights issues in Indian context that is Ambedkar's thought which can be better qualified as Ambedkarism; a social medicine for caste-ridden sick Indian social order. In the end, in order to adopt human rights as a part of life to establish just social order, a series of strategies compatible with Indian situations are proposed; as used by Dr Ambedkar himself.

Keywords: Ambedkar, Human rights and fundamental rights.

Introduction:

Human rights are moral principles or norms that describe certain standards of human behavior and are regularly protected in municipal and international law. They are commonly understood as inalienable, fundamental rights "to which a person is inherently entitled simply because she or he is a human being "and which are "inherent in all human beings", regardless of their age, ethnic origin, location, language, religion, ethnicity, or any other status. They are applicable everywhere and at every time in the sense of being universal, and they are egalitarian in the sense of being the same for everyone. They are regarded as requiring empathy and the rule of law and imposing an obligation on persons to respect the human rights of others, and it is generally considered that they should not be taken away except as a result of due process based on specific circumstances.

Many of the basic ideas that animated the human rights movement developed in the aftermath of the Second World War and the events of the Holocaust culminating in the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights in Paris by the United Nations General Assembly in 1948. Ancient peoples did not have the same modern-day conception of universal human rights. The true forerunner of human rights discourse was the concept of natural rights which appeared as part of the medieval natural law tradition that became prominent during the European Enlightenment with such philosophers as John Locke, Francis Hutcheson and Jean-Jacques Burlamaqui and which featured prominently in the political discourse of the American Revolution and the French Revolution. From this foundation, the modern human rights arguments emerged over the latter half of the 20th century, possibly as a reaction to slavery, torture, genocide and war crimes, as a realization of inherent human vulnerability and as being a precondition for the possibility of a just society.

During the last decade of the 19th century, many Indian leaders born among the lower castes like Narayan Guru (1854-1928), Jotiba Phule (1827-1890), and Ramaswamy Naicker 1879-1973) launched massive struggles for the dignity of Dalits throughout India. Ambedkar was the most towering figure among these Dalit leaders.

In 1917 he joined the Baroda State Service after returning from his studies in the USA and the United Kingdom, as part of the terms of his scholarship agreement. He worked in the city of Baroda, the place of the ruling family of Gaikwad, which financed his studies abroad. He worked as secretary in the defense office of the Maharaja of Baroda State.

However, despite his foreign education, he had to endure insults while at work due to his low caste origin. He was a victim of the cruel Dalit discrimination. He suffered the ignominy of having document files hurled by peons at his face.

He suffered the humiliating experience of not being served drinking water during official functions. At the officer's club, he had to sit in a corner and keep his distance from the other members belonging to higher castes. He also had difficulties in finding a rented house, as he was not allotted government bungalow. He stayed in an inn owned by Parsis (members of Zoroastrian religion). One morning, as he was getting ready to go to work, a dozen Parsis, allwielding sticks, rushed up to his room screaming that he had polluted the inn and insisted on his immediate departure. He begged them to let him stay for a week longer since he hoped to get his government bungalow by then. But they were obdurate. If they found him at the inn that evening, they said God help him. After spending much of the day in a public garden, Ambedkar, in utter frustration and disgust, left for Bombay by the 9 pm train.

These scorching incidents goaded Ambedkar to work for the protection of dalit rights and upliftment of the status of the Dalits. In 1924, he started legal practice in Bombay and founded the Bahishkrit Hitkarni Sabha (Depressed Class Institute) to uplift the Dalits. Henceforth, he started his movement and took the cause of the Dalits. He roused the dalit consciousness to fight for the eradication of dalit discrimination; to claim equality of treatment, status and opportunity; to equally enjoy all rights? Civil, political, social and economic? And respect for the dignity of persons. He was considered a crusader for the human rights of the Dalits in India.

The Hindu religious belief that "All human beings are not born equal" creates caste-based discrimination against the Dalits that leads to various forms of violence against them including public humiliation, torture, rape, beating and killing. Reacting to the values of Hinduism, Rabindranath Gore wrote,

We do not value Hinduism, we value human dignity... We want equal rights in the society. We will achieve them as far as possible while remaining within the Hindu fold or if necessary by kicking away this worthless Hindu identity.

Ambedkar was a great supporter of women's liberation. He blamed the verna system, which has not only subjugated Dalits but also women. He questioned Manu Smriti (Laws of Manu), the law book (Dharam-Shastra) of Brahminic Hinduism and attributed to Manu, the legendary first man and lawgiver. Manu Smriti prescribed the Dharma of each Hindu, stating the obligations attached to his or her social class and stage of life. It was hostile to the interest of lower caste people and women. It prohibited re-marriage of widows. He felt that Manu Smriti was solely responsible for the downfall of Hindu women. He encouraged the Dalits to embrace Buddhism to liberate their own selves from Hindu subjugation. Hence he fought for the right to choose ones' faith. After embracing Buddhism, Ambedkar said, "Unfortunately for me I was born a Hindu Untouchable... I solemnly assure you I will not die as a Hindu." He practiced what he advocated and became a Buddhist in 1956.

He also wrote about the French revolution ideas of fraternity, liberty and equality. He thought that the French and Russian revolutions failed to realize all three ideas. He believed that they could not all be realized except through the way of the Buddha.

Objectives of the Study:

1. To study Dr.Ambedkars philosophy on human rights.
2. To study the view that human rights one being violated in the present times.

Hypothesis of the Study:

1. Dr.Ambedkars philosophy of human rights includes equality, independence and fraternity.
2. Human values are disappearing in the society today and social destructive acts beings encouraged.

What are the fundamental Right provided by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar in the India constitution?

The title of the Indian Constitution, Part III of Fundamental Rights and Part IV of the State Policy Guidelines are at the heart of the Constitution. Taken together, they reflect the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, civil and political rights, as well as the Convention on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights. Part four 'A', which outlines the basic duties of the Constitution, is important; because, rights are incomplete without duty. The eternal message of our Constitution is that "all human beings are born free and equal."

Sr.no.	Fundamental Rights	Frequency	Percentage
1	Right to freedom	103	25.75
2	Right to equality	56	10.5
3	Right to religious freedom	29	7.25
4	Right to constitutional remedy	82	20.5
5	All of the above	130	32.6
	Total	400	100

An analysis of the table above shows that there are 130 respondents who claim that Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has enshrined in the Indian constitution the right to liberty, equality religious freedom and constitutional remedy for Citizens with a percentage of 32.06 the number of respondents who claim that Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar provided five rights to freedom in the India constitution is 25.27 and the number of respondents who say that the right to freedom of religion is provide by dr. babasabeb ambedkar in the India constitution is 7.25

For the above table it can be concluded that the proportion of respondents who claim that dr. babasaheb Ambedkar provided for the right to freedom equality religions freedom, education and constitutional measures in the Indian constitution is 32.06

The Maharashtra State Human Rights Commission receives an average of fifty complaints a day. The number of these complaints is increasing day by day. But many have no idea how to make these complaints. Therefore, no complaint is lodged. The general public does not even know which complaints the commission takes into account and which ones it does not take into account. But it is a matter of consolation that justice is given to the common man by filing a complaint immediately.

Conclusion

It is necessary to critically analyze the shortcomings in existing laws for the protection and implementation of Dalits human Rights. This is needed to bring out means and methods extensively not only for effective protection and implementation of Human Rights of Dalits but also to uplift them socially, economically and politically to create bright future for them. Various shortcomings leading to problems of Dalits need to be addressed which may include short comings in protection laws, implementation of laws and procedures to know why violations of Human Rights are taking place in spite of so many protection laws in existence. Short comings in implementing international laws/ international commitments in this regard and shortcomings in role played by judiciary in corrective justice part need due consideration. To what extent political unwillingness of the people in power is responsible for the failure of legal system for protection of Human Rights of Dalits need to be assessed. Short comings in role played by Human Rights Commissions at the Centre and state level to protect Human Rights of Dalits are to be considered. How and why plight of Dalits remain unchanged even in modern era after 70 years of independence is a matter of grave concern.

Abstract

Dr.Ambedkar known as the most educated among the modern India and the father of Indian Constitution. He has an inevitable role in ensuring the equality of rights and freedom in education without any kind of discrimination among the contemporary Society of India.. He believes that education is not only the tool of empowerment but also as a movement of social change. Dr.Ambedkar's restless fight against discrimination made the right of education to everyone irrespective of sex, class, castes and race. Not only through movements, he implemented his views on education in legislations and laws and into Acts to ensure the freedom and equality in Education to all, as a member of Constitution drafting committee of India.

Through this paper, discusses the roles and contributions of Dr.Ambedkar in the Field of Education. And also the relevance of his work towards the empowerment of young generations of India.

Key Words : Education, Empowerment, Dr.Ambedkar

Introduction

Dr.Ambedkar, pioneer philosopher and father of Indian constitution, has touched every part of life of individuals to pave the path to lead a life with justice and enjoys the freedom. Once he said "Education is something which ought to be bought within the reach of everyone". This implication has thrown light in to the importance of education in his all workers. Thus Dr. Ambedkar is regarded as the great educationist of India. He defines education as the powerful tool, that demolishes the caste-patriarchal society of India.

Contribution To the field of Education

The sculpture of Indian constitution, who stands as a symbol of struggle for achieving social justice. His mission of about is to eradicate social evils from the Indian society, and he dreamt of a nation, that secures equality, justice and freedom equally to all of her citizens. To build such a nation, he strongly believes and suggests education as the tool of movement. These reflect in making Indian constitution to make such provisions especially to the field of education.

Right to Education Act

Right of children for free and compulsory education children (RTE), enacted on 4 August, 2009. Which drawn on the basis of Article 21A of Indian Constitution, that emphasis on free and compulsory education of children from 6-14 years of age. Dr.Ambedkar has influenced greatly in framing the Act. He believes that education is not only a fundamental right but also it is the tool that drive the social empowerment at a large. India, a country that driven by caste system for a long time, were the inequalities and division of people based on the occupation occurs at its peak. In the same system, where the freedom of education is deprived. Thus, as he believes in equality in justice, it is inevitable to educate all group of people to contribute to national wellbeing. For the goal, he conveyed this opinion in constitution assemble and also expresses to improve the efficiency of education Department of India, and to implement policies that ensures the free and compulsory education to all children. From his view the Right to Education Act as inacted and India is one among naion who declares the Education as one of the Fundamental Rights of Indian citizen.

Bombay University Act

As the Right of Education Act ,emphasized on primary education, not only this , the eduation needs a support to go higher in the studies . For the purpose of ensuring the participation and and enjoying the rights and freedom in a proper way , its necessary to frame policies to support the education after the secondary education. Thus the Bombay universities act aims at reorganization and improves the efficiency of universities and colleges to mould better citizens of India through higher education.

Thus, the paper analyses the importance of Dr.Ambedkar's view of education , from the staffs Of Tribal higher secondary school. To know the level of influence made by Dr.Ambedkar's view in young professionals.

Reviews Of Literature

Inamdar(2019),Dr.Ambedkar's Thoughts on Education , In this paer the author describes the Ambedkar's view on education system of India .He wanted to a society which is just in nature and not discriminatory in any sense. Ambedkar was convinced that education was the only condition for the reconstruction of the society on the lines of equality and justice.He fought for the education of masses without discrimination of caste and sex.

Sushma N Jogan (2017), In the paper Ambedkar's vision and perspectives, explains as Education was assigned a revolutionary role in Ambedkar's conception of Social progress and in his vision of a Just and equal society.It was identified as a key instrument of liberation from oppressive structures of Hindu caste –patriarchy as well as reconstruction of a new social order.

Zene(2019) Justice for excluded and education for edomocry,this essays explores their envisaged role of education in allowing the excluded to achieve participation in the democratic process.The conclusion suggests a return to the Ambedkar's philosophy of education, as still indispensable in the contemporary society for making democracy effective for all.

Arun kumar,Hari Babuji & Raza Mir,(2021),Educate,Agitate,Organise,in the author has significantly discusses the views of Dr.Ambedkar that reflects in his every speech. The paper discusses the importance of scholarships and other educational allowances to empower all categories of people without any discrimination.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Role In Establishing Social Security In India

Dr. Vinayak R. Sakharkar

Associate Professor

Kumbhalkar Social work Evening College Ganeshpeth, Nagpur

Abstract:

Countries around the world are trying to provide decent and better-living conditions for their people. Providing social security to people is a major challenge in current global economies. In India, social security and social welfare are important, as there are many disadvantaged sections in the country. Social security is an important part of people's welfare. As the law minister of India, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar proposed social security measures for women and factory workers after independence. He believed that the state can help in creating wealth, but the creation of social security for the needy people is also a big task for the state.

With this Ambedkar's ideology, at present every developing and the developed economy is trying to provide certain social security measures and provisions to its people. According to the International Labor Organization (ILO), social security is the protection that society, individuals, and families take to ensure access to health care and guarantee income security, especially old age, unemployment, sickness, invalidation, work. The right of workers to social security has been regarded as incomparable, and therefore, it is necessary to provide protection to every worker under any system of labor law or labor policy.

In this research paper, efforts have been made to study how social security issues have emerged strongly after Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's efforts after attaining independence. In this research paper will also study social security issues with special relevance in the context of Dr. Ambedkar's ideology, his contribution towards social welfare, and study the current social security schemes prevailing in the country.

Keywords: Ambedkar's Ideology, Social Security, Protection, Social Security Schemes

Data Collection Method Used For Research:

Data for the research paper has collected from books, newspaper, magazines, reports, and websites

The Objective of Research:

The main objectives of the research presented are as follows:

- 1) To study how social security issues were strengthened after the efforts of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar after attaining independence.
- 2) To study social security issues with special relevance in the context of Dr. Ambedkar's ideology.
- 3) To study the contribution of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar in the context of social welfare.
- 4) To study the current social security schemes prevailing in the country.
- 5) To make suggestions for proper implementation of social security schemes for the development of Indian people based on the findings from research.

Introduction:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar believed that the dream of social security or social welfare can come true only when there is an equal distribution of wealth and resources. He urged the state to take the initiative to provide social security. He believed that unless there is an equal distribution of wealth, the dream of social welfare cannot come true. Article 41 of the Constitution (Directive Principles of State Policy) directs the State to the limits of its economic capacity and development that it should work in terms of unemployment, education, old age, sickness, and disability. Article 42 states that the state should make provisions for more humane conditions of work and maternity benefits. Addressing the Parliamentary Legislative Assembly on November 25, 1949, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar said that political democracy is not final unless there is a meaning based on social democracy, which is a way of life that promotes freedom, equality, and fraternity. Identifies as principles of life.

A person's awareness of social security comes when he realizes that he is getting basic needs. Human rights are concerned with rights that are related to the life; liberty, equality, and self-respect of human beings established by the Indian Constitution or that are declared by universal human rights and enforced by the Indian judicial system. In other words, human rights are rights that are inherent in all human beings, citizenship, place of residence, gender, national or ethnic source, color, religion, language, or any other condition. But when we look at the current conditions of Indian society, we find that human rights abuses and discrimination are a common problem here. Ambedkar was of the view that the state should ensure that all persons get their rights and they get equal opportunities to prove their individual abilities.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Role in Establishing Social Security in India:

Social security is one of the important aspects in terms of people's welfare and protection of life. Social security is important for current development. The social security schemes currently underway in India were a concept in the early Indian economy. In India, under the Directive Principles of State Policy, the following articles of the Constitution of India provide for social security. In which Article 38 deals with achieving a social order to promote the welfare of the people. Article 39 will direct its policy towards state security. Under which the state will ensure adequate means of livelihood for its citizens, distribution of good resources to the general community, equal pay for equal work for both men and women. Article 41 empowers the right to work, education, and public assistance. Article 42 deals with work, maternity relief, and human conditions. Article 43 deals with work and achieving minimum wages for all workers. For these reasons, various departments of state governments and civil society organizations are implementing social security, poverty alleviation, and social welfare measures. This provision in India in the context of social security,

Dr. Babasaheb is due to Ambedkar. There are two types of social security. As social support. Under this, children, mothers, the handicapped, and the elders of the community generally benefit from the state's general revenue. It is non-contributory. Second, in the form of social insurance. Under this, benefits are provided to the people through beneficiaries, subsidies from employers, and contributions from the state. Social security or social welfare depends on the structure and nature of the country. A large country like India is characterized by variations and divisions. There is a need for social security measures that are not based on class, caste, gender, and religion and benefit all the people.

As the first law minister of independent India, Ambedkar proposed social security measures for women and factory workers. He believed that the state can help in creating wealth, but the creation of social security for the needy people is also a big task for the state. At the Indian Labor Conference on 27 November 1942, he first proposed reducing the working hours from 12 hours to 8 hours. He proposed equal pay for equal work without gender bias. She enacted several laws for women in India including the Mines Maternity Benefit Act-1941, Women's Labor Welfare Fund, Women and Child Labor Protection Act, Maternity Benefit for Women Labor (Maternity Benefit Act, 1961), and underground work in coal mines. . Restoring the ban on the employment of women, for the benefit of workers, they enacted the Employees' State Insurance Act-1948 to compensate for medical care, medical leave, and injuries caused during work. Benefits provided under this Act include sickness benefits, extended sickness benefits, disability benefits, dependency benefits, maternity benefits, medical benefits, imprisonment expenses, funeral expenses, vocational rehabilitation, physical rehabilitation, and unemployment allowance, etc.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar played an important role in the creation of employment offices in India which proved to be helpful in the rehabilitation and employment of displaced service personnel during the transition period. Ambedkar was involved in various tasks. This includes the Employees' Compensation Act-1923, Employers and Workers (Disputes) Act-1860. This was provided by certain classes for payment to its employees. This included compensation for injury from an accident. The Coal Mines Provident Fund and Bonus Scheme Act-1948, which deals with the formulation of the Provident Fund Scheme and the provision of bonus schemes for persons working in coal mines. The Coal Mines Safety Amendment Bill was passed for the benefit of workers. On 31 January 1944, the Asbestos Mines Labor Welfare Fund Act-1946 is an act to create a fund for financing activities to promote the welfare of labor employed in the asbestos mining industry. Apart from this, Ambedkar also had some other contributions. Many important social welfare schemes to date have already been expressed by Ambedkar, including Dearness Allowance (DA), Salary for Factory Workers, Leave, Provident Fund Act, review of the scale of pay for employees.

The first aspect of social security is protection from the decline in the standard of living of the person, which is related to illness and accident. Whereas the second aspect of social security is to improve the living of the people and protect every person from being denied opportunities. Written documents on social security in India show that only a limited number of people are availing of social security, which hinders economic progress. India has been unable to fully understand the needs of social security. The immediate evidence suggests that there has been some improvement in some aspects of social security such as diet and right to work. But the cuts in government spending also raised questions on him. In 2011, the Planning Commission filed an affidavit in the Supreme Court regarding the poverty line based on the Tendulkar Committee report, according to which 30% of the population in India is below the poverty line. Subsequently, there were several debates for the determination of the poverty line. But the most important question is how 35 crore people can spend Rs 32 per person per day in urban areas and Rs 26 per person per day in rural areas? India spends 1.4% of its GDP on social security, the lowest in Asia.

But some Acts for Social Security and Welfare have been introduced in India. Including the Employees Provident Fund and Miscellaneous Provisions Act - 1952 (Currently, the Act applies to 187 specific industries and establishments employing 20 or more persons). There are three schemes under this Act. These include the Employees Provident Fund Scheme, Employee Deposit Related Insurance Scheme - 1976, and the Employees' Pension Scheme. In addition, legal protection of children was introduced in the National Child Labor Project Scheme (NCLPS) in 1988 to rehabilitate working children under the country's labor conditions. Under the NCLP scheme, children are removed from work and placed in specialized training centers, where they are provided with group education, vocational training, mid-day meals, scholarships, health care facilities, etc. and finally, the mainstreaming of formal Is included in, In addition, there are currently five schemes under the National Social Assistance Program, including Indira Gandhi National Old Age Pension Scheme, Indira Gandhi National Widow Pension Scheme, Indira Gandhi National Disability Pension Scheme, National Family Benefit Scheme, Annapurna Scheme, and Atal Pension Yojana. Also, the Ministry of Labor and Employment has implemented the Unorganized Workers Social Security Act, 2008. Atal Pension Yojana is a government pension scheme. It was implemented in India in the year 2015, targeted at the unorganized sector. The scheme is linked to the bank accounts opened under the Pradhan Mantri Jan Dhan Yojana and contributions are automatically deducted. In this way, the relevance of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's ideas related to social security is seen even today.

Conclusion:

Even today social security is very much needed in India, where diversity and large-scale inequality is constantly seen. In this regard, the approach used by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar to ensure social security for all is still relevant. He believed that social security measures bring social justice through equal distribution of resources. Ambedkar had emphasized that social security through social justice will bring unity and equality among all human beings. But even today India has been unable to fully understand the needs of social security. The immediate evidence shows that there has been some improvement in some aspects of social security such as diet and right to work. But the cuts in government spending also put questions on them. There is an urgent need for the government to take appropriate steps to ensure social security in the country.

Dr.B.R Ambedkar : Herald of Renaissance

Dr. H. R Renuka,

Assistant Professor, Department of Kannada
University college of Arts, Tumkur University, Tumkur 572103

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was a part of revolution throughout his life by making aspirations of upliftment and equality as the foundations of the social system. He faced hurdles like disgrace, ostracism, non-cooperation etc., thus becoming a great leader who brightened the future of the future generation. Dr. Ambedkar appeared in ten different incarnations as a fighter, revolutionary, activist, lawyer, journalist, politician, constitutionalist, intellectual, etc. to destroy the century-old servitude prevailing in Indian society and so he can be called father of nation in the true sense.

Today India is known as world leader. The reason for this honor to India is Dr. BR Ambedkar. All kinds of progress of a society are characteristics of a good society. Without the efforts of Ambedkar, the struggles against inequality within India would still be alive. Today he could be called the world leader because of the strategies he devised to stem the exploitation of the oppressed community.

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar did not see the exploitation of the Dalit community as an outsider. Instead, he fought against exploitation being part of the community instead of he alone trying to free himself from exploitation, thus could be called Buddha- an activist by implementing strategies to save the community. The Indians fought for independence from the British and internally the lower caste Indians were subjected to the subjugation of the upper castes. Freedom struggles against this too happened.

Most Indians within the Indian society were not free from the life of slavery, so the freedom of the oppressed was necessary at that time. If a great leader like Ambedkar had not arrived, the life of Indian civilization today would have been like two thousand years ago. Modernization was only limited to automation and intellectuality was bound by tradition and superstition. The upper caste was still exploiting the Dalit community. Dr. Ambedkar should be credited with equipping every dalit to liberate oneself by giving them the necessary education, political rights and intellectual weapons at the right time.

For 65 years Ambedkar fought for his people in his life in various ways from childhood to adulthood. Ambedkar's efforts can be mainly divided into three types: one social struggle, two political struggle, three religious struggles.

Social struggle: The British government established the South Bureau Committee whose purpose was to ensure that all classes had equal and proper representation. Dr. BR Ambedkar came before the committee and enlightened it about the exploitation of dalits and demanded a separate voting system for them. Recognizing the need for a newspaper to make understand the government and the society about the dalit issue, with the financial help of the Maharaja of Kolhapur, he started the magazine Mookanayaka.

Recognizing what caused the Dalits to remain exploited, Ambedkar set up an outfit "Bahishkruta Hitakarini" in 1924 to alleviate it. Its main purpose was uniting and educating dalits and create understanding in them about the importance of struggle and organization. It is for this reason that he travelled across Maharashtra and the neighboring states and requested dalits for pooling of all efforts for social improvement. Bahishkruta Hitakarini Sabha stressed the need for dalit education.

In March 1927, the Gujarat and Maharashtra Dalits assembled under the chairmanship of Ambedkar and pledged to reach the lake. This is because Shri SK Bhole presented a memorandum in the House of Commons and requested that the untouchables be allowed access to public wells, pools, dharmashalas and public schools. Accordingly, the Mahad Municipal Council said that untouchables could use the Choudar Lake. Dalits could not touch the lake due to upper castes' protest. A movement was declared which resulted in onslaught between dalits and upper castes. Hence Ambedkar withdrew the movement.

In 1927 he started a newspaper: Bahishkrit Bharat and convinced the dalits of their rights and duties. In recognition of the social struggle of Dr.Ambedkar , the government nominated him as a Member of Parliament. Taking advantage of this, Ambedkar discussed the social, educational, economic and political problems of Dalits and pressed on the government and society to solve them. At this point, the Municipal Council prohibited the use of pools of water by the Dalits. Protesting against this anti-Dalit attitude Ambedkar started a movement. He vowed that if dalit issues were not resolved, he would escalate this issue to the League of Nations. He decided to abandon Hinduism if these inequality practices continued to prevail over Dalits. In addition, the following conclusions were announced: by the burning of such scriptures such as Manusmrithi which supported inequality, the abolition of traditional priesthood and considering people of all castes to priesthood based on their merits. The whole Satyagraha of Chaudar Lake made Ambedkar a satyagrahi and revolutionary. It gave rise to movements and discussions about the status of dalits in society. Until then nobody had questioned about the status of dalits in society. Their problems were not considered as solvable. Because of Ambedkar's efforts, for the first time best and respectful social living became a dream of dalits.

Dalits had universal restrictions on their entry into Hindus temples. To remove this restriction, Ambedkar started a movement for allow the entry of the temple to Dalits as equals as other Hindus. The struggle was mainly fought over the entry of Parvati Temple and the Kalla Rama Temple. These struggles became uproars. By 1935 the temple doors were open to Dalits as a result of this struggle. Ambedkar convinced Dalits of their social rights by fighting for Dalits' access to public pools and temples. Upper castes had exploited dalits socially and economically. Dalits have lost their existence because of this. Therefore, at the 1942 Indian Scheduled Caste Congress, it was demanded that Dalits be a separate social class, not a part of Hinduism, but to create a separate position for dalits for the sake of their social and economic security and overall progress.

The demand for separate Dalit seats was an innovative idea for Ambedkar. This was a fierce protest against the isolation of the Dalits from the villages. There is nothing wrong with granting individual status over segregation. These efforts persuaded Dalits to abandon Hinduism.

Political struggle: Ambedkar in his political struggle sought to organize the Dalits politically and for their political rights. In 1928, when the Simon Commission visited India, 18 Dalits groups demanded that they be given the right to vote. At this time, Ambedkar demanded through Bahishkrita Hithakari Sabha that the British government grant Dalits the right to stand for election instead of nominating to legislature.

Ambedkar, who attended the roundtable council in London in 1935 as a representative of Dalits, questioned the British in many ways. He questioned whether the British had granted Dalits access to a public well, a hotel and a temple. He raised his voice that if Dalits were not given political authority, their problems would not get resolved. In 1937, the British Prime Minister declared a separate suffrage for the untouchables, and Mahatma Gandhi began a protest against this. It is for this reason arguments arose between Ambedkar and Mahatma Gandhi. Ambedkar strongly believed that the dalit issue would not end if political power was not given and convinced Dalits of the need for politics through various speeches. He later formed political parties like Independent Labour Party, Establishment of scheduled caste Federation, Republican party of india and contested elections.

Religious struggle: (You kill Brahmanism and save Hinduism Babasaheb Ambedkar writings and speeches Vol I Govt of maharashtra publication, Bombay 1989 p 77) To reform hindu society is not our aim. We want social equality for the untouchables. It is equally true that social equality is not to be realized unless you change your religion'

In 1951, Ambedkar resigned from his position as Law minister of the Central Government to free Dalits from the slavery of religion and till death continued to fight. Initially Ambedkar fought for the reform of Hinduism, but made the decision to renounce Hinduism, knowing that change in Hindus and Hinduism was impossible. (" I fell that your condition has become pitiable and continued like this because you have stayed in hindu dharma" Dr B R Ambedkar's Marati speech 'Mukthi kon pathe'?bombay province mahar conference held on 31 st may 1936)He declared his conversion publicly in 1929 and joined Buddhism in 1956 with 75,000 followers in Nagpur. Many Principles li kindness, non-violence, Equality etc. of Buddhism attracted Ambedkar. Ambedkar, who though born in Hinduism did not like to die in Hinduism, relieved others in the same way through his fights. .("Tomorrow if you become muslim every one of you will not become navab. Or if you became Christian you will not became popes social and political idea's of Dr B R Ambedkar chandra bharilla Alekh publisher's Jaipur 1947 page no 247)

Ambedkar is the reason why Dalits currently live a life of self-esteem and egalitarian equality. Due to his struggles, India has become a world leader in history. Ambedkar's struggle was to provide social justice, economic self-reliance and political rights to the last man of the society. It is due to his broad vision; he and his struggle has become immortal.

Abstract

This article treys to throw light on the continuing struggle of people for dignity and how Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar has played an important role for them to achieve an respectable position in Indian society. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar being the father of Indian constitution why he has given so much importance to the concept of social justice. The author in the research paper has discussed impact of Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar on the concept of social justice and its correlation with dignity moreover an attempt has been made to show how judiciary of India has come one step forward for securing social justice and promoting dignity of individuals.

“Concept of Social Justice stands for Liberty, Equality and Fraternity for all human beings”

-Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar

Introduction

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar has spent his whole life in the search of basic causes of social injustice and of the true means to secure dignity. Dr Ambedkar said that Indian society is divided into caste one who takes birth in one particular caste cannot go in another. Indian society is like a multi storage building one who takes birth on a particular floor has to remain on that floor or you can say that in this system you cannot travel up or down the person who takes birth in the upper caste that is upper floor has dignified life only on the basis of his birth, caliber, potential or talent has no relevance. Those who take birth in lower caste or lower flower have to live without dignity even though the person has good qualities and talent he will not be respected in the society. ‘Caste determined not only his place in the society but also his dignity in society’. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was against such inequality and he wanted to create equality in the society and he applied it to all spheres of life, in his speeches and writing, social and economic goals as well as the whole range of human relation. According to him equality is the main principal of public morality. To apply the principal of equality in political , religious , social and economic sphere means structuring the society on the basis of morality.

Concept of Justice

Everyone wants justice but each one’s concept of justice may be different from that of another. The meaning of justice also varies with time and place. To understand injustice first we have to understand Justice. “Justice means Legal and Philosophical theory by which fairness is administered”. According to Blackstone “justice is a reservoir from where the concept of rights and duties equity evolves”.

Types of justice

There are various types of Justice such as Divine Justice, Retributive Justice, Distributive justice and corrective or Remedial justice. Some of the theories believe that ideas of external standard of justice have been derived from the divine command or the then form of human nature and conduct. We find a close Nexus between justice and administration of justice.

Views of some of the prominent thinkers and Philosophers on concept of justice.

- 1) Saint Thomas Aquinas held the view that God has planted the notion of justice in the human mind which is preserved through the authority of the church. With the separation of Church and the state in modern time the religion has lost its importance as the source of notion of justice.

If we study saint Thomas Aquinas then we find that church which in other words means priest were doing justice whatever was felt right to them was considered justiciable. With the changing time we find the French revolution the modern liberal society recognizes Liberty, equality and fraternity are the three supreme values necessary for a just system of human relations.

- 2) Aristotle has divided justice mainly into distributive justice and corrective or remedial justice.

Distributive justice deals with the distribution of honor and wealth among the citizens according to the ratio of the rates of a particular society in question. It is primarily concerned with the allocation of rights, power their division of duties within the members of the society as the material source and legal rights of the distributive according to what is term as just deserts.

In remedial justice the law looks at the nature of enduring and attempts to restore the quality that existed before the wrong. Aristotle also made a distinction between natural justice which is universal an conventional justice which binds only because it was decreed by a particular authority. Aristotle emphasize upon equality as an yardstick of Justice but was nevertheless willing to tolerate wide inequality in social structure. Aristotle not only defended the role of superior man but also the institution of slavery and dominion of the male over female in the family. The central idea of Aristotle's theory is to proportionate equality. Equal cases to be treated alike or equally and unequal cases to be treated differently or unequally. According to him Justice was thus enforced by Society of artificial equality in social condition that are naturally unequal.

- 3) Bentham's theory of justice

Bentham in utilitarian theory of justice he define "Justice as fair and equal application of the law with legal and moral sense".

- 4) Rawls concept of justice

Rawls concept of justice is composed of two Cardinal principles

1st each person is to have an equal right to the most extensive basic liberty compatible with similar liberty of others.

2nd social and economic inequalities are to be arranged so that they can reasonably be expected to be at everyone advantage

According to the Rawls Justice is prior to happiness. He believes that justice represents the framework within which individual have a fair opportunity to pursue their goals and interest.

Indian Concept of Justice

In Indian perspective we find Dharmic Concept of Justice. The ancient Indian concept of Dharma was the concept of righteousness which includes justice. In Ancient India the purpose of Justice was only limited to punishing. Dharma while doing justice always had a nexus of punishment. King was known as a fountain of justice whatever decision was given by him was final and binding on parties.

The legal ideology and political practice reflex a given social structure. Traditional societies were hierarchical in which the division of community into ranks, caste or order's was regarded as an expression of justice. Some were born as lords and masters destined to rule over the others who were slaves or serfs by birth; this was justified in terms of God's will, reason and morality in India the caste hierarchy was sanctioned by the law of Karma and ordained by Dharma.

In modern time social justice has been defined as a concept which requires elimination of all kinds of discrimination and privileges based on birth, race, caste or sex.

According to Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar justice should be the end of law, just social order should be the main objective of legal philosophy. He was of the opinion that social order cannot be established without individual liberty, social equality and economic justice therefore he believed that end of law should be Social Justice.

The emphasis has been on social justice because a large segment of Indian population has been deprived of equality of opportunity for generations. The way in which the concept of equality is balanced with the claim of these disadvantage section of Indian society through the concept of compensatory discrimination it is a unique feature of modern Indian concept of justice. According to justice VR Krishna Ayer, Dr Ambedkar was rebel who brought into a new paradigm of social democracy annihilating caste the root of Evil .

According to Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar oppressed class should be given special facilities and more opportunities to compete with the advanced one this principle provides what is called as collective area medial justice. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar corrective measures evolve the jurisprudence of Social Justice in the constitution. Social Justice does not demand equal treatment but preferential treatment government has to fight for policies to ensure Social Justice. Social inequalities which are prevailing in India from ages shall be eradicated through proper use and implementation of Social Justice. We do not find Social Justice definition in the constitution but part VI Directive Principles of State Policie speaks about Social Justice. Social Justice is nothing but social, economic and political equality. Social Justice denotes the equal treatment to all citizens without any social distinction based on caste, color, race, religion, sex and so on.

Role of Indian Court for securing Social Justice.

Indian courts have performed a great role to make Social Justice successful. Social Justice has been guiding force of judicial pronouncement to take few examples Manika Gandhi case is an example of judicial activism which shows Passion of constitution for Social Justice the next case is of Sunil Batra which provides Judiciary tried the new concept of Social Justice. There are ample number of other cases such as Bandhava Mukti Morcha , People's Union Democratic Rights and Sheela Barse where we find Judiciary coming ahead and providing Social justice to the common man and Society. In Indra Sawhani versus Union of India the supreme court declared 27% reservation legally for socially and educationally backward classes of the society under Central service. Social Justice is a dynamic device of mitigate the suffering of poor, weaker and the tribal section of the society.

By studying the above judgment we find Reflection of Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar on Indian judiciary. Indian courts have performed a great role to make Social Justice successful.

Social Justice and Dignity

To achieve dignity is the prime goal of Social Justice the worst thing in the human life is to live without dignity so those who have been denied dignity it could be given to them by means of Social Justice. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar has given dignified life to scheduled caste, Scheduled tribe, women, and minorities by introducing the concept of Social Justice. If we comprehend justice from an individual perspective then it will not achieve the goals which we have set while framing the constitution so we need Social Justice by which society would develop and with develop society we can have a developed nation.

We find discrimination on the basis of caste, sex, and classism if we want to create equality this discrimination shall be removed. This discrimination means having inequality, if we want justice then there should be equality. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar concept of Social Justice stands for Liberty, Equality and Fraternity for all human beings. According to Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar the growth of personality is the highest development of the society. Our constitution lays the great stress on equality which is a basic factor in the jurisprudence of Social Justice but the question as to how to achieve Social Justice follows the path of equality in society based on gross inequality is not free from difficulties.

Inequality leads to exploitation whereas equality aims at emancipation. If we go into the rules of Social Justice we will find that Social Justice is not only a legal concept but it is a moral concept and hence Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar pleads for the constitutional Morality along with the constitutional and legal abidingness for strengthening social democracy his concept of Social Justice is deeply rooted in the trinity of liberty, equality and fraternity.

Conclusion

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar who codified Indian constitution has imbibed the concept of social justice so that Indian society no one shall face injustice, all citizen shall be equal and they shall live an dignified life which is one of the core value of Human Rights. With the concept of social justice constitution provides mechanism to ensure protection of constitutional rights with a view to creating an egalitarian social order by which progress of Nation could be achieved. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar principles of liberty, equality and fraternity could be best understood by studying and implementing Constitution of India. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar has given us a constitutional vision to work for and a social mission to fulfill.

Abstract:

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, a name which is synonymous to the Chairman of the Drafting Committee of the Constitution of Independent India and a leader of Dalits, marginalised groups, and downtrodden people. But how much we know about him and his contribution towards the nation in several other areas? Be it his views as an economist, as a social reformer, his contribution to the labour welfare or as an advocate of Woman Empowerment, but to what extent we know about Dr. Ambedkar with respect to his contribution towards the evolvement of 'Damodar Valley Corporation' the first river valley project of Independent India.

Many of you would not be able to relate or recall Dr. B.R. Ambedkar's contribution towards the Damodar Valley Corporation project based in Damodar River which functions in the area of West Bengal and Jharkhand. It is to be noted that Dr. Ambedkar served as a Member (Labour), Viceroy's Executive Council, from July 20, 1942 to June 29, 1946.

The Damodar River which was responsible for wreaking havoc in states like Bihar, Jharkhand and West Bengal for many decades since 1810 to 1940's causing lot of damage owing to the floods, the government had to come up with a solution for the same.

Dr. Ambedkar played a very substantial role in modelling and conceiving the idea of building Damodar Valley Project into a more constructive resource for the affected states. In his speech to the officials of the Central, Bengal and Bihar government at a conference held in Calcutta on January 3 to consider Damodar valley as a more constructive option for making its development and finding ways for its development.

In 1944, the Government of Bengal appointed the Damodar River Flood Enquiry Committee. The committee came up with two recommendations which were focused upon not restricting the Damodar Valley Project for mere damming purpose in an attempt to avoid the floods but this project should have been used for generating electricity and water irrigation projects as well. Dr. Ambedkar expressed his views on the committee recommendations stating that these recommendations should put into force with an utmost urgency as India was (is) lacking in a concrete policy which was directed towards the water conservation and effective utilisation of the same.

In the conference which took place on August 23 at Calcutta, Dr. Ambedkar presided over the Preliminary memorandum on Damodar Valley issue which lasted for a couple of days. While addressing to the representatives of the respective governments he came up with his observations based on the recommendations done by the committee. He made it a point on stressing upon the need of Multi level projects which were important for the development of the country as a whole. The points which he advocated were the need of more irrigation facilities, generation of electricity and navigation of water also.

With respect to initiating the project work, Dr. Ambedkar felt the need to collect the necessary information to frame a multi-purpose scheme. For the very purpose he asked for a team of experts which would carry out the plans of the project work. Being a complicated and intense project, availability of experts was the key and Dr. Ambedkar had realised the same.

However, Viceroy Lord Wavell, supreme authority of the British empire in India ran an argument with Dr. Ambedkar on the appointment of the technical experts for the project. As per the documentation by the Doyen of Indian journalism, Durga Das, a technical expert was required to lead the commission to set up plans and outline for the flood control in the Damodar Valley Corporation in Bihar. The viceroy Lord Wavell wanted an English officer who would lead this project, but Dr. Ambedkar was of the opinion that England, a country having no such geographic structure with respect to big rivers, an engineer or an expert from that region would not do justice as an English expert would be well short of the experience required for handling big river projects. Neither the English engineers had any experience to build big dams. Dr. Ambedkar advocated experts and engineers from America and that too having an experience in the Tennessee Valley Authority (USA).

The kind of strong argument which Dr. Ambedkar had put forward before the Viceroy had no answer but to agree with Dr. Ambedkar's logical and forceful statement. Finally, Lord Wavell had to listen to Dr. Ambedkar's rational views it facilitated the path for an American engineer to take charge for the project. Dr. Ambedkar inducted W.L. Voorduin as a technical expert for the Valley Project. W.L. Voorduin was working for the Tennessee Valley Authority and had a great amount of experience in the respective field.

Based on the report put forward by Voorduin which was the 'Preliminary Memorandum on the unified Development of the Damodar River', Dr. Ambedkar concluded on developing the project in a multiple way.

In April 1946, as per the Indian Information, Ross M. Riegel and Fred C. Schlemmer, both leading engineers, also from the Tennessee Valley Authority [TVA], reached India on a mission to advise on the plans being made by the Central Technical Power Board for the Maithon, Alyar and Panchet Hill Projects.

Subsequent meetings were held by Dr Ambedkar in Delhi which were attended by the officials of the Central, Bengal & Bihar Government. The outcome of the meetings was to initiate the development work of Tilaiya Dam.

Multiple conferences were addressed by Dr Ambedkar, between, 1943-45. The conferences which were focused upon the Damodar Valley Project and the valley projects for the development of Orissa's rivers and for the electric power projects.(Delhi, October 25, 1943, and February 2, 1945).

Dr. Ambedkar was credited to his efforts in the following way:

- [1] A definite all-India policy with respect to the development of water and electric power resources in India
- [2] The creation of the Central Waterways, Irrigation and Water Commission and the Central Technical Power Board to assist the states in the development of irrigation and electric power, respectively.
- [3] Introduction of the concept of River Valley Authority for the integrated development of the rivers in the regions
- [4] introduction of the concept of multipurpose development of the river valley basin for the first time in India; amending entry "74" in the Constitution and bringing part of it to the Union List and introducing article 262 regarding the adjudication of disputes relating to waters of inter-state rivers or river valleys; and

[5] Initiation of some important present-day river valley projects, particularly in Damodar, Sone and Mahanadi river basin.

To mark the contributions made by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar a commemorative volume titled 'Ambedkar's Contribution to Water Resources Development', was published in 1993 to mark his immense contribution in the field of water resources.

The number of projects which were undertaken by the Labour Ministry included some of the biggest projects like Damodar, Hirakud, kosi and other rivers in Chambal and Deccan. These projects were the brainchild of Dr. Ambedkar's vision which was primarily focused on flood control, irrigation, navigation, domestic water supply, hydropower, and other purposes.

Due credit needs to be given to the vision and efforts put by Dr. Ambedkar during his tenure as a Member Labour Viceroy's Executive Council. The contribution and his views presented for the development of the water resources is testimony to the fact that his talent and efforts were not restricted to a specified area, but he had multiple dimensions with respect to the thought of 'How the nation can be made more progressive in multiple disciplines and areas.

Dr. Ambedkar believed in the fact that there was a serious absence of a holistic approach towards the optimum utilisation of water and developing new means of waterways. He was of the view that India needs to adopt an approach that would embrace the nation as a whole. Dr. Ambedkar strongly advocated the idea of Nationalising Rivers since water is not a resource owned by any state or a region. To justify his views, he advocated an example of Railways, wherein the Railways have been under control of Central government and Indian Railways being a centralized entity has a better control over the functioning of its activities to cater the needs of the People.

In the same manner, why there should not be the execution of Water resources as an entity or under control of the Centre. The waterways and the water resources which are found in the states or particular provinces always claim the right on these water resources thereby creating a conflict among the states. Various water navigation issues among states like Karnataka ,Tamil Nadu, Andhra Pradesh, and Kerala are prevalent even today.

Dr. Ambedkar opined, Water resources are a natural form and states, or provinces cannot have their claim as water resources should be treated as a National Property and it should be treated in the same way. Every citizen of the nation has the right to have an access towards water and for having reasonable amount of access to these natural resources more and more holistic approach needs to be developed.

Many states in India are still facing acute shortage of water and on the contrary many states in India are facing flood situations. One thing to observe here is that why states in India have a contrasting scenario with respect to availability of water resources. Some states have abundance of water and some states are facing severe shortages. To strike a balance and to have an approach to facilitate the excess waters to those states which are short of enough waters, the water navigation system needs to be developed in a great way. Indian states need to eliminate the thinking of self-centred ness and egos which are nurtured by the states and this thought process is hampering the development of the nation in a serious way. That would also solve the problem of irrigation, problem of potable drinking water and overall development of the particular states with the help of these resources.

Conclusion:

Dr. Ambedkar was a leader who had immense understanding about the issues and problems which the country would be facing but he also had the solutions to come up with. Having worked as the Labour Minister in the executive council he ensured that many developmental water resource projects were undertaken that would facilitate the development of India at large. If the government adopts a policy on the views put forth by Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, the solution to the problem of water resource availability would surely get solved for the future.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Contribution to Education

Dr. Sita Gurjar

Udaipur School of Social Work, JRN
Rajasthan Vidyapeeth , Udaipur

Introduction

Contributions of Dr. Ambedkar in bringing educational advancement in India are multifarious. He was an eminent teacher himself and an educator of the downtrodden. He is usually referred to as the 'frontier of Dalits' who believed in transforming the society with the weapon of education. He believed that only education can eradicate the discrimination engraved in the Hindu society which will further yield an exploitation and domination free society. If backward people become educated, it gives them the courage and wit to face the bias practiced by dominators as education helps in reforming the opinions, understanding the barricades of inequality and enables people to build self-confidence. Realisation of self-dignity and self-confidence are the foremost steps towards development.

In 1924, Dr. Ambedkar founded the Hitkarini Sabha whose central aim was to ensure that the oppressed classes are gaining access to education. With this vision, he established various colleges, libraries, reading centres and hostels. The Sabha launched a monthly with the name 'Saraswati Belas' which was an initiative of the students. In 1935 hostels were established in Belgain and Sholapur along with a hockey club, two more hostels and a free reading centre in Bombay. Dr. Ambedkar founded the Depressed Classes Educational Society in 1928 and Lok Shaikshik Samaj in 1945 in order to ensure that the oppressed classes receive higher education. This society further established various middle schools and colleges and extended scholarship to provide financial assistance for staying in hostels. A crucial role was played by these institutions in improving the accessibility of higher education to the backward classes.

Objectives

- To acknowledge the contribution of Dr. Ambedkar towards education of downtrodden
- To understand his views and philosophy of education for bringing change in the Indian Society

Methodology

The paper is based on secondary sources of data from the already available literature through analytical and historical approaches. In the present study, attempts have been made to analyse the struggle of Dr. Ambedkar for the upliftment of the backward classes of society. The paper highlights the major contributions he made in the field of education through his radical thinking for restoration of justice and equal rights for the downtrodden. Historical research method was used by the researcher in which validity and authenticity of the research were established using external and criticised form of data. Content analysis was used to interpret the data for establishing facts and to determine trends.

Purpose of Education

Social emancipation was the educational philosophy of Dr. Ambedkar which demands opportunities and equal rights for all; removal of disparities and economic helplessness in life; social revolution at odds with the evils of oppression, untouchability, social slavery, casteism, etc. and above all stands for self-development and self-respect. He emphasized on social emancipation through secular education rather than life beyond death. He stressed on the role of education in inculcating the values of equality, justice, moral character, liberty and fraternity among both the genders of all colours.

Dr. Ambedkar believed that education has been entrusted with the responsibility of developing human personality. Developing an independent mind is the basic principle and purpose of education according to him. He believed that merely accepting what has been taught or said without developing any question around the concept doesn't serve the purpose of education. Education is concerned with remolding the human mind and hence anyone who doesn't develop a critical mind wasn't educated enough despite their big degrees. He was of the opinion that education nourishes and breeds the sentiments of equality, unity, patriotism and fraternity and that the man is humanized only through education. "Man, without education, is no better than beast" are his own words to concretize his beliefs. Enlightening oneself and organizing social forces against the oppressive and tyrannical elements of Indian societies is possible through education alone.

Education was recognized as a crucial force for personal as well as social development. It could act as a powerful instrument for mass movement in order to safeguard liberty and life; education could mitigate miseries of poverty and ignorance; it could inspire the downtrodden to act against their exploitation and injustice; and education could liberate human beings from the evils of society. Dr. Ambedkar said, "Illiteracy and ignorance is the greatest hurdle in development of humanity". Ignorance is the fundamental ground for social evils and hence his first steps were directed towards eradicating ignorance and illiteracy. He was inspired to take this direction due to his constant consciousness of the backwardness and ignorance of the downtrodden people as they lacked education. Throughout his life, Dr. Ambedkar tried to instil confidence, hope, moral character and courage among the Dalits through his philosophy of education.

He wanted to establish a society which is based on reason and logic. Liberation of mind must be the major output of education, according to him, rather than just making the people egalitarian as this would make them capable of a critical and a logical analysis which was his prime philosophy of education.

Education within the Reach of Everyone

John Dewey was the mentor of Dr. Ambedkar who was a staunch believer of education's democratisation which was eminently supported by Dr. Ambedkar too. From centuries a large number of Indian people were deprived of education as education was imparted on the basis of the caste in which the child is born. Lower castes in Hindu societies were not granted the permission to educate their children. But Dr. Ambedkar viewed education as the birth right of each child regardless of the place they are from as no one can pick their birth places. He established that the right to education cannot be denied to anyone and hence, democratic countries must provide it to everyone without discriminating against anyone.

Dr. Ambedkar iterated, "Education is not only the birth right of every human being but also a weapon of social change." As a professor and educationist himself, he ardently advocated for universal access of education among the backward classes who were not allowed this right for centuries. Lack of education from a long time threw the backward classes into perpetual bondage, ignorance and eternal impoverishment. He believed that education can be very efficiently used as a weapon of achieving political freedom, economic progress, development of one's personality and eradicating social slavery.

An educational program was developed for Indian Labour Party's general manifesto before 1937 elections by Dr. Ambedkar for upliftment of backward classes. The focus of the program was on emphasising the requirement of compulsory and free education in order to end illiteracy. He knew that liberal education was of no use in the long run to upper classes and also for the backward classes of the society. He believed that education is a vital thing which must be within the easy reach of each and every person irrespective of their place of birth or any other factor.

Practical and Job Oriented Curricula

Dr. Ambedkar always had a pragmatic approach towards the curricula followed in imparting education. He believed that employment would be guaranteed only by bridging the gap between curriculum and the job market. He thrusted that education must always be based on the utility and the needs of market but didn't favour flexible curricula. According to Dr. Ambedkar, "Nothing is immortal. Nothing is binding for an indefinite period of time, everything needs to be tested and examined, nothing is final, everything is bound by the cause-effect relationship, nothing is everlasting; everything is changeable. Things are happening continuously."

Dr. Ambedkar never favoured imposition of curricula by external agencies on schools or universities but encouraged concerned teachers to design the curricula by themselves. He preferred that the concerned teachers build the curricula democratically considering the demands of students and the subject. The curricula should help students to secure employment and garner their capability of evolving further in life.

Pattern of education demanded by Dr. Ambedkar was secular and he advocated for such education which guarantees employment and not based on customs and ancient traditions. The importance of education is to make the people self- dependent and enhance their capability to earn a living. He knew that livelihood or employment is of utmost importance in the life of a person especially when the person belongs to a backward class. Education considers to be complete only when students learn necessary skills which help them in garnering a suitable job. Practical and job- oriented curricula was considered necessary for upliftment of the backward and deprived classes of society.

Technical Education

In order to dismantle the deep-rooted structures of privilege and power on the basis of caste, higher education was believed to be the chief weapon by Dr. Ambedkar. He preferred technical knowledge to be imparted to Dalits more than arts or law as engineering and science education would help them secure jobs and come out of the clutches of poverty to break the prevailing caste systems.

Employability among graduates of science and engineering was high as compared to other graduates which is true even in contemporary times. Since technical education was expensive it was inaccessible by the Dalit community and hence Dr. Ambedkar said, "The Government of India can do a lot for improving the future of the Dalits. The SC boys can be kept as apprentices in such industrial units [such as the government printing press or railway workshops] which are under the control of the Government of India or are run by it, where there is a possibility of giving technical education."

In 1944, Dr. Ambedkar was a labour member in the Viceroy's Executive Council and when he was addressing the Technical Training Scheme Advisory Committee in Calcutta, he said, "No plan for the future development of the country can be deemed to be complete which does not provide for technical and scientific training. This is the age of the machine and it is only those countries in which technical and scientific training has risen to the highest pitch that will survive in the struggle that will commence when the war is over, for maintaining decent standards of living for their people”. He strongly supported urban-industrialisation.

Women’s Education

Dr. Ambedkar was against the notion of holding women’s intellect inferior to men. He appealed that learning and knowledge were not only for men but were essential for the women as well. According to him, education would help women in securing, for themselves, a self-sustained future and socialising the upcoming generations by imbining in them the appropriate moral education. He supported the notion of providing common education to both girls and boys and also upheld the concept of co- education, which received a lot of criticism from the orthodox sections (Bahishkrut Bharat). He was lucid in his thoughts when he supported the education for both women and men as it was an ideal aim for imbining rational spirit and critical thinking among them.

The support of Dr. Ambedkar towards girl’s education was reflected through many of his significant acts. He initiated a special bus service in Aurangabad at the Milind College to enable girls in commuting from villages surrounding the college. He always sneaked time to spend with young people and discuss with them the importance of education in their lives.

He believed that education was equally important for women as it was for men. He believed that just like education engender self-respect among lower castes giving them the courage and weapon to fight back, it plays a similar role for women as well. He believed that it would regenerate a new social vision for the entire society.

Conclusion

Education was a definite way of instilling self-respect, dignity and sense of consciousness among downtrodden people, as per Dr. Ambedkar. With the help of the tool of education he apprised the backward classes to reclaim their rights which were not available to them due to the oppression in the society. He believed that values of equality and freedom can only be cultivated among people if they have access to education. This would provide the cultural foundation required in their progressive immersion into the mainstream society.

Being a symbol of character and knowledge, Dr. Ambedkar considered education as a way to approach the lightened doors and eradicate the darkness of ignorance. With his educational philosophy, he raised consciousness among the lower strata of society of Hindu society’s state of social degeneration and to reform the social order for the welfare of the whole humanity. He strived for educational development through the equational institutions he opened and was part of. He was an independent intellectual because of his great contributions towards the field of education. His outlook was highly influenced by the oppression in the society which helped him in propounding his own educational philosophy. London School of Economics has placed a statue of Dr. Ambedkar at the entrance to honour his exuberant contributions and brilliant career in academia with a caption ‘Symbol of Knowledge’. The thoughts of Dr. Ambedkar on education and his philosophy of education are important even now to the socio- economic and political growth of our country in the 21st century today. To quote his own words, “My final word of advice to you is Educate, Agitate and Organize, have faith in yourselves.”

Exploring The Vision Of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar: Inclusive Society, Women Empowerment And Quality Education

Assistant Professor, Amity University, Noida

Abstract

Dr. Ambedkar is the crusader of human rights in India, who fought for the rights of women, dreamed of a casteless society which was inclusive and not fragmented on the basis of caste, creed, gender, religion, language and believed that education is the most powerful tool to bring the change. His vision drove the formulation of many discussions and bills and acted as the foundation stone of the numerous reforms at political and socio-economic levels for the creation of a just, equal, rights based society, a dream which took shape and is still evolving. Dr. Ambedkar is well known as the chairman of the drafting committee of the Indian Constitution, however little is known about his powerful personality, superior thoughts and constant struggle towards the upliftment of the downtrodden, marginalized sections of the society who faced discrimination, ill treatment and abuse on account of the absence of proper laws and lack of rights. Sir Ambedkar's vision for an equal, liberated society which respected women and considered them at par with men, where all received good quality and compulsory education and everyone enjoyed economic, political and social freedom needs to be explored and understood in detail. He constantly strove towards acquiring the rightful place for the downtrodden through his intellectual, political and social efforts. Hence, this paper attempts to explore the vision of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar towards the formation of an inclusive society, empowerment and emancipation of women and provision of quality, discrimination free education to all through a detailed and in-depth analysis of secondary data sources and thematic analysis of the findings. His role as a 'champion of human rights' needs to be understood and appreciated in order to understand his contribution as a great educationist, administrator and a mass leader.

Keywords: Dr. Ambedkar, Casteless Society, Inclusive Education, Inclusive Society, Women Empowerment.

Introduction

Inclusive society can be understood as a society for ALL, which is free of the differences and gaps created as a result of various factors such as varied social groups, rich and poor divide, race, language, creed, caste, region, language, religion etc. The World Summit for Social Development, held in March 1995 established the concept of an "inclusive society" ("Creating an inclusive society, 2009). Hence, an inclusive society promotes respect, equality and opportunity to all for participation, thereby providing stable, safe, tolerant and just society for human population to thrive. The Copenhagen Declaration (2000) adopted the Millennial Development Goals (MDGs) which included creation of a just society, spreading peace, synthesizing sense of security, development and development of human rights to achieve the goal of sustainable development. Certain determinants are integral towards promotion of sustainable development and formation of an inclusive society such as:

- Eradication of poverty
- Social integration and social
- Promoting gender equality
- Universal education
- Reduction of child mortality rates and improvement of maternal health

The pre-requisites for achieving an inclusive society are: Respect for human rights, freedom and role of law. Full participation of all members in all the activities of the society such as political, economic, social activities and all decision making activities guarantee a just society. Further the existence of a strong civil society, educational and employment opportunities, access to public infrastructure, information facilities as stated under several legislation and legal international frameworks such as the United Nations Human Rights Declaration (1948) and World declaration of education for all. (1.)

An inclusive society is a society that over-rides differences of race, gender, class, generation, and geography, and ensures inclusion, equality of opportunity as well as capability of all members of the society to determine an agreed set of social institutions that govern social interaction. (Expert Group Meeting on Promoting Social Integration, Helsinki, July 2008) (p.8, "Creating an inclusive society", 2009).

Objectives, Materials And Methods

The present paper attempts to highlight the vision of Dr. Ambedkar for an inclusive, just and equitable society achieved through striving for women empowerment, quality and inclusive education, promotion of equal rights for all. A critical and detailed review of secondary data sources which included books, journal articles, magazines, and newspaper articles was carried out for the present study.

The objectives for the study are as follows:

- Objective-1: Ambedkar- vision for women empowerment and emancipation
- Objective-2: Ambedkar-vision for inclusive and quality education
- Objective-3: Ambedkar-vision for a just and inclusive society

Findings

Based on the objectives chosen for the present paper the findings have been thematically arranged into three categories:

I. AMBEDKAR - VISION FOR WOMEN EMPOWERMENT AND EMANCIPATION

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar focused on promotion of women empowerment by recommending strategies and focusing on policies which were aimed at removing human subjugation and gender bias due to gender hierarchy. He was strictly against the sub-human nature and poor treatment meted out to girls and women in predominantly patriarchal society. He fought for their right to dignity, respect and education. In several legislations polices and bills drafted by him, he mentioned measures that guarantee the right to property and inheritance of property to women which was traditionally afforded to men. Thus Ambedkar overturned the very precepts which stated that women could not hold any property which further reduced the means of livelihood and further increased the economic dependence on members of the family. Dr. Ambedkar had an independent and open mindset and embraced the concept of respect and dignity for women. He strongly favored Buddhism because female ascetics had the right to read learn and obtain knowledge, they were given the right to attain spiritual power. In ancient India the position of women was very different and they enjoyed respect but gradually their position changed and degenerated and this led to their loss of individual identity, loss of dignity and even basic human rights. The term empowerment is understood as a multifaceted and multidimensional and multi-layered concept.

Dr Ambedkar believed that women empowerment is integral to the progress of the society and the nation as a whole. He studied and compared different religious systems regarding the status and position of women and believed that the Buddhist system accorded equal status to both women and men and therefore adopted Buddhism. He constantly strove towards freeing women from inhuman customs, traditions and superstitions practices therefore strengthening their position and working towards their empowerment. Dr. Ambedkar focused extensively on the poor quality of life and victimization faced by women of India and he often highlighted instances of prevalent social evils such as Sati, enforced widowhood and early marriage for girls. He conducted extensive research on the position of women and how several religious traditions such as purdah system, deprived women of 'mental and moral nourishment'. (Yeasmin, 2018).

Ambedkar's main aim was to make the Indian society a just, safe and equal society hence the preamble of Indian constitution guarantees the following to all citizens of India:

- social, economic and political justice,
- freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship,
- equality of status and opportunity
- Fraternity assuring dignity of the individual and national unity to all the citizens of India without any discrimination of caste, creed or sex.

He always criticized the degradation of women in Indian society brought about by social, cultural, religious factors and political apathy. He believed that education was a powerful critical tool to bring about the emancipation, freedom; he felt women were trapped in chains made of insecurity, male domination, lack of awareness about rights, and decision making (Yeasmin, 2018.).

II. AMBEDKAR - VISION FOR INCLUSIVE AND QUALITY EDUCATION

Every child has the right to quality education and learning (Unicef)

According to Ambedkar, education is aimed at promoting emancipation of women, equality in society, and as an instrument for the progress of the country. Quality education is needed by all learners to develop skills, attain their full potential, realize their dreams and fulfill their ambitions. However, many learners constantly face discrimination stemming out of disparities borne out of political, social, economic factors or disability specific such learners face constant discrimination, and numerous barriers leading to early dropout and discontinuation of studies. Dr. Ambedkar opposed the caste system as he believed it led to gradation and fragmentation in the social fabric of the nation which extended itself even to the area of education (Chhaya, 2016). Hence the constitution has laid down the guidelines for provision of compulsory education to all pupils. According to Ambedkar, education has the capacity to "enlighten the depressed masses, and enhance the cause of social, civic, political and economic upliftment" (Yeasmin, 2018). He believed that quality education should be cheap, affordable and accessible to 'ALL' learners. Dr. Ambedkar wanted the educational system to follow 'one language policy (one official language-Hindi)' owing to his beliefs that numerous language details create differences at home and society. He suggested the provision of scholarships, separate hostels for both girls and boys. He advocated the provision of quality, free and compulsory education to all learners' up to fourteen years of age. He also viewed the British educational system critically as he felt it did not encourage the education of the lower classes, castes and untouchables rather restricted learning to the upper classes and sections of the society (Salagre, 2018.).

III. AMBEDKAR - VISION FOR A JUST AND INCLUSIVE SOCIETY

The policies, laws and legislations passed from time to time enable the formulation of the cornerstone on which the growth, development and progress of a society can be based. Chayya (2016) studied the philosophies laid down by Dr. Ambedkar in an era when India had just received Independence and there was a wide gap between the rich and the poor. Exclusion of the marginalized section of the society which included untouchables, women and lower classes affected the political stability of the nation and influenced Ambedkar's philosophy (Chhaya, 2016). Dr. Ambedkar fought for the rights of the oppressed human classes. He is known as the crusader of human rights in India and is idolized for his relentless struggle to abolish un-touch ability, fight for the upliftment of women and work towards their liberation. He dreamed of a modern society which was based on elements of social justice, equality, freedom, respect and upliftment of all subjects of the State (Yeasmin, 2018). The constitution of India lays down fundamental rights for the citizens of the country which promise equality, fraternity, justice, brotherhood and social respect, irrespective of their caste, creed, region, language, region, gender, color or status.

For promoting the sustainable development of any region, country, or nation certain prerequisite factors play a critical role such as the socio-economic, political and historical scenario.

Implication

The findings clearly indicate that Dr. B.R. Ambedkar dreamed of an Indian society which was free from the shackles of caste system, discriminatory attitude and unjust beliefs. He always exhorted that education should be used as powerful tool and liberating force. He discovered that women and other deprived sections of the society including the untouchables were often denied the right to education, which further increased their dependence and suffering. Thus we can clearly state that Dr. Ambedkar was a great national leader who wanted to bring about social and political changes to promote unification of the country which is multicultural, multilinguistic and highly diverse. Unfortunately many of his thoughts, prophecies and statements were not taken in the right spirit (Salagre, 2018; Razi & Razi, 2019). The findings generated in the present study make it imperative to understand and implement the ideals and vision of Dr. Ambedkar in the present era, where the dream of a unified, 'Atmanirbhar Bharat' is taking shape as a distinct reality. Though this journey is long and challenging yet it is real and achievable. Efforts are being made at all levels-political, social, and economic to make India self reliant, equitable and inclusive society. Numerous policies such as the Samagra Shiksha Abhiyan; Right to Education Act, 2009; Rights of Persons with Disabilities Act, 2016 are all aimed at equalization of opportunities for all, irrespective of ability, gender, caste, class and creed.

Conclusion

The present paper helps us to explore and understand the vision of Dr. Ambedkar in detail and thus provide a fitting tribute to the ideals and vision of a man who constantly strove for the welfare of the downtrodden and discriminated masses. However there is still need to frame better policies and conduct responsible implementation of the existing laws and policies in order to realize and give shape to the vision of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar- A society, which is EQUAL, JUST, INCLUSIVE and EMPOWERED through women upliftment, equalization and universalization of education and an inclusive, knowledge rich society. Thus we see that his vision, ideals and hold greater relevance in the 21st century when we seek national development and global peace amid an environment of political, economic and social upheavals.

DR. BABASAHEB AMBEDKAR : AN ECONOMIST

Assistnat Prof.

Arts, Commerce and Science College, Arvi

ABSTRACT

Bharat Ratna Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was great contributed as an economist, sociologist, legal luminary, educationalist, journalist, Parliamentarian, editor, social revolutionist, height of the human rights etc. He was a first Ph. D. holder in Economics within untouchable community in India. He wrote many papers and their books on economics. Indian economy is diversified economy and had impact of changes in social, political and economical changes before and after independence. He represented problem of physical and economical exploitation of rural poor through his movements. Dr. Ambedkar has given new socio and political view to Indian economics. Dr. Ambedkar decided to "changeover from economics to law and politics" He argued for fixed gold standard for exchange rate. He told that low exchange rate increases exports and boosts internal prices.

Economic thought is "the branch of economics, which is concerns itself, with the development of economic ideas through the writings of the great economists of each period". The study of the development of and contribution to economics can be approached in many ways: "One approach could be to take up important personalities, i.e., economist who made great and significant contributions to the advancement of Economic Science or contributed in an important way to the investigation of economic phenomenon and empirical problems". The study of Economic Thought lends a perspective to Economics involving and enabling the study to assign current controversies and debates their deserving place.

This paper deals with the economic ideas and economical development which were proposed by the father of Indian constitution Dr. Bhim Rao Ambedkar. His economic contributions in public finance, agriculture economics, state management system, problems of labours, Indian caste system & economic development are few which are discussed in this paper.

1. Introduction

Dr. Bhim Rao Ambedkar is known as the father of Indian constitution as he was the foremost draftsman of Indian constitution which was adopted on 26th November 1949 and got implemented on 26th January 1950. Because of his noteworthy works and contributions in the various fields he is also known as a great leader of freedom movement, a high-caliber lawyer, a great dalit leader and a distinguished economist. Babasaheb was a highly intellectual person of his time. He was the first person to pursue PhD in economics from abroad. He was the first South Asian to have double doctorate degree in economics from London School of Economics and Columbia University. With such a strong background in economics still Babasaheb contributions in the field of economics are not so popular.

Dr. Ambedkar wrote three scholarly books on economics

- i. Administration and Finance of the East India Company, (Columbia University, 1915).
- ii. The Problem of the Rupee: Its Origin and Its Solution. (P S King and Son Ltd, London 1923)
- iii. The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India, - A Study in the Provincial Decentralisation of Imperial Finance (P S King and Son Ltd, London 1925).

This paper discuss about the contributions of Bharat Ratna awardee Dr. B.R. Ambedkar in the field of economics. The major contribution of Babasaheb in the sub fields of economics like public finance, agricultural economics, problem of caste system in economic development, idea about new water and power policy are the few which is discussed in this paper. These remarkable contributions by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar are discussed under the following heads:

2. Problem in Indian Currency

Dr. Ambedkar's contemplations greatly affect current Indian cash framework. Under British standard when India Govt. was battling with falling estimation of Indian Rupee, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar In 1923 composed 'The issue of Rupee, its birthplace and arrangement. He concentrated his investigations and research on the state of Indian money during British India. He composed research proposition on it. In his theory, he contended that the gold trade standard does not have steadiness. The creating nations like India can't manage the cost of gold trade norms, what's more this, it also expands the danger of swelling and value rise. He demonstrated with insights information and reasons how the Indian Rupee has lost its worth and thus the buying intensity of Rupee is falling. He proposed that Government deficiency ought to be managed and cash ought to have a round stream. He also proposed more consideration ought to be given on value solidness than conversion scale dependability. This book inevitably prompts the foundation of Reserve Bank of India.

3. Origin and its Solution

His significant contentions are that Currency ought not to be connected with gold or maybe an unadulterated best quality level to be pursued where gold coins ought to be flowed alongside paper money. This firmly conflicted with the possibility of J.M. Keynes of presenting Gold trade standard. He is of the feeling that gold trade standard builds the odds of terrible judgment by the Government in light of the fact that the issue of cash "is approved and led by men who are never under any present duty regarding private misfortune in the event of fumble". He contended that the measure of Mercantile ought to be connected with the wheel of Nature and expressed that gold trade standard does not have the steadiness; as a creating nation like India cash turns into a noteworthy concern. What's more, what better approach to respect his commitment than to give him a regarded spot on the Indian money," I am by and by attested and want that Ambedkar photograph must show up on every Indian currency note.

4. Contribution in Agriculture Economics: Problem of small holdings in India

The major problem of Indian agriculture is low productivity of land. One of the main reasons of low productivity is the small land holdings by the farmers. In 1917, a committee was formed to give suggestions on the problem of small holding in the Baroda state. The committee gave a suggestion to consolidate the holding which can be cultivated by an individual farmer under the administrative measures. Dr.B.R.Ambedkar was in favour of consolidation of land holdings but according to him it should be state owned. He pointed out that land is only one factor of production, in order to increase the farm productivity other factors like capital and labour should be rightly mix with the land. Every factor is responsible for the low productivity of land. Because of insufficient capital, surplus labour, and deficient irrigation there is low agriculture productivity in India.

Ambedkar in his paper on "Small Holdings in India and their Remedies (1918)" has suggested state owned cooperative farming and industrialisation as the remedial measures. Cooperative farming is a consolidation of land holdings by the farmers who collectively are willing to cultivate the land, but it should be under the rule and regulation of the government. According to Ambedkar, industrialisation can be an alternate solution for the vast disguised unemployment in Indian agricultural sector. Surplus labour in the agriculture sector can be transferred to manufacturing sector.

5. Ambedkar Views on Tax Policy

He censures the Government for not having mental fortitude to impose the rich saying ‘I for myself have the best judgment for the Government for not approaching with tax collection. This Budget, along these lines, I state, is a rich man’s spending limit. It’s anything but a poor man’s financial limit. No Government deserving of its name, no Government with any earnestness, can tell the poor classes that it can’t give these courtesies since it has not the fearlessness to demand charges. The sooner such a Government abandons the better for all.

He suggests that Government income ought to be utilized for welfare of poor people and ranchers. ‘The cash the Government was bringing up in the type of expenses must be used to calm the ranchers of their obligations, to battle neediness and to give instruction; however he said that it wasn’t possible if Prohibition was given a need or an inclination over these critical issues.’

He proposed some duties as pursues:

- Tax ought to be forced on payer’s ability and not on pay.
- Tax ought to be less on poor and more on rich.
- Tax exception ought to be offered up as far as possible.
- There ought to be correspondence between various areas in duty burden.
- Tax ought not prompt bringing down the standard of life of the general population.
- Land Revenue duty ought to be progressively adaptable and ought not impose on rural land.

6. Other Contributions in the Economic Development of India

Ambedkar’s role as a Minister of public works has totally been forgotten. In 1942-46, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar initiated new water and power policy. He was a great visionary and rightly perceived that it is only the multipurpose projects which can solve the problems of floods, famines, power shortage, and irrigation. For the development of the country Babasaheb initiated the idea of building the first multipurpose river valley project known as Damodar Valley Project in Bengal and Bihar.

Contributions in labour laws

Ambedkar has brought several labour reforms during his time. In the 7th session of the Indian labour conference in 1942, he initiated to reduce the factory working hours from 12 to 8. In the same year, at the Tripartite Labour Conference Babasaheb was involved in building Plenary Conference and Standing Advisory Committee to settle the industrial disputes between employees and employers. He also propounded to establish employment exchanges and to collect the statistical data under Industrial Statistics Act. Ambedkar has also worked for the upliftment of women’s in the society. He has framed laws like “Mines Maternity Benefit Act” and “Women and Child Labour Protection Act”. He tried removing the ban on women employment in the coal mines. He also established “Women Labour Welfare Fund” and fought to give maternity benefits to the women labourers.

State Socialism

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was not in support of what father of economics Adam Smith has written in his book “Wealth of Nation” in 1776 about the markets. Adam Smith was a great supporter of laissez faire policy (free markets), markets with no government interventions. Some has argued that this will give more liberty for the economic development of a country. But contrary to this Babasaheb has pointed out that this kind of liberty from the state may give rise to private capitalism, which may be dictators of their own kind. Babasaheb was not against the private enterprises but he was more concerned about the equitable distribution of wealth. In the memorandum submitted to the British government titled “states and minorities” in 1947, Dr. Ambedkar placed a strategy “an obligation on the state to plan the economic life of the people on lines which would lead to highest point of productivity without closing every avenue to private enterprises and also provide for the equitable distribution of wealth”. He wanted that the public sector should play an active role in the economic development of India whereas private sector should be treated as the passive player. While discussing about industrialisation in India, consolidation of small land holdings and building of water projects he stated that these should be state owned and should be managed by the state.

7. Conclusion

Dr. B.R.Ambedkar with double doctorate degrees was the highest intellectual person of his time. He was a highly trained economist but his contributions in the economics were not recognised in the main stream economics. The reason behind this was that Babasaheb stopped practicing economics after India got independence and devoted most of his time in politics and law. Therefore he was more popular as a political leader rather than an economist. But whatever he has contributed to the field of economics is remarkable.

This paper has discussed the important contributions made by Ambedkar in the field of economics. Babasaheb supported modified gold standard to curb the inflationary pressure in India. He discussed about the evolution of provincial finance under the British rule. While discussing about how to spend the public funds he said that the spending should be based on the rules and regulations. Public has an immense faith on government thus it should wisely use these funds in order to achieve the optimal results. Babasaheb was in favour of consolidation of small land holding in India by the state and without any discrimination it should distribute this consolidated land into a standard size to the original cultivators. He pointed out the land is only one factor of production, it the mix of all the factors which is responsible for the low production of land.

He wanted that heavy industries should be owned by the public sector and private sector should only fill the gaps. He was a strong supporter of State Socialism. Caste system according to him acts as a barrier to the labour mobility from one sector to another. This hindrance in the mobility of labour due to caste system directly impacts the economic development of India. Other contributions of Babsaheb whether it was the development of multipurpose water and power projects, restructuring the labour laws, women empowerment, all are imperative in the economic development of India.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was intelligent economist of their time. He had contributed not only thoughts but also fought for upliftment of exploited. His economic thoughts have been useful to Indian economy and can be used as positive solution for current economic problems in India.

Untouchability :Ambedkar And Gandhi

Abstract -

The epistemology of the 'untouchability' poses multiple challenges to the universal notions of liberty, equality, fraternity and justice. In India, many protest movements and social reformers had fought for justice of the socially weaker sections- Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar(1891-1956) is known as the leader of India's untouchables, a symbol of revolt against all the oppressive features of Hindu society. Ambedkar's systematic theory of 'untouchability' not only comes from 'The Untouchables :Who Were They and Why They Became Untouchables(1948) ; but it had developed over three decades through his own life experience of injustice. Gandhi's had is own idea regarding untouchability. After the communal award (1932) the untouchable issue became controversial(Ambedkar-Gandhi) and this led to more polarization of Indian politics. In this context the present article tries to see how much their perspectives relevance in contemporary times.

Key Words- justice, society, emancipation and controversial.

Introduction-

Most of us know Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar (1891-1956) as a father of Indian constitution, but he is also as the leader of untouchables and crusader for social justice. His vision can be summed up as social justice. On the other hand most of us know Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi(1869-1948) as Mahatma Gandhi, the father of nation, the champion of satyagraha, ahimsa or non-violence. History pitted Ambedkar and Gandhi as adversaries. Their open dialogue was marked by acrimony. Three important and overlapping issues the core of their exchanges such as- a. the issue of representation of the depressed classes, b. the removal of untouchability and c. the caste questions. In this article we are focusing only 'untouchability.' Before going into the details of untouchability, who we will first look into the background of Ambedkar and Gandhi. Then it will be clear why they held so much different views regarding untouchability. Ambedkar's notion of untouchability and action comes from the his own caste status. He was born 14th April, 1891 in a Mahar (untouchable caste) family (see details Keer: 1954). He was the first to complete school education in his community, when educational opportunities were mostly denied to 'untouchables.' He completed his B.A from Elphinstone College, Bombay in 1912 and he joined Columbia University in 1913 for higher studies on the scholarship provided by Maharaja Sayoji Rao of Baroda. In Columbia University he enriched his learning and perspectives from great teachers such as John Dewey, Edwin Seligman and A.A. Goldenweiser. Latter he joined LSE(London School of Economics) and obtained M.Sc and D.Sc degrees. During his LSE days he imbibed to Fabianism from Sidney Web and Beatrice Web. Not only the west, Ambedkar was also influenced by the ideals of Buddhism and the works of Jotiba Phule, Narayan Guru and periyar. Coupled with this influence and shaped Ambedkar whole social and political philosophy.

On the other hand Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi was born in the coastal town of Porbandar (Gujarat). Gandhi grew up in a liberal religious family. His parents were followers of largely devotional Hindu cult of Vishnu (or Vaishnavites). South Africa was turning point in Gandhi's life (Parekh:2), when he travelling from Durban to Pretoria, he was thrown out of train in the middle of night. During his 21 years experience in South Africa, his way of thought and life has completely changed. Especially the Gita and Hindu cultural tradition and Buddhism and three books that influence deeply which is Henry Thoreau's On The Duty of Civil Disobedience(1847), Tolstoy's The Kingdom of God is Within You(1893) and John Ruskin's Unto this Last(1862).Coupled with this, influence and shaped Gandhi's social and political philosophy.

Gandhi's notion of untouchability

Untouchability, according to Gandhi, is opposed to the Advaita or Vedanta view of the world which regards Life as a unit. Since Hinduism is essentially based on Vedanta, untouchability, he argues, is opposed to Hinduism. In other words, this social practice, in Gandhi's opinion, represents a perversion rather than the true nature of Hinduism (Bandyopadhyaya:160). Untouchability, moreover, is the negation of the humanity of man. It militates against Non-violence, Freedom and Equality. There cannot be any swaraj so long as untouchability and its attendant perversions like unseeability or unapproachability continue to exist in Indian society. Hindu society would inevitably disintegrate unless this social evil was completely eradicated. The removal of untouchability is the first and most essential step to the revitalization of Hindu Society (Bose:268-269).

Naturally, therefore, from the beginning of his socio-political career in India till the very end of his life, Gandhi worked for the eradication of untouchability. He believed that only a change of heart on the part of the caste Hindu's would remove untouchability. But he also believed this was an imminent change. In 1933 he started publishing the weekly journal Harijan on behalf of the Servants of Untouchables Society. The term literally means God's men. He accepted this word, as suggested by an untouchable, instead of the Sanskrit word asprishya (which was traditionally used and literally means untouchable) to designate the untouchables, because "All religions of the world describe God pre-eminently as the Friend of the friend-less, Help of the helpless, and Protector of the weak." As regards the term asprishya or untouchable, "I recoil with horror from that word and all it implies." said Gandhi. Although the change of name would not bring about any change in the status of the untouchables, "one may at least be spared the use of the term which is itself one of reproach"(Bandyopadhyaya : 161).From a purely humanitarian and religious standpoint Gandhi uttered : "If we believe that we are all children of one and same God and that God is Truth and Justice, how can there be untouchability amongst us, His children? God of Truth and Justice can never create distinctions of high and low among His own children. I, therefore, invite all without distinction of race and religion to assist this movement by praying for its complete success, so that we may all live in peace and friendship"(Omvedt: 146)

Ambedkar notion of untouchability

Ambedkar's systematic theory of 'untouchability' not only comes from 'The Untouchables :Who Were They and Why They Became Untouchables(1948) ; but it had developed over three decades through his own life experience of injustice. His vision can be summed up as social justice, to him social justice is another name of liberty, equality and fraternity. He emphasized the Buddhist religious roots in his philosophy of social justice.Ambedkar's basic position seems to be that untouchables must be seen as a minority,as a separate people, so long as they are treated as a separate people. Like John Rawls view of 'Maximine' or 'Difference principles' in his theory of justice, Ambedkar identified principle of 'special protection' to address the question of social justice in polity and administration. The notion of ‘untouchability’ is far difference between Ambedkar and Gandhi. Ambedkar famously held that untouchability is a stigma on “our” body and we “untouchables” shall remove it. On the other hand, Gandhi pointed out that untouchability was a sinful practice for which perpetrators, that is, the casteHindus were responsible. In his book The Untouchables (1948) Ambedkar specifically denied a racial, ethnic or occupational basis for the origin of untouchability and uses anthropocentric and ethnographical evidence. He believed that only untouchables could lead untouchables. Mahad conference(1927) the real beginning a leader of untouchable, and delegates of three Round Table Conference(1930-32) it is proof that he is the only and real representatives of untouchable community of India. At the second Round Table conference, he came into direct clash with Gandhi over separate versus joint electorates. Ambedkar argue if the raj could provide separate electorate for Muslims, Sikhs and India’s Europeans, why not a separate Dalit electorate? One Indian Gandhian scholar pointed out that “ the Ambedkar-Gandhi debate is a vital part of that relationship and in important subject in itself”(Gandhi:35) When the communal award came in 1932 the issue of separate electorate is a part of Ambedkar’s immediate political strategy to mobilize and empower the depressed class. It is doubtful if the the Poona Pact(1932) with Gandhi can be understood as damaging his political project of emancipation of the depressed classes. One Indian scholar argue that separate electorates were not a critical element of Ambedkar’s political project (Palshikar:47). In a Buddhian way Ambedkar’s ultimate answer the questions of how to eradicate the practice of untouchability? A. Untouchables must possess pride and self- respect, must disassociate themselves from the traditional bonds of untouchable status .B.Untouchables must become educated, not only literacy but to the highest level. C.Untouchables must be represented by their own representatives at all levels of government. D. The government with a clear concern of welfare and creating special rights of the untouchables. E. All forms of caste must be abolished. He rejected fourfold varnashramsystem(Zelliot :172-175). Ambedkar has not only provided the vision of new order, but also has shown the means to achieved it. He has made a significant contribution to the development of ‘ a grammer of social justice’.

Why has Mr. Gandhi failed? According to me, there are three reasons which have brought about this failure. The first reason is the Hindus to whom he makes his appeal for the removal of Untouchability do not respond. Mr. Gandhi’s sermons on Untouchability have completely failed to move the Hindus, why people hear his after-prayer sermons for few minutes and then. The second reason is that Mr. Gandhi does not wish to antagonize the Hindus even if such antagonism was necessary to carry out his non-Untouchable programme. The third reason is that Mr. Gandhi does not want the Untouchables to organize and be strong. For he fears that they might thereby become independent of the Hindus and weaken the ranks of Hindus. This is best illustrated by the activities of the HarijanSevakSangh. The whole object of the Sangh is to create slave mentality among the Untouchables towards their Hindu masters. Examine the Sangh from any angle one may lie and the creation of slave mentality will appear to be in dominant purpose.(Ambedkar : 262-269).Dr. Ambedkar was of the opinion that the Social Reform movement under the Congress and Gandhi was not aimed at making the question of social reform a priority concern as its main aim was political reform. Thus the socially inferior position of the Untouchables was never altered. Ambedkar questioned the sincerity behind these efforts. On Gandhi’s somewhat oversimplified theory of abolishing untouchability and the caste system without eliminating the four varnas, Ambedkar bitterly remarked that there was a paradox in Gandhian thought. It wanted freedom from foreign domination which meant the destruction of the existing political structure of the country, but sought to maintain the existing in-egalitarian social structure intact.

The main point of dispute between Gandhi and Ambedkar centered around the place of Untouchables in independent India. To Ambedkar, the remedy prescribed by Gandhi did not really go down to the root of the problem and concerned itself only with its symptoms. As Eleanor Zelliot observed “One way of explaining the conflict between Ambedkar and Gandhi, perhaps an over-simplification, is to say that Ambedkar saw advancement for the Untouchable in terms of using political means to achieve social and economic equality with the highest classes in a modern society, while Gandhi held to a more traditional concept of a varna system cleansed of untouchability, in which Untouchables would be Shudras and their unclean work honorable”(Zelliot: 49).

Conclusion-

Relevance of Gandhi and Ambedkar’s view of untouchability in contemporary times? If asked whether Gandhi and Ambedkar’s view on untouchability is relevant in present times, the answer would be ‘yes’ for both. Gandhi had held the view that the upper-class Hindu will understand the predicaments of the so-called ‘untouchables’ and this will gradually change their mind set and bring about equality in the society. Gandhi did not prove to be fully correct, if we look at the instances of atrocities against the dalit class in Bihar, U.P and in other parts of our country even after seventy years of our independence. However, there is a section of urban middle class, educated and growing in numbers. This section mainly because of education is free from all prejudices, caste divide and untouchability. This Gandhi had expected from all the upper class Hindus but unfortunately did not happen. On the other hand, Ambedkar was more inclined towards direct action for the emancipation of the untouchables. His progressive radical ideas deserve closer attention to address the questions of multiple forms of inequalities and resultant discrimination and deprivations.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar strongly advocated identity based politics and pleaded for reservation in weaker sections. The identity gives a sense of pride and sense of unity to weaker sections enabling them to have the strength required to fight against discrimination. He advocated reservation policy for the socially and economically weak. The reservation policy that we see in India today has changed many forms over the years. Many addition and alteration has been done on the reservation list. There is no doubt that the opportunity offered through this policy has improved the quality of life of the individuals who had availed them. There is a raging debate whether reservation policy should continue even after seventy years of independence. Because initially our national leaders and even Ambedkar himself was of the view that reservation policy should not continue endlessly and it should be in place only in the initial years of independence. The idea was that such a policy if continued for a long time will divide the society all the more. Ambedkar’s another important policy was to reserve seats for the oppressed class in the legislature. His idea was that through these types of reservations the backward sections of the society will be empowered and once this happens untouchability will end. Thus, we find that both Gandhi and Ambedkar’s approach to end untouchability is still relevant today though both these approaches have failed to mitigate untouchability totally. One of the major reasons for this is that the leaders holding constitutional positions have not used the reservation policy or other developmental programmes for the backward people, for the welfare and upliftment of these people. Instead leaders are often found using ‘untouchability’ and reservation for getting political mileage.

Abstract

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was not only a leader of the marginalized groups in India but also a great social reformer. He was closely associated with the issues of the working class and offered numerous benefits to the labour classes on demands of having eight-hour working days, equal wages, maternity leave etc. His contributions towards women's struggle and empowerment is noteworthy. As a constitutionalist he exhibited great political vision and charisma in establishing India as a modern democratic republic. His thoughts on concepts like citizenship, liberty, social justice, equality are highly commendable. Dr. Ambedkar's fight to liberate the Dalits from the shackles of untouchability and his struggle against the oppressive caste system that prevailed in India, crafted his intellectual persona. He was a great nation builder and was greatly committed to the rectification of the brutal realities of India's caste system and wanted to transform it into a better place for human life with dignity and self-respect. He worked towards abolishing the caste system in order to establish equality and social justice. He was a champion of modernity and hence believed that industrial development, democratic institutions and republican values would liberate the down trodden. He believed that radical reforms only could make vital progress in a democracy. This paper would focus on the various angles of Social Reformation brought about by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar.

Key Words: social reformation, marginalization, caste system, social justice.

Introduction:

We all know that Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar; 14 April 1891 – 6 December 1956, also known as Babasaheb Ambedkar was an Indian jurist, economist, politician and social reformer, academician, anthropologist and a versatile writer. His struggle and campaign against social discrimination towards the Dalits, women's rights restoration, abolition of superstitions, fetching labour welfare, welfare for the backward classes, establishing law and justice, and many more reforms are remarkable. His early life characterized him as an academician, lawyer and economist whereas his later life led him into political activities and reformist movements. In 1990, he was honoured with Bharat Rathna, India's highest civilian Award. His legacy includes remarkable memorials and great transformation of Indian life and culture.

Objectives Of The Study:

- To explore the various dimensions of social reforms and campaigns envisaged by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar.
- To justify that Dr. Ambedkar was a legend of social justice and architect of Indian Constitution.

Methodology Adopted:

A descriptive approach has been used in this study. An extensive examination of existing literature and a random search of scholarly articles and online sites on Dr. B. R. Ambedkar and his contribution to society and his social reforms was carried out to meet the objectives of this study. Concepts and arguments were analysed and synthesized from various online resources, books and journals. This is not an exhaustive study.

REFORMS OF Dr. B.R. AMBEDKAR:Dr. Ambedkar And Social Justice:

Babasaheb holds the credit of being the main Architect of Indian constitution through which he could establish and guarantee social justice to the people. His most important contributions were the inclusion of fundamental rights, strong central government and protection of minorities. To him Article 32 was the most important and hence referred to it as “soul of the Constitution and very heart of it”. He believed that casteism which was the predominant feature of Indian society could be curbed and justice could be delivered to backward classes only through a strong central government. He was afraid to see minority, the most vulnerable group in the nation may convert into political minorities too. In order to protect them he provided many safeguards in the Constitution. He created a democratic political structure in a traditional society to ensure protection to lower caste. He believed in Constitutional morality and hence considered Indian Constitution as a common moral compass which could resolve the conflicts amongst various groups because India was divided on the basis of caste, religion, language and other factors.

Babasaheb had complete faith in democracy and supported parliamentary form of democracy. He emphasized ‘democracy as a way of life’ because only this doctrine could bring drastic change in social conditions of society otherwise the spirit of political democracy would be missing. Democratic government can arise only from a democratic society. He focused on the spirit of liberty, fraternity and equality as the base of democracy to remove the caste hurdles that existed in Indian society. He believed that economic and political issues could be resolved only after achieving the goal of social justice. The Temple Entry Movement launched by Babasaheb in 1930 at Kalaram Temple, Nasik is a landmark struggle for human rights and social justice. In the memory of Babasaheb. Dr. Ambedkar Foundation was established by the Government of India under the aegis of the Ministry of Social Justice and empowerment in 1992, which was also observed as ‘Year of Social Justice’, from 14th April 1990 – 14th April 1991.

Babasaheb And Untouchability:

Babasaheb was a crusader against untouchability. Throughout his life, he emphasized on the removal of untouchability because he believed that the progress of a nation would not be realized without the removal of this vice from the society. He felt that untouchability is the slavery of the entire Hindu society, so emancipation of the untouchables would lead to the emancipation of the whole Hindu society. He struggled to revive the entire social system. In 1923, he set up the Bihishkrit Hirkarani Sabha which was devoted to spread education and culture amongst the downtrodden. Dr. Ambedkar took part in the Round Table Conferences (1930-1932) in London and very effectively deliberated his views in the interest of the untouchables. In 1932 his protest against Communal Award and finally getting a certain number of seats for the depressed classes is notable. Methods adopted to remove untouchability were as follows;

- Creating self-respect among the untouchables by creating awareness and enlightening their minds.
- He believed that knowledge is a liberating force and that the untouchables were degraded were denied opportunities and advantages of education. He insisted on secular education to instill values of liberty and equality.

- He helped the untouchables to free themselves from the bondage of village community and traditional jobs. He wanted them to achieve new skills and start new professions which would help them to move to new cities to take advantage of industrialization.
- He worked towards untouchables gaining political strength to be able to protect themselves.
- He adopted Buddhism for he believed that Buddhism stands for equality and fraternity.
- The Hindu Code bill was brought into existence in 1950 which was revised by Babasaheb in 1948 . This Bill basically put forth gender equality in laws of inheritance and marriage to daughters and widows .

Therefore education at social level, new means of livelihood at material level, political organization at political level self- assertion at spiritual level constituted an overall program of the removal of untouchability’.

Dr. Ambedkar As An Educationist:

Babasaheb believed that education is the most important tool to bring about transformation in the society. He considered it as a movement and understood that education is the only truth that cradles humanity, could generate source of livelihood, imparts wisdom and cleanses the social impediments. Ambedkar was a towering personality and hero , not only for the Dalits but for the entire world as well. His writings played crucial role in promoting him into a social activist. He published his thoughts through articles, books, magazines and newspapers.

Education according to Dr. Ambedkar should be the means to foster justice, equality, fraternity, freedom and fearlessness in the society. He wanted to replace birth-based society with a value-based one and these moral values can be promoted only through education. He was also in favour of making education relevant to employment. Good behavior and good conduct arise from logical reasoning and that can be acquired only through education, experience and dialogue. He was a strong proponent of logical and scientific education.

Ambedkar had a practical approach regarding Curricula. He was not in favour of an external agency imposing curricula on an educational institution. He believed that teachers concerned should design it by themselves. He took a pragmatic view of things. He believed that education is the means for self-expression, building self-esteem and character. He had great respect for teachers. He considered that teachers have a great role to play in the process of learning and imbibing. He himself was deeply influenced by his teachers that he had added the surname “Ambedkar” one of his teachers, to his name. Babasaheb favoured the use of scientific teaching methodologies starting with primary education.

Ambedkar’s Contribution Towards Women’s Education & Rights:

Lack of education among women was the biggest problem facing Indian society in the view of Ambedkar. He held caste system responsible for the pitiable condition of women in India. The social evils that barred women from re-marriage, the evil practice of Sati, child marriages were upheld. It is true that women enjoyed many rights in the Vedic age but then their status deteriorated afterwards. Women were deprived of education and the right to own property. He advocated that women be treated with dignity and respect by giving adequate opportunities for growth. He drafted the Hindu Marriage Act, which didn’t permit men to have more than one wife. It also gave women succession rights and the right to hold property. Ambedkar’s Constitution gave women equal rights and status in the eyes of law . He favoured compulsory education and economic independence of women. The constitutional Articles 14, 15(3), 16(1) and 16(2) are designed to ensure that women are not discriminated and treated at par with men in Independent India. As the chairman of the drafting committee of the Constitution, he made ample provisions for development of women and their economic self-dependence.

Implications Of Ambedkar's Reforms:

Dr. Ambedkar is a unique example of success even in most adverse situations. India is still facing a number of challenges like casteism, communalism, separatism, gender inequality violence against women, child abuse, juvenile delinquency and many more. We should find Babasaheb's spirit within us and pull ourselves from these challenges. The campaigns and struggle of Ambedkar towards various social reforms have great impact on Indian society. Some of the implications may be summarized as;

- His struggle against untouchability and caste system resulted in the transformation of Indian society and reduced the impact of social stratification.
- Policies and laws have come into effect which provide employment and reservation in education to women and marginalized sectors.
- Untouchability and Devadasi system have been abolished once for all.
- Marginalised sections are enlightened and are aware of their rights and privileges .
- Equality and social justice has been established through the Constitution of India.
- The concept of labour welfare has received inspiration form his concepts of democracy and welfare state.

Conclusion:

Dr. Ambedkar was a visionary and a creative thinker.He was destined to be a leader, a fighter against all social evils. He could easily identify the basic social problems and provided the ways and means to solve them in his own way. His understanding about the Indian society inspired him to wage a relentless struggle against the denial of social justice, economic opportunities and human dignity. He worked hard to create a just and human social order. While analysing Ambedkar's views on society, economy and polity in general terms, I found that his idea of equality and social justice were emphasized. Dr. Ambedkar engineered social change through Indian Constitution. His active life, glorious personality and great capability to bring about social transformation are forever worthy of being written in golden letters. He was a pragmatic par excellence who never allowed himself to be swayed away by abstract ideas and ideals. He was the foremost leaders of the depressed classes. His contribution in the drafting of Indian Constitution is highly commendable for his concepts of federalism, equality of opportunities, directive principles of state policy, sovereignty , national integration and a lot more. The objectives of my study are hence justified.

His Contributions To Indian Society

Alongside framing numerous organizations for the empowerment of the Dalit Ambedkar likewise put emphasis on;

1. Educational field: He said that "It is the education which is the right weapon to cut the social bondage and it is the education which will enlighten the downtrodden masses to come up and acquire societal position, economic betterment and political opportunity" In 1923 Ambedkar established 'Bahishkrit Hitkarni Sabha to spread education among marginalized and to improve their economic conditions. He gave the slogan: "Teach Agitate-Organize".
2. Political party: He made three political parties, viz. Independent Labor Party, the Republican Party of India, and All India SC Federation which were instrumental in getting sorted out Dalit people group and raising voice up for Dalit people group
3. Reservation in the election: He addressed the untouchables in the Round Table Conference in 1930. Because of his reliable ceaseless efforts, the Harijans were allowed reservation of seats in the elections.
4. Changing hierarchical constructions of Indian culture: Dr. Ambedkar dedicated his life to fighting for the annihilation of caste by proliferating a movement against the evils of the caste system. Being himself a Dalit, he put forth the entirety of his efforts to change the hierarchical structures of Indian culture and restore equivalent rights/equity to the marginalized, and abolition of Untouchability. He represented a total reorganization and reconstruction of the Hindu society on the rule of equity liberated from castism. He supported equality of chance. He opted for peaceful and constitutional strategies for the goal of the social issues.
5. He advocated a society based on three fundamental principles of liberty, equality, and fraternity: Dr. Ambedkar was an astounding liberal crusader who understood the philosophical emptiness of the Dalit Movement and gave essential philosophy to it.
6. Bringing Untouchables to the mainstream of Indian society: His programs were centered on mainstreaming the Untouchables into Indian culture. He fought for the equivalent status of Varna as well as for social, economic, and political equality just as equivalent freedom to all. His thoughts and programs put forward concrete proposals for the removal of untouchability and the strengthening of the downtrodden. Dr. Ambedkar demanded equity to untouchables and other weaker sections of the society through making provisions in the Indian Constitution. (n.d, Dr. B R Ambedkar and his contributions, 2019)
7. Abolish Caste system: According to Ambedkar a nearby connection between the caste system and untouchability. It was subsequently unrealistic to abolish the one without abolishing the other. There can be no severance between the two as untouchability is the expansion of the caste system. He thought that the two stand together and fall together. He accordingly preferred abolition of the caste system and reorganization of society on the basis of equality, freedom, and fraternity really at that time social justice could be achieved.
8. Abolish untouchability: After a few movements and struggles of Ambedkar to remove the evil of untouchability, laws were incorporate in the Indian Constitution to commemorate the great oppression faced by the untouchables. Article 17 of the Indian Constitution abolish untouchability and proclaimed it as a punishable act. As indicated by this, nobody can confine the Dalit's or Harijans from entering temples, roads, transports, and so on the constitution likewise gives reservation to these classes by virtue of Article 15(4) and 29(2) and with article 341 of the Indian constitution.

9. Ambedkar and state socialism: The theory of state socialism in India has developed by Dr. Ambedkar. He presented a memorandum entitled 'State and Minorities' in the constituent assembly in the interest of all India SC organizations in the year 1946. In his memorandum, he believed that any advantage or additional advantage arising out of any position, birth, caste or sub-caste ought to be abolished to achieve social democracy. Ambedkar's idea of State Socialism depends on the following focuses;
 - State responsibility for and key ventures to fulfill the need of less fortunate layers of society.
 - Maintenance of gainful assets by the state.
 - Only dispersion of basic produce among the various individuals with no qualification inside rank or statement of faith.
 - The objectives and aims of his state socialism are to eliminate the evils caste system and inequalities from the society. The idea of state socialism depends on principles on equity. (Vijayakumar, n.d)
10. Abolition of Khoti System: Ambedkar moved a bill against the Khoti system in 1937 which was known as "The Khoti Abolition Act". English government used to choose some incredible people known as Khots. They were middlemen between the tax collector and taxpayer. Khots were responsible to give up the duty tax revenue gathered for the whole empire to the British government, for this they used to openly endeavor and misuse the taxpayer. This sort of framework was more noticeable in the Ratnagiri region, Kolaba region, and Thana region. Ambedkar wanted that this anti-Khoti bill ought to be enacted in the total Bombay Presidency.
11. Contributions in labor laws: In his time, Ambedkar has brought several labor reforms. In the seventh meeting of the Indian labor conference in 1942, he started to diminish the factory working hours from 12 to 8. In the same year, at the Tripartite Labor Conference Babasaheb was engaged with building Plenary Conference and Standing Advisory Committee to settle the industrial disputes among employees and employers. He likewise propounded to set up work trades and to gather the statistical information under Industrial Statistics Act. Ambedkar has likewise worked for the upliftment of women in society. He has outlined laws like "Mines Maternity Benefit Act" and "females and Child Labor Protection Act". He had a go at eliminating the restriction on ladies' work in the coal mines. He additionally settled "females Labor Welfare Fund" and fought to give maternity advantages to the ladies workers. In 1943, Dr. B.R.Ambedkar outlined the amendment in the Trade Union Act of 1926. In the amendment, he set forth the mandatory recognition of the worker's union by the businesses. India was the 1st country to consider the worker's protection and the credit goes to the extraordinary visionary Dr. Ambedkar. This Employees State Insurance guaranteed the employees against physical disability, medical and injuries during the work. In 1944, Babasaheb sanctioned a bill for the security of the employees working in the coal mines. This bill was known as Coal Safety Amendment Bill. In 1945, he presented Mica Mines Labor Fund which helped the workers in the coal mines to get water, training, housing, transport facilities, clinical facilities, entertainment, sanitation, and better wellbeing. "Nationalism can only take justification if Social, brotherhood is given the highest place by forgetting the difference of caste, race or colour among people."

- Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar

Abstract:-

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has given a unique importance to social justice in the Indian Constitution. This social justice provides basic constitutional rights to all the exploited, vulnerable elements, including the untouchables. Dr. Ambedkar formulated an objective with the essence of the Indian Constitution for the creation of a new system. India has become a sovereign, socialist, secular, democratic republic, providing equal opportunities to all citizens by extending the scope of social justice by providing social, economic and political justice. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was the great person who did deeply study on injustice and started movement amongst marginalized communities he had addressed on untouchability and caste system issues in a different way during the independence movement period. He not only addressed on untouchability and caste system but he came out with concrete proposals for the removal of untouchability and the upliftment of the marginalized and the excluded. He believed that the root of untouchability lies in the caste system. He felt that no Socio-Political reform movement could be successful without the annihilation of caste. He wanted Justice for untouchables as well as the weaker sections of the society by making provision in this regard in the constitution itself. Dr. Ambedkar's Justice of society is based on three fundamental principles viz- liberty, Equality and fraternity. But the present scenario shows us a gloomy picture of Dr. Ambedkar's idea of dealing with weaker sections in the society. The ideas enshrined in our constitution are not addressing the issue properly even after 74 years of independence. Therefore, it is clear that Dr. Ambedkar's idea of social justice was very broad. Liberated millions of human beings from inhuman untouchability and empowered them.

Introduction:-

The birth centenary of the Bodhisattva Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar brings a message of liberation to the Dalit-exploited society of the world. Ibrahim Lincoln, who abolished slavery in America, Joseph Stalin, who put the principles of Karl Marx into practice by abolishing espionage in Russia, Like Social revolutionaries Mahatma Jyotiba Phule, Swami Ramakrishna Paramahansa, Swami Vivekananda, Raja Rammohan Roy, Dayanand Saraswati and Gandhiji who have given practical form to the creation of equalitarian society by ending slavery and helplessness from centuries of Indian proletarian society and a tribute to Dr. Ambedkar, born in the great Madhya Pradesh of Maharashtra, who founded the brotherhood.

The greatness of Dr. Ambedkar, who reflected this struggling life in front of the society, is exposed in social justice today. This great person has attained immortality by making a relentless effort to make today's Indian society healthy and alive from the horrific disease of untouchability. Dr. Ambedkar was in favor of improving not only the men of the depressed classes but also the condition of women; but he considered both men and women were equal, in the field of social reform and in terms of family happiness. Dr. Ambedkar emphasized on women education because women contribute in making future generations bright. So, Dr. Ambedkar was in favor of women education. He thought that this education can make them self-reliant.

Objectives:-

1. To study the concept of social justice.
2. To understand the influence of Buddhism on Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar's Social Justice:
3. To study the Dr Amberkar's contribution for the backward classes and dalits.

Methodology:

This study is based on secondary data. The secondary data has used to write this paper. The secondary data from various journal articles, books, news paper articles and reference books.

According to the laws of sociology, every human being is a social animal. Therefore, society plays a major role in the formation of every human being. Every human being is an integral part of the society that's why Dr. Ambedkar strongly opposed casteism and the caste system. Dr. Ambedkar's vision was to get social justice at various levels by creating a new society of human liberation. So, Dr. Ambedkar has adopted the principle of conscience, constitution and ethics for the overall emancipation of Dalits. Therefore, every human being today is free. In the world, Karl Marx started the fight against racial discrimination but it should not be forgotten that Dr. Ambedkar fought the fight against racial discrimination along with caste at all levels.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had an unwavering belief that it is meaningless to talk about the freedom and equality of human beings without drastic changes in the established social system. Hence, he struggled throughout his life demanding social justice and rights. His intention was - "All human beings are made of the same soil and they have the right to demand good behavior with themselves."

Social Justice:-

The Concept of social justice as the basis of freedom, Prof. Laski says that "Social Justice means equal social rights." Today, at the international level, there are UN, intellectual institutions and many such institutions which establish 'social justice' all over the world for providing the Social Justice to their citizens. Dr. Ambedkar struggled with social activities at the national level, especially for the justice of Dalits and backward people and he got moral strength from other allies. Dr. Ambedkar wants to bring about human equality and equality based society at the national level and Dr. Ambedkar saw social justice in the national perspective.

The goal of social justice is to eliminate inequality, to arrange for equality. Social justice is a human demand for natural rights, a demand that a man be live a necessary and respectable life in society. He wants to eradicate the caste system in the society for the same reason that discrimination is eliminated. This goal cannot be achieved by keeping the toxic environment of impermanence intact, the varna system intact, differences such as amiri-poverty, Brahmin-untouchables. According to the Preamble of the Constitution, due to the non-fulfillment of the concept of social justice, which has created a climate of social, political, economic instability, it is a challenge for the proponents of social justice, especially the dalit-victim-deprived class who after the fifties of independence Social justice has not been found, it is stuck in the fog of ideas all around. More than Dalits, backward, minorities are caught in the fog of ideas, who somehow want to change the constitution, the current political system, and keep the archaic practices equal.

The Indian social system, which is still working on the decentralized philosophy of varna and caste, has its faith in ancient Hindu religion and theology rather than in changing global time conditions, then it is natural for the democracy to waver. Democracy remains the same, human society stumbles, its thinking changes, and it causes its instability, its deviation.

Once speaking in Mumbai, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar said, "Where there will be a conflict between the interests of the nation and my personality, I will give priority to the nation; but where there will be a conflict between the interest of the Dalit castes and the interest of the nation, I will give priority to the interest of the Dalit castes." But where there will be conflict between the interest of the Dalit castes and the interest of the nation, I will give priority to the interest of the Dalit castes." In his life, he had set this goal and had a great need for the task to achieve this goal. There are mainly two forms of - (A) worked for untouchability throughout life (b) comes out as a great jurist.

Buddhism and Dr. Ambedkar's Social Justice:

The social philosophy of Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar was influenced by the teachings of Gautama Buddha. He said that "Philosophy has its roots in religion and not in politics; but in the sense of equality, freedom and fraternity, brotherhood was paramount. It would not be inconsistent to say that equality for society and the nation is alive and human development, Freedom, fraternity and justice are absolutely necessary, peace and justice ultimately prevail in the struggle. Dr. Ambedkar gave importance to the education of women and always remained a strong supporter of them. Through the Indian constitution, they empowered women. They wanted to structure a society where the life of the common man is safe and happy.

Buddhism is the cornerstone of Ambedkar's social justice. Ambedkar was highly influenced by rationalism or rationalism of Buddhism. Mahatma Buddha proclaimed the asylum of rationalism rightly, in contrast to the established tradition of accepting Shruti as evidence and said, "Do not believe in scripture or on me." Lord Buddha strikes at the inertia of Hindu society. According to him, the eternality of the Vedas suppresses free thinking and prevents all kinds of changes, while truth can be reached only by free thinking of thoughts. No ideology or principle is perfect in itself. Therefore, there should be scope for rethinking and re-evaluation according to the situation of the country. Dr. Ambedkar has tried to identify his thinking with this rationalism of Buddhism. Dr. Ambedkar has also expressed a similar view in his address speech 'Annihilation of Caste' prepared in 1936 in Lahore for the conference organized by the Jat-Pata Todak Mandal, that Hinduism is not based on conscience. The caste is against the logic, no Hindu can separate himself from it. Manu has given three laws of conduct for every Hindu

Inspired by the 'Attdeepa: Bhavath Attasharano' (You people become a lamp yourself and go to your own refuge and not go to the shelter of others) in Buddhism. Dr. Ambedkar gave practical insight to the Dalits who were neglected from the point of view of social justice to be their own pioneers. The story of this is that - "Through light, by yourself, understand the secrets of religion and be a guide to yourself, instead of being obsessed by a guru or a preacher. Dr. Ambedkar in twentieth century of Indian society of Buddhism Reinforcing this rationalism inspired humans to think independently. Dr. Ambedkar wrote his article "The Budha and the Future of his Religion" prepared for Mahabodhi Calcutta in 1950. It is written that- "Buddhism is nothing but morality. But this morality is motivated towards human welfare based on conscience. Dr. Ambedkar wants to give religion a scientific form based on wisdom and logic instead of tradition and orthodoxy. . He says that religion should go along with science. If religion does not do so then its honor is sure to be destroyed.

Dr. Ambedkar was a strong supporter of human religion. He used to say that "a person becomes great by his knowledge and qualities, not by being born into a clan or caste." But he took national unity, social reform as development. Opposing caste restrictions, he said that "castes are a hindrance to the economic and economic development of society."

The goal of his life was innovated a society based on truth, non-violence, mobility, good behavior and women's respect. They had become supporters of democracy and socialism from the point of view of widespread violence. He opposed the capitalist and zamindari system as per his non-violence policy. Dr. Ambedkar considered exploitation of workers and peasants as synonymous with violence. He had put every action against human welfare under the category of violence, but the objective of democracy is to establish a casteless, classless and exploitative society. True democracy cannot be established in India until its foundation is built on social justice, for that it is absolutely necessary to remove social and economic disparities.

Dalit struggle and Social Justice:

According to Dr. Ambedkar, it would not be possible to bring untouchables and Dalits to the level of social equality and humanism until the caste system is eradicated from Hindu society. Dr. Ambedkar tried to understand social life from a realistic and human point of view. They wanted to make Indian Hindu society free from the evils, stereotypes, traditions and preferences and make it prosperous. Their social thinking promotes humanitarian values based on freedom, equality and motherhood. Dr. Ambedkar found that due to the leprosy of untouchability, the consciousness of Hindu society has been paralyzed and he is constantly exhausted.

Dr. Ambedkar was the auspicious thinker not only of Indian society but of all humanity. He was neither an escapist nor an indolent; he did not participate in the politics of society, not in the politics of power. He did not want anyone to mislead the downtrodden for power politics, he wanted to create a healthy organization in which all should be equal, be mutually loving and stand on the level of equality. That is, Ambedkar wanted to establish a social system that is fair and just from the point of view of social justice. Dr. Ambedkar says that the rights that Dalits have lost in the past will not be obtained by solicitation. Continuous struggle will have to be done for this. Sacrifices are always offered to goats and not to lions. Dr. Ambedkar has emphasized on two levels to establish social justice due to this belief.

1. To organize Dalit castes to fight against social injustice.
2. Making constructive efforts to establish a just society.

Movements of Social Justice to the Backward and Dalits

The way Dr. Ambedkar communicated social awareness among the Dalits through his Marathi magazine 'Mook Nayak' and social articles written in 'Excluded India' reflects Ambedkar's rebellious nature towards the unjust system. "Among his works are 'Who Were Shudraaj', 'The Untouchables' and especially 'Annihilation of Caste' are excellent specimens of revolt and conflict literature in India.' Mahar Congress 'or' All India Scheduled Castes Council 'or' Dalit Youths or Mahar Women While addressing the meeting of Dr. Ambedkar, he continued to inspire the Dalits to unite and fight against social injustice, oppression and oppression. Dr. Ambedkar wrote in the first issue of 'Mooknayak', illustrating the situation of the Dalits, "Hindu The society is like a multi-storeyed building with no stairway to enter and no gateway to come in. On the one hand, while society believes that there is God in the roots, on the other hand it also some people, who are part of it, are not touchable. '

Dr. Ambedkar waged a lifelong struggle to remove untouchability caused by Dalits. In the episode of this struggle, Ambedkar conceded the Dalit struggle in 1927 by watering the Dalits in the Mahad Chobdar pond. On 3th November 1927, in a conference related to the entry of Ambadevi temple in Amravati, Dr Ambedkar strongly opposed the first temple for Dalits and advocated worship of Dalits in the present temples without any discrimination. While addressing the Dalit Conference of Mahad on 25th December 1927, Dr. Ambedkar had said that "the removal of untouchability and the communal communion will not end the sufferings of the Dalits." Therefore doors should be opened for them in the services and trade of all departments and Hindu society should be restructured on the principles of equality and lack of casteism.

The day of 25th December 1927 will also be unforgettable because on this day "Manusmriti", based on inequality, oppression and injustice, was burnt under his leadership. On which Dhananjay Keer's comment goes like this: "This work was one of the great devil's (profane) blasts on the earth after Martin Luther against selfish religion conditions, tradition fanatics and change opponents. As a result, there is a red-letter day in the circulars of 25 December 1927, because on the same day Ambedkar ignited the old Manusmriti and demanded a new legislation for the re-creation of the Hindu Code, so that the lives of the people could be disciplined.

Thus, Mahad became the vitine class of India. On 22th March 1928, Dr. Ambedkar inspired the Dalits to fight for equal rights. The history of the Dalit struggle till now is incomplete without a discussion of the struggle of Dalit's entering the famous Kalaram Temple. Sunday, March 2, 1930, a satyagraha of Dalits started to enter the temple in the presence of eminent people and 15000 fifteen thousand workers. Satyagraha kept on going. Ultimately it was decided that both the upper castes and the untouchables would be involved in the Rath Yatra of Rama on 9th April 1930. Under the leadership of Dr. Ambedkar, the Dalit and untouchable class was dreaming of challenging the privilege of the Brahmin class by joining the procession, whereas the upper caste Hindus did not want to reduce this privilege at any cost. As a result, when Dr. Ambedkar arrived to pull the chariot with his comrades, the Savarnas engaged Ambedkar in a quarrel as a strategy and took the Savarna Hindu chariot. This incident left Dr. Ambedkar's conscience and again reinforced his belief that "lost rights will never be obtained by begging and appealing to the conscience of the usurpers, but by incessant struggle."

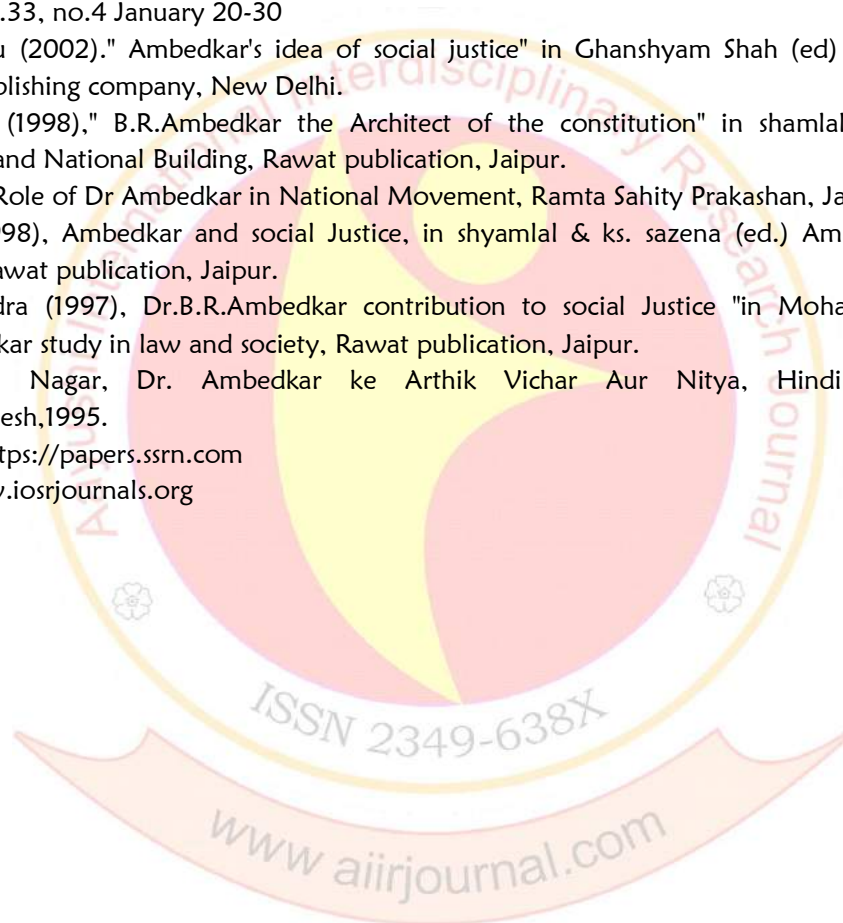

Conclusion:

It is clear that without social change, the backward and the disadvantaged cannot get social justice. In order to end the tradition of centuries of injustice, fundamental changes will have to be made in the social system, only then Dr. Ambedkar's dream of social justice will be realized. The underprivileged and the backward will have to avoid such illusory steps and stay on the path of social justice till the human transformation of the entire system is done. Today, when the underprivileged and backward have not yet achieved social justice and the storms of privatization and globalization are going on by creating a 'new myth of development' and the underprivileged are being denied education, employment and work indirectly. The concept of justice and its principle and its demands become more relevant. Therefore, the principle of social justice will remain relevant till a complete human system is established from the system of discrimination, inequality, poverty, humiliation, exploitation and oppression, tyranny and injustice from Indian society. Today, there are new challenges before the principle of social justice and the question of social justice has become more acute and prominent.

Introduction :

Women empowerment dates back to the vedic periods, where the women were having equal status with men, they were well educated and well- trained in all the aspects. Due to the immense intensity of growth and development in the social media and IT sector, we are now entering into the rat-race world for better conditioning of ourselves. Human being has become selfish. A Women in the form of Mother is scared and pressurised, and is facing a lot of numbness, because of various socio-economic factors. There has been a lot of atrocities on Women and Girl-child, but instead of all these, Women is still striving. Empowerment of Women (Human Resources) is Key. We should work on the Men's psyche and give a therapeutic treatment for reforming human society as a whole. Tradition and Religion has a strong influence on Women's aspects, right from their birth to death. Empowerment is such a thing that makes them perform or to act, according to ones choices and judgement. It is the Empowerment, which releases the component- Power, speech and freedom to new dimensions. These are the three Basic – innate and lively - components of human rights which maintains a sustainable life, amidst all the disturbances. Women empowerment ensures all the social and political issues which will help to reduce the imbalances in the paradigm – shifts of many issues.

The founder of Missionaries of Charity was Late Saint Mother Theresa, declared as saint by the Vatican on 4th September, 2016. She opened up her first ashram in Calcutta in late 1950's. She and her set of sisters insisted that they were the contemplatives in the midst of the world who believed in action rather than by preaching. They are missionaries of mercy who not only believed in meeting with the presidents, political heads of the state, get royalty and give employability, but they also believe in Women Empowerment and at the same time try to rehabilitate them by some way or the other like even giving them sources of livelihood to sustain their life. Doing the right things right, the first time, and every time and always is a realistic goal. Optimum utilization of Resources and Maximum Productivity can be attained if there is trust among one others. These were Babasaheb Ambedkar's contribution have been great ideals to the Indian women and also Indians. Many scholars be it Indians of Foreigners have made a lot of study in his ideologies.

Literature review :-

Women, today take education imbibe some kind of work or activity that last longer or for ever. They try to work for the upliftment of the society. This gives rise to the new set of business trends and traders and one who are working on it are called a the Social Entrepreneurs and the whole process of working system in a society is known as Social Entrepreneurship. It is said You educate a man and You educate a Human, You educate a Woman and You educate a Generation. Deswal and Sahini (2015) elucidates that the only way to empower the women is to educate them. Education to women makes them capable to confront distinct life-challenges and improve their life-conditions. (ECOSOC - Annual Ministerial Review-2010)- NGOs are usually the first agents to respond to political, security and humanitarian crises. They possess extensive knowledge of the field and can share their experience and expertise. The role and the interest of NGOs in international development have been growing their participation and cooperation must be adjusted. Reducing inequality, addressing vulnerability, ensuring food and energy security, providing social protection, alleviating poverty and hunger, fighting youth unemployment and creating green jobs are the urgent tasks on our agenda. All of us as humanitarians, game-changers, leaders, scholars, diplomats, donors, coalitions and NGOs need to exchange ideas and tailor them for new projects towards 2020. Doepke M. Tertilt M. (2011) says that women empowerment brings and promotes economic development. Self-sustenance and empowered women can grow and live a good life. Venkata Ravi and Venkatraman (2005) focused on the effects of SHG on women participation and exercising control over decision making both in family matters and in group activities. Dhanvijay (2012) studied the societal framework meant for women. Talks are made for Empowerment of women and with regards to more political, economic, social and health related. The issue of social empowerment of women need to be raised higher and given utmost importance and women would rise to zenith. Barnwal (2014) states that Babasaheb Ambedkar can be regarded as one of the greatest intellectual and social reformer of modern India whose ideologies brought a lot of changes for Indian women, Dr B.R. Ambedkar laid the foundations for gradual transformation of Indian social consciousness and gender justice in India. It is stated that Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was a symbol of revolt against all oppressive features of Hindu society". His dream of society, based on gender equality is yet to be realized and there would be social reconstruction that favours women empowerment. It can be concluded that Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was a path-maker of all the women irrespective of religion, caste, creed, gender and brought a new trend for uprising the women through his thoughts and beliefs. Along with women all the people of India should be proud for the tremendous and everlasting steps for the empowerment of women in Indian society carried by Dr. Ambedkar. "Inspire, Transform, Reform & Inform," Yourself completely, is the core essence for empowered women - today, who are resourceful Human resources.

Aims and Objectives :-

- 1) To analyse about Empowerment of Women with respect to Human Resources (HR)
- 2) To focus on Empowerment of Women with relationship to various ideologies.
- 3) To enhance effectiveness and Productivity in Women living in the Global arena.
- 4) To bring about positive attitude – in Women in today's world.

It is said, AAJ NAKAD, KAL UDHAR (Today in cash dealings, Tomorrow in credit dealings), BUT IF WE WANT TO LIVE IN THIS WORLD, WE HAVE TO FISH alone to quench fire of our bellies. But Some Humane people in NGO's teach us how to fish throughout our lives, with keeping others bellies in tact. When there is righteousness in the heart, There is beauty in the character, When there is beauty in the character, There is harmony in the HOME, When there is harmony in the HOME, There is order in the nation, When there is Order in the NATION, THERE IS PEACE IN THE WORLD. The mission of Missionaries of Charities is to serve Mankind and to restore Human values. The Organisation seeks inner transformation and inculcates through humane values of Love, sacrifice and service. Everyone in the working samithi- volunteers or non-volunteer, office-bearers or non-office bearers lead a life- unity in purity with thought, word and deed in unison and lead a pious life in piety. Missionaries of Charities believe that - PEOPLE OF ALL religions, irrespective of caste, creed, religion, race or colour will come together and work together not to fill the bellies, but also to work for others. It is the Bellies that everyone works for and my study will work for stomach and humane touché. Both eyes and heart will work together with stomach in motion. They know that if Women are empowered, the nation will be powered and be stable. One Mother Teresa could change the face of Calcutta – irrespective of being a Christian Nun, she was a Human being first. She all started it with Educating and empowering girl students.

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar sacrificed his whole life for the betterment, rights and justice to the women living in this society. He made such articles in the constitution of India which helped a common women to fight against injustice. By social legislations, women were uplifted. Babasaheb speeches mostly have concerns for – Women empowerment and Gender sensitisation. Therefore, major acts were passed in due course of time for Women empowerment.

- The Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961.
- The Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956.
- The Maternity Benefit Act, 1961.
- The Medical termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971.
- The Commission of Sati (Prevention) Act, 1987.
- The Prohibition of Child Marriage Act, 2006.
- The Pre-Conception & Pre-Natal Diagnostic Techniques (Regulation and Prevention of Misuse) Act, 1994.
- The Sexual Harassment of Women at Work Place (Prevention, Protection and) Act, 2013.

Thus, We see various ways where women were empowered by Missionaries of Charities pyrotechnics and by Babasaheb Ambedkar ideologies :-

- Self-employment and SHG groups could be formed by Women.
- Basic Minimum necessities of life could be provided.
- Women were encouraged to make career in their life-span.
- Women's Labour pattern were changed.
- Women's social interaction changed.
- They were given more control over resources.
- Women could make decision over education purposes .

Empowerment Of Women (Hr)- Through Missionaries Of Charities Pyrotechnics And Ambedkar Ideologies.

Suggestions :- Some of points to be considered are-

- Now, Women can create interests in their own lives and be self- independent. Stimulation of Creativity, Courage, Conviction and Confidence in Women, can be created by training them in right mode through education and entrepreneurial skills- Self-esteem of Women can be enhanced by getting proper education.
- Women can become good change-agents and visionaries, thus taking care of their selves first, families next and the nation last in the world today.
- The basic necessities of lives by settling life for a purpose is made. It has enhanced the effectiveness and productivity in human's life. Everyone is Motivated and goes on learning on and on in one's life.

- A holistic approach is adopted and we can get concrete results, when the women are empowered and given a chance to be social entrepreneurs.
- Empowered Women can know how royal they are when they get proper health, education in a social entrepreneurship scenes. The socio-economic scenes of these Empowered women working in NGO's (Missionaries of Charities) has made changes to other dimensions.

The gaps from this paper could be :-

- Women are given inhuman treatment, at times, by the society.
- Traditional ideologies and practices in society tend to make them lag behind.
- They are made to play a second- fiddle most of the times.

Scope through this paper :-

- Women can know ourselves better and help others irrespective of gender sensitivity.
- Complex situations of life can be made simpler.
- Positive auras can be enhanced and a good- support system can be developed in.
- Personal and inter-personal problems can be solved by proper-training management.

To conclude with, In this globalized world, the eyes of the society are changing for the women working in a NGO and empowering her selves. They are making a lot of sacrifice, so that others grow. Women today are confident, independent can fight all odds and can come up shining. These women are not going to change their vision, but others vision and mission too. They have changed their locus and focus and have created pathways for others. Change is the need of Hour, so Women have really empowered themselves in Missionaries of Charities- one who are associated with it and one who are serving for it. Same is with Babasaheb's ideologies. Their goal is - Let us exist together. Let us share the result (food) of the work together. Let us work together. Let us all get enlightened. Let us not have hatred towards anybody. Let the whole world attained happiness to the fullest.

Ambedkar's Social Reformation Through Street Drama By Trainee Teachers In West Bengal

Dona Datta

Assistant Professor

Trinity B.Ed College Milan More,Champasari,Siliguri

Abstract

Teachers are the backbone of the society. Besides providing education, their duty is to inculcate values, make people aware about various social issues, raise voice against evils etc. Regarding this, drama can be a powerful strategy in reforming society as drama is human and society oriented as well as it can be easily understandable and reachable to the masses. Ambedkar's dream was to abolish untouchability from the society and he fought for it till the end of his life, but it is a matter of big sorrow, in twenty first century injustice against the untouchables prevalent in the society and numerous incidents are happening in the society. So, trainee teachers can come forward and play an important role through street drama in social reformation which was his dream.

Key Words: Untouchability, Social reformation, Street drama, trainee teacher, teacher education etc.

Introduction:

“A teacher is not only the nuclei of the education system, but is also the backbone of the system and the success or failure of this system depends to a large extent on the community of teachers. A teacher, if works with sincerity, honesty and a sense of duty, raises students to their all-round development on the one hand and contribute unprecedentedly to harmony and peace in society and the nation on the other.” ---- Mahatma Gandhi.

Mahatma Gandhi rightly said that, teachers are the backbone of our society and to uplift our society and to shape our next generation teachers play a vital role. Teachers are the nation builder and development of a country depends on a teacher. Teachers are the backbone of the society and they play a vital role in reformation of our society. Teacher's role is to guide, facilitate and students must be an active participants in teaching-learning process. Besides providing education, teacher's duty is to inculcate values, make people aware about various social issues, raise voice against social evils etc. In this regard, trainee teachers can actively participate in social change and social reformation. Teacher education is important for the overall development of a nation as well as for the next generation because trainee teachers will be the man maker in future, can be active participants in social reformation. Teacher Education programme in West Bengal has constructed its curriculum in such a way where Drama has given a place for all round development of the trainee as well as to educate masses in another way. It is a painful fact that, untouchability still exists in 21st century, though law has been made to curb the social evil. Untouchability is deeply rooted in the villages and remote rural areas. Street drama by the trainee teachers can establish social harmony, communal unity, and national integration and can mitigate social distance.

Caste system exists in Indian society since long which further divided into sub-castes and the lowest caste are treated as untouchables. Untouchability is one of the burning issues of our country. Our society is facing several problems and challenges in day to day life. To eradicate social problems like untouchability, street theatre is the best means as it has the power to change the individual and the community. Beside social and emotional development, it creates harmony in the society. Ambedkar's dream was to a healthy society where untouchability will not exist, which trainee teachers could fulfil. Role of a teacher is not only literate people but also have a big significance for the society. Education is an instrument of social change. Ambedkar was always in favour of mass education. Ambedkar has made relentless effort in his life time to abolish untouchability. But it is very bad to see that untouchability still exist in our society in 21st century. Social reformation was always his first priority. All practices of the society can be abolishing through education. Education can enlighten masses. According to Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, "Education is not only the birthright of every human being but also a weapon of social change."

We are living at the era of technology which has taken its place everywhere but in the remote areas, slums it has not yet reached. So, we cannot rely on it fully. Education system is gradually changing and now it is constructive. Apart from reading, speaking, writing, education can be imparted through observation and listening. So, street drama serve by the trainee teachers can be the most important propaganda against untouchability as it boost up observation power. Through education we can uplift our society as well as can create awareness and social change.

Untouchable people face many problems in the society. To get rid from the problems, street drama is a powerful tool for social change as it arouses social awareness in a meaningful way as well as it awakens the conscience of the people and street drama also helps in to understand the depth of the problem. It has a positive effect on our society. Street drama can attract the attention of the wider community and make people aware of their rights and legal awareness which has been told by Babasaheb.

To eradicate untouchability, mass awareness is essential and to arouse mass awareness against this evil, teacher education institutes can play a leading role through the trainee teachers. For social reformation street drama is one of the best means as it embodies the real situation and Albert Bandura has emphasised on observational learning. Through observation, masses can realize the reality of the incident. Street drama is helpful in giving social message. When the real life untouchability incidents shown through street drama, people can easily relate to the incident and will change their attitude, behaviours. As a weapon of social transformation street drama comes to the audience to arouse mass awareness about social issues. It is not expensive as well as it need not any stage. It is effective in the slums, remote areas, market, backward places where trainee teachers can easily convey the message through street drama. It can attract audience, can gather their attention and can give them lesson about various social issues. It is a one way communication and is used into extend social messages and create awareness in common people regarding critical issues like untouchability prevailing in the society.

Role of trainee teachers in eradication of untouchability through street drama:

The untouchable people faced various kind of discrimination by the upper class people in the name of untouchability. Babasaheb always wanted to bring out the untouchables from the social problems. Trainee teachers can take a part in the progress of the society through street drama. Street Drama is a powerful medium in reforming society as drama is human and society oriented as well as it can be easily understandable and reachable to the masses. Edger Dale has given place of the concrete component in the base of the cone and it gradually moved towards abstract component. If we follow the cone we can see Dramatised Experience is in the third position from the base. So, it will be very effective in awaking social awareness as well as it is an innovative strategy to boost up the thinking of the masses about the burning social issues like untouchability. To remove untouchability from the society trainee teachers are the ray of hope in the darkness. They can do something for the betterment of the society. Trainee teachers can bring changes in the society by arousing awareness through street drama. To eradicate untouchability and to educate people, street drama is a medium of social reformation. Trainee plays different social roles and highlights the problem through street drama.

At the time of street drama presentation trainee act the untouchability incidents and make the incidents live which audience see, feel, and think. Through street drama masses learn and trainee teaches. Trainee teachers must act the drama in such a way that masses can understand the removal of untouchability message provided by them. So local language must be used as it is a medium of communication .Beside this, trainees must be used local language at the time of giving slogans and quotes which catches attention, concentration, etc of the masses. Inter-religious harmony, understanding and unity among all religious groups in the country can be shown through street drama. Trainee teachers can go to the remote places specially minority concentrated and backward areas to arouse awareness about removal of untouchability. For this their street drama themes can be social concourses, religion, rejection of social customs, communal harmony etc .Apart from this, inter-caste marriages can be shown which babasaheb also told for abolishing untouchability.

Conclusion:

Untouchability is a stigma of society. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar faces many problems in his life time by the upper caste Hindus and also experienced untouchability by them. Ambedkar fought against untouchability and for the rights of the untouchable people in his life time. He was the leader of the untouchable classes later on. He was a thinker and social reformer also. He always opposed the practice of untouchability.

According to Ambedkar constitutional provisions can change the life of untouchables and protect them from social stigma. But most of the people are unaware about their rights and faces problems. Sometimes we see some tragic incidents in the news papers, social Medias also. Removal of untouchability can be possible through constitutional provisions. Indian Constitution has legally abolished the practice of untouchability but still it exists in our society which is a blot for humanity. Practice of untouchability is a crime and also punishable by law. Article 17 said about Abolition of Untouchability and it is a punishable crime. THE UNTOUCHABILITY (OFFENCES) BILL, 1954 has enacted by the Parliament which states that untouchability is a punishable crime. To make it more stringent, 'The Protection of Civil Rights Act", 1976 was made. All offences under the Act have been made non-compoundable and also have to pay fine with imprisonment. Articles 330-345 of the Constitution provides special provisions for safeguarding the interests of the Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes, Anglo-Indians and the backward classes. The Part XVI of the Indian Constitution is related to Special Provisions Relating To Certain Classes.

At last it can be said that, untouchability is a crime against humanity and untouchable peoples can take help from Govt. organisations, private organisations, NGOs, Human Rights Organisation. All these information must be provided by the trainee teachers through street drama.

He was contributed as an economist, sociologist, educationalist, journalist, parliamentarian, editor, social revolutionist, luminary, etc. Indian economy is a mixed economy and have impact to changes in social, political and economical changes before and after independence. Dr. Ambedkar has given new socio and political view to Indian economics. Dr. Ambedkar thought that the economically use of public fund and its proper utilization for planned objectives can be economy of nation. Dr. Ambedkar scholarly contributed Indian economy with his writing. He is a scholar of modern economics and his thought background of current scenario. Analyzing his economic ideology in short term as well as long term of planning and policy making to shape inclusive India.

Keywords:- Economy, Utilization, Public fund, Planning, Policy

Introduction:-

Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar is known as 'Father of Indian Constitution' a true leader of Indian freedom movement. A great lawyer, A great Dalit leader, A great pioneer in the field of economics, Bharatratn and so on. He was the first person to pursue Ph.D. in economics from abroad. He was the first South Asian person to have double doctorate degree in economics from London school of economics and Columbia University. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar wrote three books on economics are as

- 1) Administration and Finance of the East India Company (Columbia university)
- 2) The Problem Of Rupee: Its Origin And It's Solution.
- 3) The Evolution of provincial finance in British India- A Study in the provincial decentralization of Imperial finance(P.S. King and Ltd London 1925)

This chapter discuss the impact of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's economic thought in the field economics like public finance, agriculture, problems of caste system in economic development, women empowerment etc. What is well known Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar fought against caste system in India but what is not known is how Dr. Ambedkar had also impacted on the Indian economy.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's important contribution towards Monetary Economics :-

In period 1898 to 1916 gold exchange standard were adopted and more emphasis was given to external stability i.e. exchange rate stability. In 1914-15 the exchange rate got weak and India was running out of gold to pay back its remittances. Leading to an increase in the demand of rupee as a result government of India started minting rupee to tackle the situation. This created inflationary pressure in the economy at that period of time.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar studied this matter in depth and commented on whether the gold standard or gold exchange standard would be better for curb the inflation in a country like India. In his D.sc dissertation 'The Problem Of The Rupee It's Origin And Solution' His major arguments are that currency should not be linked with gold. On the contrary a pure gold standard to be followed where gold coins should be circulated along with paper currency. According to him exchange rate stability will benefit only the trading class not the poor's in the economy. Poor will be benefitted only when there is an internal stability. According to the Babasaheb currency should be stable in terms of commodities not in term of gold. He was against the concept of linking money supply with gold. Ambedkar was a strong believer of quantity theory of money. He was not in favour of giving the power to the government to expand the money supply without expanding the production of goods & services since it can lead to an unstable currency value. So he strongly opposed the managed currency system & supported gold standards with some modification. He proved with statistical data & reasons that how the Indian Rupee has should be regulated & money should have a circular flow. He also suggested more attention should be given on price stability than exchange rate stability & This thought of his eventually lead to the establishment of Reserve Bank Of India.

B) View and Agriculture and Poverty

Dr. Ambedkar made extensive research on the problem of small holding in agriculture. This thought on agriculture are found in his article “ small holding in Indians former & their remedies 1917.& also in statics of minorities He mentioned that holdings of land by few people is an acute problems of Indian agriculture which has various disadvantage like difficulties in cultivation & utilization & Resources, increasing loss, low productivity, inadequate income & low stand of living. According to Dr. Ambedkar productivity of agriculture is related not only with the size of holding of land but also other factor such as labour & other inputs. Therefore if capital or labourate are not available inadequate quantity & quality then even large size become unproductive. On other hand, small size land become productive if these resources are available in plenty. With this thought the ‘Land Ceiling Act’ is passed after independence He also mentioned about the slavery & exploitation of labour bounded under caste system being extremely bad for economical development & fought for its abolition this other suggestion for solving agriculture problem include collective forming economic holding of land or equal distribution of land, large scale industrialization ,provision of money, water, seeds & fertilizers by the government cultivation of waste land by allotting waste to land less labour, minimum wages to labours, control & regulation of private money lenders giving loan to formers.

C) Nationalization of Industries

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar thought fast development of Indians is impossible without industrialization. According to him large scale production at domestic level should be undertaken. This would lead to production of essential goods for mass consumption. It utilizes raw materials, reduces foreign dependency & increasing security to labour , ultimately leads to all overall economic development of the country. The private sector can not undertake establishment of big industries in public sector. The insurance & transport companies should be nationalized. Right to strike should be given to labours. The industrial policy of the Indian government is trying to keep up with Dr. Ambedkar’s provisions on industrialization those are included in the Directive Principles of state policy after independence.

D) View on tax policy

Dr. Ambedkar expressed his news on taxation in the manifesto of the Swatantrata Majdoor Party 1936. He was opposed to the land revenue system its system & other taxes as their burden mainly fell on the poorer sections of the society. This suggestion in regard of taxation are as follows- “Tax should be imposed on payer’s capacity & not on income ” Tax should be less on poor & more on rich. Tax exemption should not exceed beyond a certain limit. There should be equality in tax imposition among different sections.

Tax should not intend to lowering the standard of life of the people. Land revenue tax should be more flexible & should not levy on agriculture land. He suggested that Indian tax system at that time was based on discrimination & inequality.

E) Water Resource Policy

Dr. Ambedkar has taken a great policy initiative when he was taken a great policy initiative when he was a cabinet minister of labour. Irrigation power that formed the basis for the present day water sharing dispute through Central Water Commission apex body under the central government and also led for the establishment of River Valley Authority. He criticized the act of 1935 on the lines of water as a wealth of nation. He suggested an integrated approach for the optimal utilization of water resource for that , an independent authority must be established giving the central government a greater role. He gave a legal implemented the work as per the policy framework that led to the establishment of Damodar Valley Project in Bihar and West Bengal . He had for the first time suggested the interlinking of Krishna, Godawari and Tapi rivers.

F) Economics Of Caste System

According to Dr. Ambedkar the caste classification in India was a major obstruction to economic growth and progress. The caste classification didn't permit people to teach their expert skill to any individual belonging to other caste .Merely member of their own caste were permissible to learn the profession. Thus if a person had the skill necessary for a particular occupation he would not accept the profession of a caste lower than his own. In an energetic industrial set up the individual must be free to choose his profession but due to social religious restriction on interwork related mobility following consequences –

Firstly by do not permitting readjustment of profession .Caste become a direct cause of much of the being without a job in various groups ' as a Hindu would prefer to be unemployed rather than getting employed in profession not assigned to his caste.

Second, individual justice and economic efficiency demand that competition exists in factor market. Due to the constraint on inter occupational mobility of Labour, capital & free enterprise across caste group the caste system creates separation in each of these markets. Labour & Capital thus does not flow from one livelihood to another even if the wage rate or rates of return on investments are higher in the substitute occupations. This brings about a high level of inadequacy in resource allocation.

The division of employment is not based on individual choice. Some of the occupation are socially degrading & people are forced in this occupation on account of their caste origin. Such people can not obtain job satisfaction. As economic association caste is therefore a destructive institution in as much as it involves the subordination of man's natural power & favouritism to the exigencies of social rules. This also results in disassociation of cleverness from work. The dignity of Labour is nearly absent in the common scheme of theory of caste.

G) Contribution In Labour Law In Economic Development Of India

Dr. Ambedkar initiated to reduce the factory working hours from 12 to 8. He also propounded to establish employment exchanges & to collect the statistical data under Industrial Statistic Act. Dr Ambedkar has also worked for the upliftment of women's in the society. He has framed laws like "Mines Maternity Benefits Act" & "Women & Child Labour Protection Act". He tried removing the ban on women employment in the coal mines. He also established "Women Labour Welfare Fund" & fought to give maternity benefits to the women labours.

India was the first nation to think employees insurance & credit goes to great visionary Dr. Ambedkar. This employees state insurance insured the employees against the medical, physical disability & injuries during work. In 1944 he also enacted a bill for the safety of the employees working in the coal mines. In 1945 he employee mica mines labour fund which helped the employee in coal mine to get housing, water, education, transport facility, medical facility & better health & sanitation.

H) Democratic State Socialism

Dr. Ambedkar had presented a democratic state socialism to the constitution committee . The main point of it are as follows-

- All basic industries should be owned and run by state .
- Insurance and agriculture should be nationalized and manage by the state.
- Maintenance of productive resource by state.
- Just distribution of common produce.
- The distribution of land among the families in a village for collective farming.
- No discrimination as landlord, tenants and agriculture labour.
- All agriculture input like capital, seed fertilizer etc. Would provided to collective farming by the government.
- Distribution of agriculture income should be done only after payment of land revenue tax.

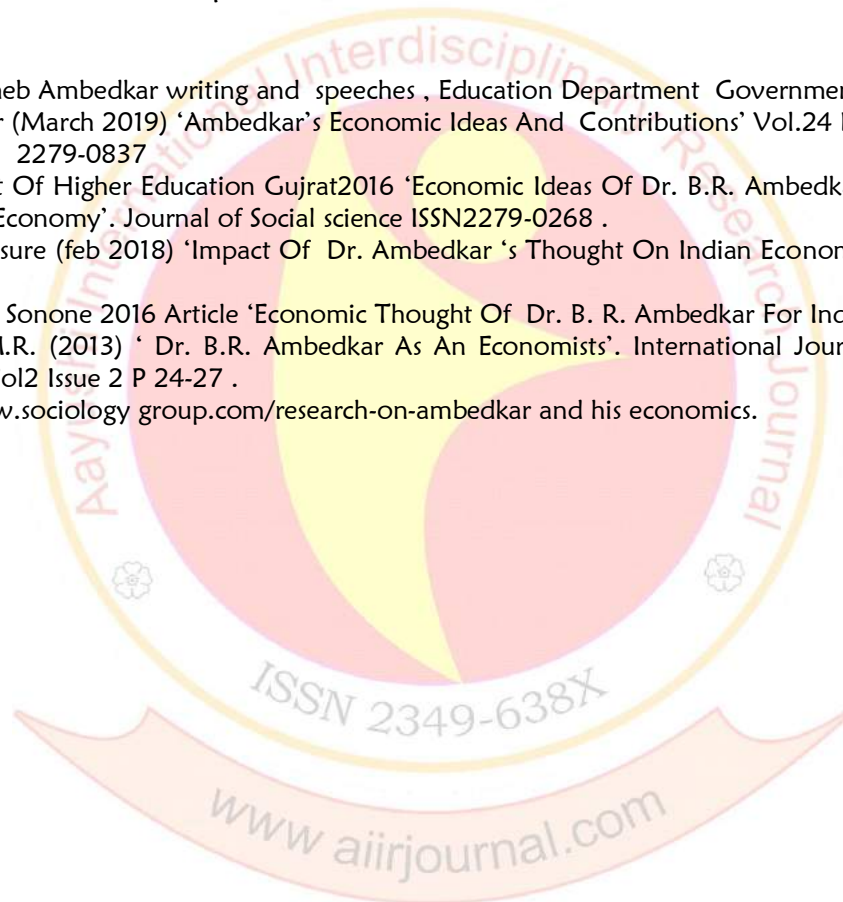

He wanted that public sector should play an active role in the economic development of India. Whereas private sector should be treated as the passive player. While discussing about industrialization in India consolidation of small holding and building of water projects he stated that these should be state owned and should be manage by the state.

Conclusion:-

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a highly trained economist but his contribution in the economics are not recognized in the main stream of economics. Babasaheb also interested in politics and law rather than economics. But whatever his contribution and thoughts are remarkable in the field of Indian economics. This chapter discuss the importance of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar thoughts in the form of thesis, dissertation, papers, speeches , books are major contribution in the subfield of economics like public finance, agriculture economics, problem of caste system in economic development, idea about water and power policy, labour law, women empowerment etc. all are imperative in the economic development of India.

Ambedkar And Social Justice: In Relation To His Educational Philosophy

Diksha Nargotra

Research Scholar University Of Jammu

Abstract

Education plays an important role in the development of society. Dr. Ambedkar applied his social philosophy in the field of education and tried to use it as an instrument to change the society. He said that learning was essential for every individual if he wished to make progress in the life. He says that education and society have a bounded relationship because the progress and development of society is possible only through education. Ambedkar brought social justice with the help of education only. The power of making an individual free from exploitation and slavery comes from education. The aim of social justice is to remove all kinds of inequalities based upon Caste, race, sex, power, Position and wealth. The social justice brings equal distribution of the social, political and economical resources of the community. Thus the present paper will focus on the notion of social justice given by him and the role of educational philosophy in bringing equality in society.

KEYWORDS- Justice, Equality, Education, Reform.

Introduction

One man one value was the universal message of Dr. Ambedkar, a revolutionary who challenged to bring a change in the social order where the clash between caste and class enjoyed a prominent position through centuries. Dr. Ambedkar fought to change this existing social order and tried to build social justice by advocating various issues pertaining to difficulties of caste system and untouchability, basic human rights, labourers, women rights and the Indian politics. Dr. Ambedkar was born in the family of Mahars in Maharashtra and had faced all the indignities and discrimination as an untouchable throughout his life. So he encountered various inequalities and humiliation which led him to stand for the establishment of society based on the socio-economic and political justice.

The idea of social justice is built upon the foundation of 'liberty, equality and fraternity' where every person has the right to access all the opportunities. B.R.Ambedkar believed that education would greatly contribute to the improvement of the untouchables and the lower caste people. It is the education which makes an individual enlightened and makes him aware of rights. Ambedkar considered that denial of the right to education was an important cause of degradation of the lower caste people. Ambedkar criticised the British Policy on education for not adequately encouraging education among the lower castes. He felt that even under the British rule education continued mainly to be for the upper caste people. While a labour member in the executive council of the Governor General was instrumental in extending scholarships for education abroad to the untouchable students. Thus Dr. B.R. Ambedkar wanted the untouchables to undergo both liberal education and technical education.

Malik (2011)¹ highlighted that Dr. Ambedkar inherited his educational philosophy from his master Gautam Buddha. He gave 3 principles about his philosophy: 'Pradnya' (Knowledge or Wisdom), 'Sheel' (Character) and 'Karuna' (Compassion). He gave lot of importance to these three principles and tried to imbibe them in the minds of public. He viewed that "Knowledge is the foundation of a man's life" which could only bring change in the mindset of lower caste people towards education.

Pact (2012)² argues that Ambedkar wanted to actualize society which should be based on the following principles:

- * The individual is an end in himself.
- * The aim and objective of the society is the growth of the individual and the development of his personality.
- * The society should be based on a rational religion.
- * An individual should not be treated as a means but should be treated as an end. This is because by nature every individual is free.

Hence society should provide equal opportunity to each and every individual and should create the space for his development. Society should take care of every human being by giving him liberty, equality and justice. Dr B.R. Ambedkar knew that education was the necessary precondition for the reconstruction of the society on the principles of equality and social justice. It is unfortunate that in the past society got divided into castes based on birth. The people belonging to lower castes i.e. the scheduled castes were denied all privileges and facilities, including educational facilities. They were so poor that they could never think of sending their children to educational institutions. If at all any scheduled caste dared to get elementary education he/she was required to sit outside the class room. His shadow should not fall on other student. (Jatava,1997)

Thus education is an important instrument of social progress. It helps an individual to outgrow the superstitions and enables oneself to develop his potentialities in life. It makes man conscious of his rights as well as obligations towards other members of the society. Therefore, education is an important key to bring about equality and social change in society.

Dr. Ambedkar's philosophy of education can be understood through his writings and speeches as he gave importance to education in his life. For Dr. Ambedkar, education alone creates a sense of new thinking and awakening among the people in India. In this context Guru (1998)⁴ argued that he wanted education for all and not restricted only to a few sections of society. As a humanist, Dr. Ambedkar was in favour of imparting education for the development of human personality. In the view of Dr. Ambedkar the main motto of education must be on serving human interests and achieving equality by removing the evils of social slavery, untouchability, casteism, oppression. Ambedkar's philosophy of education had nothing to do with life beyond the world and emphasized was on secular education. Guru(2002)⁵ views education as a vital force for individual development and social change and an effective instrument of mass movement for safeguarding of life and liberty.

So Ambedkar was always conscious of the ignorance and backwardness of the lower caste people due to lack of education among them. In his struggle against caste based discrimination he held that liberation of lower caste in India was possible only through the approach of "education, agitation and organization".

Surendra (1997)⁶ viewed that Babasaheb firmly believed that education was the only effective means to uplift the lower section of society. He also believed that it was only through education that the downtrodden could be awakened for their struggle to get their rights. According to Dr. Ambedkar, "Education is not only the birthright of every individual but also a weapon of social change." Wherever he visited the main emphasizes was the need of education. He used his own learning and knowledge for the upliftment of society. In order to awaken the masses and to make them conscious of their rights, he gave great importance to education. Dr. Ambedkar believed that to achieve progress in socio-economic and political arena, there is no other powerful tool other than education. He put forward his theory that education is the important means to develop one's rationality, conscience, scientific temper and consciousness which leads to the development of personality. He did not visualize education merely as a means of livelihood but as a powerful weapon to liberate them from ignorance and to strengthen their fight against injustice and humiliation.

Ambedkar also gave importance to the character along with education. In order to bring change educated people should have character. Then only an individual can utilize his knowledge for the development of human civilization and culture and develop his own personality. He believed that education is good only if it promotes and preserves the interests of mankind as a whole. Lokhande (1977)⁷ argued that true education creates equality in society, provides food to the hungry people and satisfies knowledge.

Education alone humanizes man. He wanted to strengthen the national unity and integrity through education. Through education, Ambedkar wanted the people to cultivate the values of freedom and equality among themselves. He was of the view that education is such an indispensable thing that it should necessarily be within easy reach of all. It should be cheap also so that the poorest of the poor may acquire it.

Dr. Ambedkar (1948)⁸ started Mahad Satyagraha in 1927 to achieve the rights of lower caste and establishing religious equality. At Mahad, he made a public bonfire of the Manusmriti, a bible of slavery for untouchables. He awakened the Untouchables by making them aware of their slavery. For the uplift of the depressed classes he developed a programme of education as a part of the general manifesto of Indian Labour Party before the elections of 1937. To rule out illiteracy, he emphasized the necessity of free and compulsory education. He further advocated the adoption of diversified technical education. He stressed the necessity of scholarships in educational institutions. The Bombay province Depressed Classes Youth Conference was held on 12 February 1938 under the presidentship of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar. In this conference, he said that education was a sword and being a double-edged weapon, was dangerous to wield. Dr. Ambedkar addressed a meeting of student of scheduled castes held at Calcutta on 2nd January 1945, where he said to form their own All India Student Federation. Das(1987)⁹ highlighted views of Ambedkar and asked them to concentrate only on education and not to involve in politics. He advised the students not only to get a degree but to see that the degree carried with it some positive knowledge. Thus, Dr. Ambedkar delivered number of speeches which emphasized on role of education.

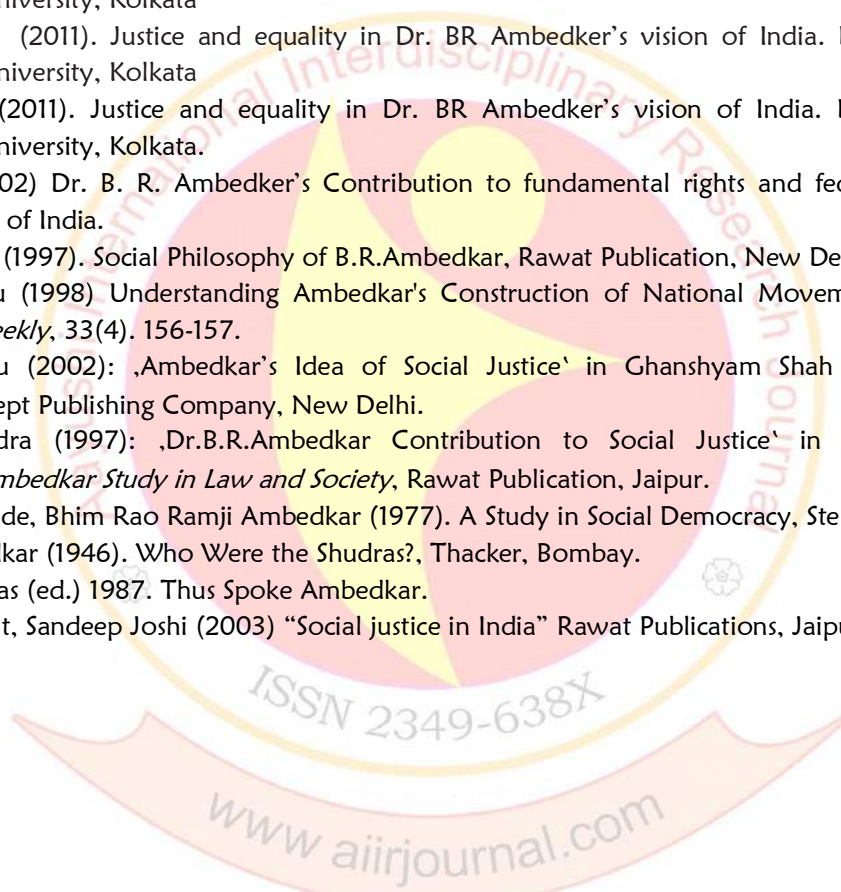

Ambedkar believed that education was the most important means of raising the people's standard of living. Dr Ambedkar said, "Education is what makes a person fearless, teaches him the lesson of unity, makes him aware of his rights and inspires him to struggle for his rights." He believed that education is a movement and if it does not make a person capable then it is not true education. Ambedkar's social-philosophical views rested on the bedrock of egalitarianism. Human dignity and self-respect were central to his social philosophy. He wanted to use education to establish justice, equality, fraternity, freedom and fearlessness in society. He wanted to replace the birth-based society with a value-based one.

Joshi (2003)¹⁰ in his work emphasized that Ambedkar was deeply influenced by Buddhist philosophy and he advocated development of morality in all people. He said only such objectives of education are meaningful that aid in making humans happy and prosperous and helping the society to progress in terms of employment. Thus education makes the society stable. Good behaviour and good conduct arise from logical reasoning and that can be acquired only through education, experience and dialogue. Being a strong proponent of logical and scientific education he was convinced that primary education is very important for the poor sections as it provides them necessary platform to enter into public life.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar And Social Reformation

Mr. Abhijit Abaso Patil.

Assistant Professor,

Department of Sociology, Shivaji University, Kolhapur.

Abstract

Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar also known as Babasaheb Ambedkar. He is not just a great man, but also a social reformer. He was the person who inspired the Dalit Buddhist movement and campaigned against social discrimination towards the untouchables (Dalits). He was a member of the Constituent Drafting committee. Ambedkar rose to eminence as a social reformer and a leader of the Depressed Classes of India. He was the first Law Minister of Independent India. He was the great economist, politician, great philosopher, and guide. He worked a lot for Dalit Community.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar shifted to social and political life. Babasaheb had devoted his life to remove untouchability. He believed that the progress of the nation would not be realized without the removal of untouchability, which means the abolition of the caste system in totality. He studied Hindu philosophical traditions and made a critical assessment of them. Social reforms consisted of family reform and religious reforms. Family reforms included removal of practices like child marriage etc. He strongly supports the empowerment of women. He supports women's rights of property which he resolved through Hindu Code Bill. In this paper I have studied about different steps taken by Babasaheb Ambedkar for Social reformation in India. All over his work and devotion for society is great. It still works in different angles of society.

Key Words: - Social Reformation, Family and Religious Formation, Social Justice, Constitution of India.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar And Social Reformation

A person who is known as the father of Constitution is Babasaheb Ambedkar. Babasaheb Ambedkar's greatest achievements are in the sphere of ideas, politics and social change that shaped the character of the nation, India and of democracy as conceived by the world at large. He always played a big role in social reformation. Ambedkar rose to eminence as a social reformer and a leader of the Depressed Classes of India. The main aim and mission of Ambedkar's life was to try to lead the Depressed Classes towards a higher social, political and economic status and to free them from the stigma of untouchability that lay upon their foreheads. In other words, he desired to secure for the Depressed Classes, complete equality, and equality at par with the Hindus.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar's greatest achievements are in the sphere of ideas, politics and social change that shaped the character of the nation, India and of democracy as conceived by the world at large. Still, his greatest achievements are in the sphere of ideas, politics and social change that shaped the character of the nation, India and of democracy as conceived by the world at large.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was the first Law Minister of Independent India. He was the great economist, politician, great philosopher, and guide. He worked a lot for Dalit Community. Ambedkar realized that for this extremely difficult aim, he would have to plan an all-round attack on the system of Caste and untouchability. The first step in this direction would be for him to explain in a convincing manner the defects, shortcomings, and evil impacts of the caste-system and how they hindered the removal of Untouchability, apart from leading to dismal, negative, disunited and separatist trends in the Hindu Society. He wrote a number of books for this purpose. B. R. Ambedkar was an eminent leader, social reformer, scholar and jurist. Dr Ambedkar was a reformer whose legacy and relevance continues to grow. His message of social equality continues to reverberate and resonate with passing time.

There are 4 actions taken by Babasaheb Ambedkar for social reformation.

- Movement against caste Discrimination
- POONA PACT
- Hindu Code bill
- Contribution to the constitution text.

1. Movement against caste Discrimination

According to B.R. Ambedkar, was to abolish caste discrimination and untouchability to bring a socio-economic and a political transformation in India. Ambedkar decided to fight against the caste discrimination that plagued him throughout his life. In his testimony before the Southborough Committee in preparation of the Government of India Act in 1919, Ambedkar opined that there should be separate electoral system for the Untouchables and other marginalized communities. He contemplated the idea of reservations for Dalits and other religious outcasts.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, who belonged to one of the scheduled castes, devoted his entire life to fighting against caste tyranny. Ambedkar organized the “All India Depressed Classes Federation” for the purpose. In South India, the non-Brahmins organized during the 1920s the “Self-respect Movement” to fight the disabilities, which Brahmins had opposed. The Constitution of Independent India has provided the legal framework for the final abolition of untouchability. It has declared that “untouchability” is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden and punishable.

He launched a newspaper called “Mooknayaka” (leader of the silent) in 1920 with the assistance of Shahaji II, the Maharaja of Kolhapur. It is said that after hearing his speech at a rally, Shahu IV, an influential ruler of Kolhapur, dined with the leader. The incident also created a huge uproar in the socio-political arena of the country.

Although Dr. Ambedkar was criticized for not participating in the freedom movement led by the Congress, he said that Dr. Ambedkar brought reforms through his own ideologies and programmes. Dr. Ambedkar played a pivotal role in eradicating the ‘Varnashrama’ practice in the society and proved through his action that any person can perform any duties given to them and the duties performed by a person was not due to his caste.

2. POONA PACT

It was the agreement related to depressed classes. This agreement was taken place between Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar and Mahatma Gandhi. This agreement includes depressed classes and upper caste Hindu leaders on the reservation of electoral seats for the depressed classes in the legislature of British India government in 1930. It was made on 24 September 1932 at Yerwada Central Jail in Poona, India.

Poona act was recognized by both parties for the disfavored by the untouchables and disliked by the Hindus. It was embodied in the Government of India act. While Gandhi saw untouchability as a social issue, Ambedkar understood caste as a political one. The PACT, signed at Pune, as the result from the Communal award of August 1932. The proposal of PACT was taken placed by The British Government which allotted seats in the different legislature of India in the different communities to resolve the problems of communal interests. Dalit leaders supported the proposal. That proposal helped to believe in advance interests of Dalit. Mahatma Gandhi has taken objection to the separation for electorate system between Dalit and Hindu. During the time, Mahatma Gandhi began a fast unto death on 18th September.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar refused to abandon his support for separate electorates until Gandhi was near death. He and the Hindu leaders then agreed to the pact, which declined separate electorates but gave increased representation to the Dalit within the Hindu electorate for a 10-year period. Ambedkar complained of blackmail, but the pact marked the start of the movement against “untouchability” within the Indian nationalist movement. Those untouchables are today known as Scheduled Caste (SC).

Under a separate electorates system, each community was allocated a number of seats in the legislatures and only members from these communities would be eligible to vote to elect a representative of the same community to legislative assemblies. Mahatma Gandhi was bitterly opposed to the communal award, as the award in continuum of constant efforts of the British imperialists to divide Indian people into a number of special-interest groups and to weaken the national movement.

Initially, Ambedkar was in favor of the award, as according to him political solutions like separate electorate would work for upliftment of depressed classes. However, after the series of negotiations both Gandhiji and Ambedkar agreed to a solution called Poona Pact and thereby withdrawing separate electorate for depressed classes. The Poona Pact was an emphatic acceptance by upper-class

Hindus that the depressed classes constituted the most discriminated sections of Indian society. It was also conceded that something concrete had to be done to give depressed classes a political voice. The pact made the entire country morally responsible for the uplift of the depressed classes. As the concessions agreed to in the Poona Pact were precursors to the world’s largest affirmative programme (reservation in legislature, public services and educational institutions) launched much later in independent India. Most of the entire PACT made the depressed classes a formidable political force for the first time in Indian history.

3. Hindu Code bill

To codify and reform Hindu personal law in India there were different types of several laws passed in the 1950s. Those were included in Hindu Code Bill. That code bill law included 2 persons- Dr. Babsaheb Ambedkar and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru. This bill taken place for reformation of fossilized Hindu society. Both argued that for a complete upliftment of the nation as a whole, social upliftment is a dire necessity along with economic and political upliftment. In this women were treated as a lesser sex and deprive them of their property rights and denied choice of their mobility for long in Hinduism. There was the review taken by ministry of law. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was committee’s chairperson. The first draft has revised in 1948. Committee made 8setions in that bill. The Hindu code bill codification had 2 main purposes. Firstly to elevate the social status of Hindu women and secondly to abrogate social disparities and inequality of caste. Hindu Code Bill was intended to give women several rights including marriage after the death of husband, share in paternal property, right to divorce etc.

Different types conflicts arose in bill because of caste systemization in India. Many lawyers took objection to ambedkar's draft of hindu code bill. According to ambedkar there was inability to pass hindu code bill after several years, so he resigned as a chairperson. Jawaharlal Nehru always helped to pass hindu code bill. He also did some changes in bill.

4. Contribution to the constitution text

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar played valuable role in contribution to the constitution text. He was chairman of the constitution drafting committee on August 29, 1947. Constitution came into effect on 26 January, 1950. There were 7 members in constitution committee. But all the responsibility is on head of the committee Dr. Ambedkar. He wants to remove the gap between different classes and castes to equalize them. They think that there cannot be unity without equalization. Ambedkar never want caste systemization. He always takes steps towards the religious, gender and caste equality. Reservation system introduced by Ambedkar for creating social balance between the classes.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar looks at constitution as a vehicle of nation's progress. He used his all knowledge, all experience in drafting constitution. Nehru, Gandhi all believe that no one other than Ambedkar can write constitution in well manner, as ambedkar has knowledge about different fields and different subjects. Not a single word has been written by other 6 members of committee, but when Ambedkar wrote it, everyone has so many excuses to that. But Ambedkar write the constitution in very adverse situation.

The wide range of civil liberties was guaranteed in constitution to the individual citizens. Freedom of religion, the abolition of untouchability these guarantees were given in constitution. Ambedkar also keep arguments related to social and extensive economic rights for women. Ambedkar released protective discrimination scheme for the scheduled castes and other backward classes. For making protective discrimination Ambedkar worked for 10 years on it.

Conclusion

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar always worked for all the classes equality. He was opposed to classification in hindu. He always worked for equality in society. He fight for women rights in all factors. He just wanted to equalize all legal, social, governmental activities for all classes like SC or other backward classes. He always evolved systematic approach towards each and every activity. Ambedkar played significant and seminal role in constitution drafting. He always worked for transformation in every legal activity.

Baba Saheb Ambedkar - The “Real Father” of Progressive India: a Philosophical and Jurisprudential Reflection

Dr.B.R Ambedkar is commonly referred to as the ‘Chairman of Constitution Drafting Committee’ or the ‘First Law Minister of India’ or even as the ‘Father of Indian Constitution’ either without reflecting on or in an attempt to mask his real manifestation as “The Father of Progressive India”. This article attempt to reflect upon the fatherly attributes of Ambedkar that entitle him to be called as the real Father of Progressive India by looking through his jurisprudential contributions and supporting political ideals. But I must also admit at the outset that whatever attributes I may accept as constituting the idea of a Father can be attributed to Mothers as well. However there is a common acceptance of these attributes as part of the idea of Father.

The Concept of Father

Who is a Father? It could be answered in a philosophical or sociological sense by pointing out the essential characteristics that would constitute the idea of a Father. It could also be taken as an empirical question that requires an answer based on the contingencies of actual facts.

In its strict sense a Father is a male parent of any type of offspring and offspring understood as the young born of living organisms. However the term Father could be used in a wider sense to suggest the idea of Fostership. A father is a parent who takes care of his child and facilitate conditions for the survival and the fuller development of his child to its full potential. He would ensure that his children live in an atmosphere of Freedom, Equality and Fraternity. He would treat all his children equal. He would offer reasonable freedom in their actions and thoughts. He would dream of his children living with the feeling of love and companionship. He would try his level best to ensure the development of essential life skills and the availability of opportunities that would assure a dignified human life for his children.

If the characterisation of Father given above is true, then no one other than Dr. B.R Ambedkar deserves the title. When we look into how he plays that role beautifully in social engineering, it is quite obvious that Political philosophy and Jurisprudence conjunctively has played a significant role in this constructive but herculean task.

Whose Father Ambedkar is?

Some people in India accept him as a Father but of the Untouchables only. People like Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi has even tried to deny so as evident from his claims of being the sole representative of all Indians including the oppressed classes at the Round Table Conference. But we argue in the paper that Ambedkar should be considered as the real Father of our Nation - Progressive Sovereign, Socialist, Secular, and Democratic India - whose institutions should be informed with Justice. When one is conceived as a father of a Community or Society or Nation, he should be understood in terms of his vision and mission for the society and his specific plan of action for its development and change as well as the particular actions he did for the purpose. Constituent Assembly Debates is a clear indication of the Vision and Mission of Ambedkar and even a preliminary perusal of Constituent Assembly Debates would show that Ambedkar was speaking and acting for the whole people of India considering India as an organic whole and untouchables as an essential and integral part of that organic whole .

Political Father

“Law and order are the medicine of the Body politic and when the body politic is sick, medicine must be administered.”

-Dr. B.R Ambedkar

It is evident that throughout his life Ambedkar has constantly upheld and reinforced the values of Equality, Liberty and Fraternity as the core values of social engineering as well as individual development (Rathore, 2020). A Parent, particularly a father would mould their children in accordance with certain values by creating and constructing situations and opportunities and by placing children in those situation. Ambedkar has led many political movements that has aroused not only the interests of the concerned class of people like depressed classes and women but also the larger public. The Untouchable movements like Mahad Satyagraha, the initiation of Newspapers and Journals for depressed classes, the establishment of the Depressed Classes Institute, organisation of various Conferences, Temple Entry movement from 1917 to 1935 are only few illustrations that had revealed the political farsightedness and foresightedness of Ambedkar (Zelliot, 2019). As a political Father Ambedkar shows us solutions and remedies on various socio economic problems in case of our blindness due to analytical incapacities.

It is well known that Political Ambedkar is instrumental in the establishment of different political institutions like Reserve Bank of India, Law Commission, Labour regulations, Women’s right of Property, and the like. Ambedkar singlehandedly taken up the task of drafting the constitution and ensured that the principles of Justice, Equality and Fraternity got adequate representation in the body of the Constitution of India and no Legislations inconsistent with those principles would survive in the legal landscape.

Political Ambedkar is supported by Analytical Ambedkar and advances him towards Assertive, Protective and Reformative Ambedkar.

Analytical Father

"Men are mortal. So are ideas. An idea needs propagation as much as a plant needs watering. Otherwise, both will wither and die."

-Dr.B.R Ambedkar

In most of our homes Father takes up the responsibility of analysis. Ambedkar had been a critical analyser of social problems and institutions. His own analysis and understanding shaped his thoughts in designing of the supreme law of our land as well as certain landmark welfare legislations in India across space and fields. While analysing the Genesis of Caste in India in one of his earliest works, Baba Saheb could identify the key characteristic of caste as “endogamy”. The genesis and mechanism of the caste could be proved by showing how endogamy is maintained (Ambedkar, 1916). Ambedkar through his analysis clearly shows the fact that endogamy is foreign to the people of India and the various Gotras of India have been exogamous. The implication of this thought provoking analysis is twofold. Firstly it reinforced the position that Equality has been the predominant principle in India in its social organisation for exogamy means fusion and only a society observing equality can fuse together.

Secondly, it clearly distinguish between Class and Caste and argue that it is the origin, mechanism and maintenance of endogamy that created caste and Brahmins as a class are responsible for it. Analytical Ambedkar was also able to identify endogamy as the major mechanism for excluding non-members from marriage and the stringent practices of Untouchability and the Sati, Enforced Widowhood and Girl marriage as the associate mechanisms in the creation of caste.

The Analytical Ambedkar was the major contributor in shaping the course of Constitutional Design at the Constituent Assembly. It is a beauty to read him refuting illusory and absurd objections to constitutional amendments suggested by his fellow members with detailed explanatory notes and reasons (CAD, 1947). Pursuing a scientific way of looking at things Ambedkar follows a pattern of dissecting the Purposes, Structures, Functions and relations of things that he investigates.

Ambedkar teaches his children the essential skills of Analysis by Demonstration. He could show us that through the development of adequate analytical skills various social problems could be identified and legal solutions could be prescribed. A progressive society requires both identification of problems and solution of problems in appropriate time.

Protective Father

Our Constitution must not be a dictatorship but must be a Constitution in which there is a parliamentary democracy, where Government is all the time on the anvil so to say, on its trial responsible to the people, responsible to the judiciary, then I have no hesitation in saying that the principles embodied in the constitution are as good as, if not better than the principles embodied in any other Constitution.

Constituent Assembly Debates,
Vol.9. 17th September 1949,p.1663

Ambedkar's vision of Social Transformation was embedded in all his writings and speeches. He was a conscious protector of the basic values that make a society dynamic, progressive and meaningful. The most prominent one was the value of Democracy (Dre'ze, 2018). "Rule of the People, by the People and from the People". He wanted to protect his children from exploitation and oppression not only from other individuals and public at large but also from the state. He found Representation as the key in achieving it.

The Care and Concern he has showered on Women, Exploited, and Downtrodden class is remarkable. He is the single most person apart from Rajaram Mohan Roy who argued for the equal treatment of women through substitution of then existing legal frameworks and incorporation of safeguards within the Constitution itself.

His training as a remarkable Economist drew his attention to the Economic planning of India as well as the deplorable financial conditions of Small holder Farmers. He is instrumental in forming India's monetary policy(Ambedkar,1923).He was in favour of the pooling of land among the poor farmers based on a co-operative management of land thereby increasing the productivity of lands and saving the farmers from further marginalisation.

Reformative Father

"Gyan without sheel is very dangerous;it must be accompanied by Sheel by which we mean character, moral courage, ability to be independent of any kind of temptation, truthful to one's Ideals"

-Dr.B.R Ambedkar -

It is in the act of character building of children the Father realises his purposes. He was conscious of the herculean task of nation building from the scratch in India and the need for persons with good character for the purpose. Influenced by the movement for social reforms in Maharashtra initiated by Mahatma Jyotiba Phule, Justice Ranade, Agarkar, Chatrapati Sahu Majoraj and Prabodhankar Thakre, Ambedkar argued for reconstruction of political and social institutions in the evolution of Indian Polity and Society (Gorrige, 2018). Ambedkar continuously advocated for the improvement of social morality as part of a progressive dynamic process of social evolution and reconstruction.

Ambedkar reminded the Political leaders and Legislators of the value of time. The welfare measures intended to save the suppressed and oppressed people should be taken within a reasonable time. Otherwise, he warns, “the people will treat the Parliament with utter contempt.”

He also taught us the way an opposition should work in society and the value of it. Ambedkar as a member of opposition in his late life opposed the Government and criticised the treasury benches by stating the specific reasons for the same. There is a lesson of honesty and integrity that we all in general and opposition members in particular to be learnt from Dr. Ambedkar.

He emphasised Education, Organisation and Agitation as a means of reforming an Individual as well as Society. Education rises the consciousness and critical ability of individuals which lead them to organise and gain more strength. Organisation would lead to the ability to agitate against social evils and to reform the society. The participation of women in Ambedkarite movement is a well-studied topic (Urmila & Meenakshi,2014).

In the field of Jurisprudence the reformative Zeal of Ambedkar is evident. He accepted the need for periodical revisions of law in a modern society. Some expert body should examine and rectify the problems that bound to occur during the process of Legislation (CAD,Vol.II 1947p.1103-05). Though Ambedkar agreed with the idea of constituting a Statute Law Revision Committee it is pertinent to not that he suggested for leaving the matter to Government to determine the appropriate mind and machinery to carry out the purpose. Here we can see the Analytic and Assertive Fathers playing their role.

Inspiring Father

"The Duty must be performed, let the Efforts be successful or not, let the work be Appreciated or not. When a man's sincerity of purpose and Capacity are proved even his enemies come to respect him."

-Dr.B.R Ambedkar

You ask any person in the world who inspired him first. “My father” would be the answer of most of them. The biggest contribution of Ambedkar to the world is that he inspired millions of human beings in the world and is still inspiring with convincing ideas of a better world. A person is valued not in terms of how long he has lived in this world but how he lived his life. Ambedkar has lived his entire life for the emancipation of depressed and marginalised communities from the oppressed classes. He inspired the Rulers like the First Prime Minister of India, Mr. Jawaharlal Nehru. He inspired Nobel Laureates like Amartya Sen. He inspired political leaders like Kanshiram. He inspired socio-political movements like Mahad movement. He demonstrated through his own life the necessity for systematic thinking and scientific temperament for upliftment in one’s own life. Being born in a caste which was considered lowest of the low to the most renowned scholar in the world (Kir, 1954). What further is required to inspire?!

He inspires various welfare legislations that emancipated the deplorable conditions of suffering people like the Hindu Family laws, Labour legislations, Child Welfare Acts.

Conclusion

The adoption of Ambedkar as our Father would provide true guiding light for us if we would like to move towards a progressive society by the peaceful use of Law as an instrument and if we accept change as the only universal principle of nature. Ambedkar as a father figure would clearly and specifically show us the values of Equality, Liberty and Fraternity. There is a great deal that we can learn from Dr. Ambedkar's ideology and Philosophy which would be beneficial to our nation building endeavour.

In short, He inspires us. He secures us. He protects us. He makes us free, independent and self-respected.

What more is required from a Father..!!!

Introduction

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, a great social thinker great humanist, lawyer, Economist, legal luminary, theorist and father of Indian constitution. He was born in an untouchable family in caste-ridden India. He had agony, resentment and anger of those who have been victims of inhuman practices of caste system and untouchability. According to Chaturvanya system, the Shudras and Untouchables were traditionally were placed at the bottom of the social structure i.e, caste system. The voice and physical appearance of the untouchables were treated as pollution. They were not allowed to live among the other people and not allowed to have basic human needs as drinking water, education, shelter and other facilities. They were excluded from the social life. Being born in the untouchable family, Dr. Ambedkar was aware of the bitter experiences of such social structure. He fought for the rights, liberty equality, dignity of the members of the untouchable castes. Ambedkar epitomized the agony, resentment and anger of those who suffered.¹

Ambedkar was critical of Chaturvarnya system and its product the untouchability, he wanted social justice by abolishing the caste system and untouchability. The practice of untouchability excluded the untouchables from the social inter course with the other castes, denied access to public places. Throughout his life and writings, Dr. Ambedkar denounced the Chaturvarnya system, domination of religion, practice of untouchability, Ambedkar pursued for the goal of social justice. Ambedkar aimed at abolition of historical distortion in the form of untouchability and securing equal civil rights, protection of equality before the law.²

Ambedkar's concept of social justice pervades the life of down trodden, marginalized, backward classes, minority sections and women, who are fifty percent of population of all sections of the society. So the concept of social justice is a broader and it occupies the entire social structure.

Justice V.R. Krishna Iyer rightly said that "Dr. Ambedkar was all sound and fury against social injustice. His weaponry was legal, political, his anathema Hindu caste exclusivism and his ambition social democracy... His life was a flaming forge, his commitment was to free the ancient unfree, his economics, law and politics were wielded into a constitutional militancy and geared up to a social emancipation movement."³ While discussing about the nature and perception of Ambedkar's movement for social justice, Professor Upendra Baxi, said "In certain a sense, Ambedkar's conception of social justice derives from his liberal vision and tradition. The figure of human rights is preeminent in vivid text of Ambedkar's corpus. In reality horrible context of destitution, deprivation and disadvantaged systematically haunting the depressed classes and given the context of colonial state. Ambedkar innovates thinking about justice, freedom, and rights in a remarkable way. ⁴ Professor Baxi continues to say Ambedkar's theory of rights addressed the civil society than state, civil society should think about entitlements, the rights should be protected by the civil society as it is their responsibility.⁵

Professor Baxi declared that the bare catalogue of needs thus identified and sustained campaign to transform needs into rights is an astonishing facet of Ambedkar's achievement. ⁶

As Jeevan Kumar D. explains, Ambedkar's movement for providing social justice to the so called untouchables, marginalized and Backward Classes can be divided into two phases i.e., during the nationalist movement and in the Constituent Assembly Ambedkar's efforts could be evaluated in two phases. ⁷ On 17th May 1929, Ambedkar submitted a report on the constitution to the Government of Bombay Presidency. In that report Ambedkar recommended that "there should be a provincial civil service and a Provisional Civil Service Commission... Indianization of the services should be made for the fulfillment of the claims of the Backward Classes. ⁸ In 1930 the sarte committee, submitted its report to the Government in March, Dr. Ambedkar was a prominent member in that Committee he demanded ⁹ "the committee recommended scholarships and student's hostel. For the upliftment of the Backward Classes, it stressed on the need to recruit depressed classes in the police. That a Backward class officer should maintain lists of qualified candidates, from the Backward Classes and promote their recruitment... on the social front, the committee recommended legislation to prevent dedication of Devadasis; and that the social boycott be checked by propaganda and legislation.

Ambedkar's movement and in its essential struggle for constitutional rights for the so called untouchables in British India, may be listed as follows: ¹⁰

- 1) All educational facilities should be provided to the depressed classes.
- 2) Depressed Classes should be given representation in state and central legislative councils on the basis of their population, needs and importance.
- 3) Jobs in the state and central government services should be reserved.
- 4) Depressed Classes should be given representation in all the democratic bodies of the country.
- 5) Provision of Separate Electorate should be made for the depressed classes and
- 6) Separate settlements should be established for the depressed classes.

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar became the Chairman of the Drafting Committee to draft the constitution for free India and he was chosen a member of the Advisory Committee on minorities and fundamental rights. Though Dr. B.R. Ambedkar entered the constituent assembly to safeguard the interests of the so-called untouchables, but Ambedkar became emancipator of the docontrodden, marginalized and backward classes and minorities of the population of India. Infact Dr. Ambedkar was a party to a general consensus in the Constituent Assembly that the term 'Backward Classes' would cover three principal components, the Scheduled Castes, the Scheduled Tribes and the Other Backward Classes. Securing the social justice was the main task of Dr. Ambedkar for all the backward classes in the country, under the mandate of new constitution. ¹¹

Fundamental Rights

Ambedkar's movement for securing social justice during the pre-independence, could not materialized, when he was in the constituent Assembly he tried to secure the social justice by incorporating the Fundamental Rights and Directive Principles of state policy in the free Indian Constitution. During the 1920-1947, he fought for social justice was his main plank, as the emancipator of all sections of the society. He knows that social justice could not be secured to one and all unless it was enshrined in the constitution itself.

As observed that the Fundamental Rights in Indian Constitution are more elaborate and comprehensive than in the Bill of Rights or in any other constitution. Professor A.M. Raja Sekharaiah rightly said that this was necessitated to enshrine in the constitution to solve the special problems of diverse religious, cultural and social conditions of a heterogeneous society. They are also intended to provide not only security for and equality of citizenship but also certain standards of conduct, citizenship and fairplay.¹²

It is observed that the Fundamental Rights aimed at preventing discrimination and promoting social justice to guarantee equality before law and equal protection of law (Article 14); prohibition of discrimination on grounds of religion, race, caste, sex or place of birth (Article – 15); equality of opportunity in matters of public employment (Article-16), abolition of untouchability (Article-17) and Prohibition of traffic in human beings and forced labour (Article-23). It is clear that by incorporating these provisions in the constitution, Dr. Ambedkar and his efforts constitutionally guaranteed equality to the disadvantaged sections of the society. Through these provisions Dr. Ambedkar tried to abolish social inequality, social stigma and social disabilities in our society.

Directive Principles of State Policy.

Fundamental Rights guarantee the rights and liberties of the individuals against arbitrary state action, the Directive Principles seek to emphasize economic and social goals. Ambedkar category stated that the Directive Principles were not intended to be mere pious declarations. The Directive Principles to create a welfare state and a just social order where there is no economic exploitation. Article 38 contains the essence of these principles: “The State shall strive to promote the welfare of the people by securing and protecting as effectively as it may a social order in which justice- social and political shall inform all the institutions of national life” Today, the Central Govt. and all state governments implementing the Directive Principles to provide justice to the needy.

Dimension of Justice : Many kinds of justice could be discussed. Preamble of Indian Constitution is itself an embodiment of social justice, here we can have a discussion of social, economic and political justice.

a) Political Justice:

Aakash Singh Rathore said that justice was not by any means merely affective for B.R. Ambedkar. The specifications and determinations of the meaning and the urgent necessity of social justice, economic justice and political justice have spelt out in numeral places throughout Dr. B.R. Ambedkar’s works. There is an abundance of literature available on his conception of social justice and to some extent economic justice and political justice. The social justice should be implemented by the governmental institutions¹³.

Justice is a complex and multifaceted concept and none of its components or constituent aspects are necessarily exclusive of the others we have observed that some questions central to political justice include¹⁴:

- a) What are the basic political rights of individuals, or of communities.
- b) What is the proper role of government or the state.
- c) What are the basic principles of democracy.
- d) Why are all citizens equal and in what ways should that equality be manifested.
- e) When is political power legitimate or illegitimate, and what duties do those enjoying power have?
- f) Should some political communities be superior to others?

Ambedkar addressed and debated all these questions related to about political justice in throughout his works. For example Ambedkar's "Evidence before the Southborough committee (1919), Annihilation of caste (1936) , State and Minorities, (1947) thoughts on Lingerstic States (1955) and lecture titled "Buddha and Karl Mark. (1956).

b) Social Justice and Economic Justice :

Aakash Singh Rathore, continues to eulogize Ambedkar' works on justice as said that Ambedkar was widely regarded as the preeminent authority in modern India when it come to social justice. Since his first writing Castes in India: Their Mechanism, Genesis and Development, to his Annihilation of Caste, to Philosophy of Hinduism Ambedkar was incessantly preoccupied with social justice. Over the course of life and vocation of Ambedkar understood the nature of economic justice involved. He envisaged a proactive role for the state and public policy to intervene in order to support the disadvantaged and marginalized sections. Ambedkar supported states intervention in the economy, he also stressed the need to adopt strong policies for affirmative action that would reshape the state and make it representative, responsive and accountable¹⁵.

Effects of Caste System

Since the caste system is society of graded inequality, one caste will not have interaction and societal life of the people. Now we will have analysis of Ambedkar on Caste system in India. Ambedkar writes that "the effect of caste on the ethics of the Hindu is simply deplorable. Caste has killed the public spirit. Caste has destroyed the sense of public charity. Caste has made the public opinion impossible. A Hindu public is his caste. His responsibility is only to his caste. His loyalty is restricted only to his caste. Virtue has become caste-ridden and morality has become caste bound. There is no sympathy to the deserving. There is no appreciation of the meritorious. There is no charity to the needy. Suffering as such calls for no response."¹⁶ Everybody should fight for securing the social justice.

How To Protect The Social Justice.

The importance of education can be evaluated while studying the life of Dr. Ambedkar and his educational successes, and through his how he could have become the chairman of the Drafting Committee. When we think that how to protect justice ,Ambedkar argues," I firmly believe in the efficacy of education as a panacea for our social evils. The problem of lower order in this country is not merely economic but cultural. It is not enough to house them, feed them and then to leave them from to serve the higher classes as was the ancient idea of this country. It is even more necessary to remove from them that feeling of inferiority which has stunted their growth and made them slaves of others and to create in them a consciousness of significance of life for themselves and for their country of which they have been cruelly robbed by the current social order of this country. I am convinced that nothing can be achieved this except the spread of higher education."¹⁸

Justice V.R.Krishna Iyer sais that we need a social revolution, an education revolution and public services revolution through crash programmes and mass line methodology. Navodaya Schools, from this angle are a new hoaxes. Antyodaya in the "widest commonality spread" is the "consummation devoutly to be wished"¹⁹

Relevance of Ambedkar's Social Justice

Ambedkar , he himself became the man of symbol of knowledge and with his knowledge Ambedkar could have drafted the Constitution of India to provide the justice to the Indian nation. By following the foot prints of Ambedkar, regarding to providing the value based and quality education, Dr.R.S.Praveen Kumar, an IPS officer, taken charge as the Secretary of Social welfare Gurukula Schools of Telangana state, preparing the students of all classes of society to get education and they are joining the highest Indian higher educationa institutions like Delhi University, J.N.U, I.I.Ts,I.I.Ms and other all institutions. Ambedkar's educational aims and objectives are being implemented now.

In this paper, we pursued the essence of providing social justice by Ambedkar. Ambedkar's philosophy, movement, writings , debates, and deliberations have been studied, debated, discussed for this research paper. In this paper we followed the comparative method and doctrinaire approach to pursue this paper. The relevance of Ambedkar's concept of social justice has been widely deliberated and discussed. In this regard, further research is invited. Thank you.

Communism, Buddhism and Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar: An Entangled Relationship

Introduction

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar is one of the icons of modern India and one of the architects of the Indian constitution. He was the first law minister of independent India and recipient of many prestigious awards which includes Bharat Ratna, which is one of the highest civilian awards given by Government of India. His struggle for the rights of underprivileged section of the society is regarded as the struggle of the century. A visionary who believed in establishing a society where everyone is free from social, political and economic exploitation. However, in current political situation of the country, every political party has interpreted his writings in his own way. In this chapter I am arguing how Dr. B. R. Ambedkar changed his political ideology from being attracted towards communism to finding refuge in Buddhism.

Early life of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar and social discrimination

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was born in a Mahar family in Central Provinces in 1891. His father Ramji Maloji Sakpal was serving in the British army as subedar (Pritchett, 2006). Although, he was able to get education in the school but discrimination and untouchability was also served to him by the school teachers and his colleagues. The discrimination has been narrated through his writings in "No peon, No water" in which he mentioned the misery of an untouchable student who was forced to sit outside the class on a gunny bag which he had to carry from his home and was not allowed to drink water by himself and the peon used to pour water from a height so the vessel doesn't get polluted by the touch of a dalit (Pritchett, 2010). After obtaining his bachelor degree in economics and political sciences from Bombay University he moved to pursue his postgraduation at Columbia University in U.S.A. and later he obtained his doctorate from University of London in Economics. B. R. Ambedkar started serving the princely state of Baroda as military secretary of the ruling Gaikwad. However, he left the job after sometime and worked as private tutor, as an accountant and even started an investment consulting business. The identity of being a Mahar ruined almost everything as Mahars were considered as untouchables (Keer, 1971).

In 1918, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was appointed as a professor of political in Sydenham college of Commerce and Economics where he faced the same problem of untouchability where his colleagues objected to share drinking water with him (Harris, 2001). Later, he left the lectureship and started practicing as a lawyer in Bombay High Court. During his practice as a lawyer, he established Bahishkrit Hitakarini Sabha for promoting education and socio-economic improvement of the welfare of the outcaste which were referred as depressed classes. He also started many periodicals like Mook Nayak, Bahishkrit Bharat, and Equality Janta for the rights of the dalits (Benjamin, 2009). In 1927 Dr. B.R. Ambedkar launched a movement against untouchability and marched for opening up the public drinking water resources for the dalits. He did satyagraha in Mahad for the dalit community to get the right of the fetching water from the main water tank and also launched a movement for getting the right to enter into the temples (Jaffrelot, 2005).

Hindu religion, Caste discrimination and Revolt of Baba Saheb Ambedkar

The Hindu textbook manusmriti which was the source of Hindu laws and ideologically justified the caste discrimination and untouchability was condemned by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar in a conference. Later, he with thousands of his followers also burned the copies of Manusmriti on 25th December, 1927 and till today 25th December is celebrated as Manusmriti Dahan Din by followers of Ambedkar (Menon, 2014).

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar viewed hinduism as a religion which has no sympathy, equality and liberty which are necessary for uplifting any individual in the society. The advocacy of casteism in Hinduism is based on the divine authority of the shastras and thus, have religious sanctions to maintain the caste system in the same manner it has been propagating in the past. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar in his very first writing “Caste in India, Their Mechanism, Genesis and Development” raised two major arguments about caste in which he argued that India is culturally homogenous and endogamy in brahmins was the basis of caste which was later adopted by non-brahmins in India. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar refused to accept the four-fold varna system which was prevalent in Hinduism and believed that the law of karma or destiny has no relation with the merits of the Individual. According to Dr. Ambedkar untouchability was not based on the inequality principle but it was prevalent due to the principle of graded inequality. (Ambedkar, 1936).

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, Marx and Communism

In the early 1930s and 1940s, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar made an attempt to engage with the communism as he believed that it is better to engage with the reality rather than with the faith. The ideas of development of a society based on rational approach which will lead towards a scientific revolution and enlightenment. He embraced Marxism because Marxism has the common goal of uplifting the socio-economic conditions of the workers and untouchables (Ahir, 1997).

Dr B.R. Ambedkar alleged that class struggle and class conscious came into light through the writings of Karl Marx. However, he claimed that class struggle in India will be obstructed due to the caste difference between different labour belonging to the same class. He claimed that “Caste to be real [it] can exist only by disintegrating a group. The genius of caste is to divide and to disintegrate. It is also the curse of caste.” The institution of caste makes it impossible to gather people around common ground of oppression and therefore it is necessary to address the caste disparities in order to solve the problem of economic inequalities (Ambedkar, 1956).

Ambedkar believed that communism lacked humanism and advocated for the ends which Marxism will attain after a revolution but not the way that it attains the end result. Ambedkar argued that “all the doctrines which Marx propounded had no other purpose than to establish his contention that his brand of Socialism was scientific and not utopian” (Ahir, 1956). Dr. B. R. Ambedkar came in conflict with the Marxist party in India due to their negligence of casteism and untouchability in the country. Indian Marxist gave very little attention to the issue of untouchability and caste discrimination and believed that only class exploitation was present in the Indian society (Moon, 1979). Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was also dissatisfied with the application of the Marxist theory in a democratic society and the inability of Marxism to deal with the non-material roots of any social problem especially the problem of caste in Indian context. The selective address of the social and economic inequity by the communist unions was criticized by Ambedkar as he believed that any philosophy or ideology shouldn't be selective in solving a social problem (Rodrigues, 2002). During textile strikes in 1928 and 1929 in Bombay he found that there was very limited mobility of the untouchables in the unions and were employed at the lowest level. In industry they were lowest paid and had least skilled jobs and as peasants the untouchables were landless labourers. The class ties across caste in the unions came in conflict with the rights of the untouchables and due to this difference Dr. B.R. Ambedkar discouraged the untouchables to take part in the strike that was called by Girni Kamgar in 1929 (Roy, 1976).

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar formed Indian Labour Party (ILP) in 1936 in order to work for the needs and rights of labours irrespective of the caste affiliation. Some of the leftist policies like the principle of state management and state ownership of industry whenever it may demand and whenever it becomes necessary for the interest of the peoples. Although, ILP was addressing the issue of economic and social inequality but it was not able to overcome with the appearance of being a caste-based party. Ambedkar argued the issue of economic inequality in terms of watan system which was a caste based economic system and the Mahars were forced to perform it by the upper caste Hindus (Zelliot, 1996).

Marxism in Buddhist Teachings: Dr. B. R. Ambedkar comparison of Buddhism and Marxism

During his visit to Kathmandu in Nepal in 1956 to attend a fourth conference of the world fellowships of Buddhist conference he demonstrated that most of the Marxist aspects were present in Buddhism. The theory of communism starts with the belief that there is exploitation in the world. The poor masses are exploited by the capitalists who own the property which is generated by the surplus production whose value is appropriated by the owner and not by the worker. The exploitation result in suffering of the poor masses and Marx provides the solution of the exploitation of poor classes by preventing the ownership of private property and the state must own all the tools of production. Land and industries should belong to the state and there should be dictatorship of the proletariat and the government should be by the exploited class and not by the exploiting class. However, according to Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, Buddha came up with his teaching in which he has explained that "There is 'Dukkha' in the world" and Dr. B.R. Ambedkar interpreted that Buddha used the word 'Dukka' in the sense of poverty. The foundation of the Dharma-chakra Parivartan sutta is based on the preposition of 'Dukka' So, according to Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, a practicing Buddhist should look for principle of communism or Marxism in the teachings of Buddha itself (Christopher and King, 1996).

Buddha has provided much better explanation about the ownership of private property as according to the rules laid by buddha for the monks. The rule forbids the monks to own private property. According to the rules laid by Buddha which are mentioned in 'Vinayapitaka' the Bhikkhu is allowed to possess only seven things which includes a razor, a lota for having water, a bowl for taking donation, three chibaras and a needle for sewing. So, according to Dr. B. R. Ambedkar ideologically Buddhist sangha and bhikkhu are better in terms of practice and ideology than communist and communism (Ahir, 1998).

Conclusion

From Marxism to Buddhism: Conversion of Ideology to conversion of faith

Ambedkar argued that the long-term goals of a Marxist revolution contradicted the ends which are advocated by the Marxist philosophy. The means to attend the end is based on the violence and the dictatorship of the proletariat. Ambedkar was of firm belief that any system based on the notion of violence and oppression would not be able to last long and thus, communist revolution in India will be doomed from the start itself. He also argued Marxism as a philosophy won't be able to deal with the caste issues or the problems that are present in the society as caste system is based on certain complex degree of rights and disability which locks all the members of society and forms the basis of their relation to each other. This scaling of rights according to the caste makes almost impossible to form a common front for the fight against the caste system. The degree of rights to inter-dine and inter-marry with another caste above or lower is not allowed which makes the system stiff and makes everyone a slave of the caste system but all the slaves are not equal in status and as they are not equal in status, they are not able to unite against a common cause of eradicating the caste system.

Ambedkar differed from the Marxist philosophy of religion being the opium of the poor and believed that religion is a very important for spiritual growth of humanity and mankind. He found refuge in Buddhism and utilised it to elevate the political consciousness of the Dalit community. Buddhism provided all the tools that were required for political and social reforms he wanted to achieve during his political career. He believed that Buddhism won't opiate the dalits and educate them about the rigidity and oppressiveness of the caste system. Buddhism provided a way for social emancipation of dalits and will provide a middle path for social and political democracy (Ahir, 1998). The teachings of Buddha should be utilised for solving the crisis present in the society rather than communism which believes in violence for producing revolution in the society whereas Buddhism believes in changing the society by changing the mind of the peoples with Ahimsa and brotherhood.

Abstract

The new woman was a feminist ideal that emerged in the late 19th century and had a profound influence on feminism in the 20th century. It was popularized by British American writer Henry James. It was first used by Sarah Grand in her article 'The Heavenly Twins' in 1893. This feminist ideal also influenced Indian feminism. The new woman is an ideal which promotes that education improves the status of women; education spreads awareness about social issues and rights for them. The status of women in Indian society was miserable. Many reformers and activists like Raja Ram Mohan Roy, Devendra Nath Tagore etc. worked for the improvement in the condition of women in Indian society. After independence, it was crucial that in Indian constitution the equal rights for women should be included. A few contemporary thinkers and politicians opposed the equal rights for women and depressed classes. The great reformist and thinker Dr. B.R. Ambedkar supported the depressed class. He was one of those persons who accelerate the process of feminism to new woman. He included different articles in constitution which promotes the rights for the women from all the sections of the society. Women along with oppressed and deprived class saw a ray of hope for development and a big change in their status. The history witnesses a big miracle for women and depressed class. Now a big section of society can have education, awareness and have rights. So Dr. B.R. Ambedkar's contribution towards new woman is remarkable.

Key Words: New woman, Feminism, Constitution, Oppressed, Deprived.

Introduction

The term 'The New Woman' is used for the first time in 1894 by an Irish writer Sarah Grand in an article to refer to independent women seeking radical change. An English writer Ouida (Maria Louisa Rame) used this term as a title of her article. It is further popularized by British-American writer Henry James to describe the growth in the number of feminist, educated women in Europe and United States. The New Woman was the term used at the end of 19th century to describe women who protest against the male domination. They rebel against the bondage of society and restriction imposed by men. Today, they are called liberated woman or feminist. Gail Finney says, "the new woman typically values self-fulfillment and independence rather than the stereotypically feminine ideal of self sacrifice; believes in legal and sexual equality; often remains single because of the difficulty of combining such equality with marriage; is more open about her sexuality than the 'old woman'; is well educated and reads a great deal; has a job; is athletic or otherwise physical vigorous and accordingly prefers comfortable clothes (sometimes male attire) to traditional female garb." Definition of the New Woman "A woman especially of the late 19th century actively resisting traditional controls and seeking to fill a complete role in the world"

The French philosopher and a novelist Simone de Beauvoir wrote a book in 1949 'The Second Sex'. It has been proved milestone in the history of feminism. Its most famous sentence "one is not born but rather becomes a woman". This accelerates the feminist thinking for next generation. With this simple sentence, she touched the core feelings of women's heart. This started the enquiry of women's existence and gender issues. The feminist theory is a complex and contradictory theory. In 1953, when its English translation 'The Second Sex' was considered notorious for its frank and sweeping account of women's oppression. When it appeared the abortion and contraception were illegal or inaccessible in most countries.

Objectives

1. To study the concept of new woman in Indian context.
2. To study the contribution of B.R. Ambedkar in improving the status of woman in India.
3. To discover the vision of B.R. Ambedkar towards woman.
4. To assess the constitutional provision for woman rights.

Research Methodology

For the purpose of the present study data has been collected from secondary sources. It is collected from various articles, books, documents, internet and various other publications.

The status of woman in Indian Society

In old times India has been called 'Aryavarta'. People believe in the rules of Vedas and Upanishads. Those holy books promoted the caste system which was called the 'varna system'. The rules of that system were so strict that no one dared to transgress those rules. According to that system the Shudras were at the bottom and Brahmins at the top. The Brahmins were the taskmaster of the society. The lower 'varnas' had to follow the rules made by the 'gods' in the society. There were some other people present in the society who were not the part of the system. They were called 'untouchables' who had to serve all the 'varnas'. The woman was considered as untouchable despite of her Varna. Her place is not recognizable even Brahman women was not treated with respect. She was mal-treated in the name of tradition and 'Dharma'. So many stories of, so called high class women were buried in history. If a woman was a widow and her struggle would be thousand times multiplied. She was tortured by the society and even more tortured by her own family: the male members as the brother-in-law even father-in-law exploited them mentally and sexually. The worst thing was that they were not allowed to raise voice in the name of family reputation. They had no legal, social and economic rights. The social reformers feel the pain of these women. The first name in these reformists was Savitribai Phule who raised voice against this evil.

Contribution of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar prepares the ground work for the empowerment of women. He knows the importance of education for women. Only education can make free the society from all the insensibilities, old traditions and discrimination. Each person can make progress with education and improve his lifestyle and live like a free human being. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was the first reformer who thought of women having legal rights. He knows that until the woman has no rights, she cannot raise her voice. He can be called the godfather of women community. Women education witness is a big and gradual- controversy. The battle of women's education and equal rights has been partially won. Different programs has been started by the government and World organization which help women to access the education, but still there are ordeals in the way of women to reach the destination, especially in the rural areas. The girls from the poor families had to do household and farming chores. They are still away from education because they have to play their roles as mother, wife and they have to work hard for family survival.

The Hindu Code Bill

To quote Far Eastern Survey “The Hindu Code Bill, which during the recent election became a controversial issue between Prime Minister Nehru and certain conservative Hindu element, still awaits passage by the Indian Parliament. The object of the Indian Parliament which has been years in preparation is to unify, codified and modernize the laws governing marriage, divorce, inheritance property rights and allied topics for Hindus, who form the great majority of the population of Indian Republic”.

The new women emerged with education, awareness and social security. She has the social, political and economic rights. It is only the painstaking efforts of B.R. Ambedkar. The Hindu Code Bill is the landmark in the history of women empowerment. B.R. Ambedkar gave ‘Sanjivani’ to the existence of women in Indian society. The presentation of Hindu Code Bill in Constituent Assembly was the historic moment in Indian history. It secures Indian women’s social, economic and political rights. It includes the rules and provisions as follows:

Marriage, adoption and succession

The Hindu code bill defines different rights to woman are divided in six parts.

Part-1 Preliminary

It applies to all the citizens of India. It includes even ‘legitimate’ and ‘illegitimate’ children. It has description of ‘full blood’ and ‘half blood’ relations.

Part-2 Chapter-1 Marriage

It prohibited the marriage of the person who have not completed the age according to the bill; already living with other person; are in blood relation; are lunatic and impotent at the time of marriage. This bill safeguards the women who will be married to persons who are living with other women and are lunatic or impotent. There are two types of marriages: civil marriage and sacramental marriage.

Chapter-2 Void and Voidable marriages

This chapter describes the void and voidable marriages those marriages are void or voidable if either party is lunatic or living with other spouse at the time of marriage; if either of the two parties is impotent or have adultery during the marriage. This chapter gives the right to a woman to be free from those burdened marriages which are imposed to them forcefully by the society.

Chapter-3 Restitution of Conjugal Rights and Avoidance of Marriages

This chapter states that any partner whose spouse has withdrawn from the society without any excuse for more than two years, can apply for conjugal restitution of conjugal rights.

Judicial Separation-This bill also provides the right of judicial separation if the petitioner has been deserted for more than two years; felt unsafe due to cruelty; spouse has been suffering from incurable disease; has unsound mind; has committed adultery during marriage. This bill gives the right to all the citizens to get freedom from clog of unhappy marriages, otherwise women were forced to live with those person who are cruel and adulterous. This Bill has the provision that if a wife has no source of income the husband has to pay for her expenses and support.

Part-3 Adoption

Chapter-1 Adoption generally adoption can be occurred with the wishes of both the parties. The person adopting has the capacity to bring up the child, proper record of adoption shall be maintained by the parties and the registrar.

Part-4 Minority and Guardianship includes the provision for guardianship of 'Minors' who have not completed the age of eighteen.

Part-5 Joint Family Property- This part includes the family property it shall include both 'movable' and 'immovable' property all the family member shall share it equally.

Part-6 Women's Property

This part describes the women's property which was acquired by a woman at the time of marriage as a gift and earned by her efforts. It will be her 'absolute' property. It shall include both 'movable' and 'immovable' property. This will protect women financially whereas 'Manusmriti' provides woman no right to property. Even 'Manusmriti' said that any property gifted to a woman or earn by a woman shall be family head's property. She could not use this property according to her wishes. Part-7 succession- In this part 'heir' is defined as 'male' or 'female'; it means discrimination made on the basis of gender is abolished. A female can be heir to the property of the father. The property shall be divided between the window and the son equally. This provides economic rights to women so that a widow woman shall not be tortured by the society as it happened in old times.

Constitutional Provision for Social Justice

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar saw the discrimination and inequality on the name of caste religion and gender in Indian society. To eradicate these injustices, he included provisions in the Constitution of India which directly introduce social justice. 'Fundamental Rights' and 'Directive Principles of States' in the constitution serves to provide social justice in India. 'Special Provisions Relating to Certain Classes' and Schedule 7, 11 and 12 has provisions which prompt social justice in India. Here are some provisions relating to social justice:

C. Educational, Economic and Public Employment-Related Safeguard

Article 14 guarantees that the State shall not deny equality before law and equal protection of laws within the territory of India.

Article 15 (2) Prohibits discrimination against any citizen on the ground only of religion, race, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them, be subject to any disability, liability, restriction or condition with regard to

(a) Access to Shops, Public Restaurants, Hotels and Places of Public Entertainment; or

(b) The use of Wells, Tanks, Bathing Ghats, Roads and Places of public resort maintained wholly or partly out of the state funds or dedicated to the use of general public.

Article 16 Equality of opportunity in matters of public employment

Article 46 Promotion of educational and economic interests of scheduled castes, scheduled tribes and other weaker sections.

Article 335 Claims of scheduled castes and scheduled tribes to services and posts.

3. Provisions Relating to Women

Article 39a the states shall direct its policy towards securing that the citizens, men and women equally, have the right to an adequate means of livelihood.

Article 39d. The states shall direct its policy towards securing that there is equal pay for equal work for both men and women.

Article 42 Provisions for just and human conditions of work and maternity relief.

Final remarks

The new woman or the empowered woman in India is the result of the painstaking efforts of B.R. Ambedkar. In pre-independent India a few women are educated, so they have negligible contribution in social activities. The condition in rural area is most miserable. The women in rural areas are unaware of the outside world. Education is the weapon with which a woman can change the face of the society. With education, they have more access to information and technology. It is true that with the spread of education the status of woman is, to some extent changed but still the goal is far away. The constitution provides equality for all but it is up to the society how much it is implemented and in what shape. In spite of efforts made till now women are still fighting issues such as rape, dowry, sexual harassment and poverty etc. The constitution is the 'Panacea' for the downtrodden. B. R. Ambedkar 'the Messiah' of downtrodden made every possible effort to give relief to the underprivileged classes.

Abstract:

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar popularly known as Babasaheb, is the father of Indian Constitution. Though he was born in an untouchable family, with his untiring search for knowledge his incredible industry and with his unflinching aims he could have achieved greatness. By dint of his relentless pursuit of purpose with courage of conviction and indomitable will and ultimately became a scholar in the field of Economics, History, Sociology, Law, Anthropology, Philosophy and Politics. More than said above, he was a great humanitarian, Social democratic revolutionary and Statesman. And he is a hope of down trodden, marginalized and voiceless. Dr. Ambedkar's greater and greatest contribution to our nation is his production of Constitution so long as the Constitution survives, the name of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar remains immortal.¹ Dr. Ambedkar as a great scholar had knowledge and command on Indian history, understood the social structure of Indian society, the influence and domination of Hindu religion on the society, life of destitute and depressed, he utilized the opportunity which came to him, in the name of Chairman, Drafting Committee finally he drafted the Indian constitution as a living document. This present paper makes an attempt to analyse how Dr. Ambedkar produced a great constitution to India, its nature, structure, its flexibility and how the constitution plays an important role in development of Indian nation.

Introduction:

India got Independence on 15th August, 1947 and the Constituent Assembly announced the name of the Dr. B.R. Ambedkar as Chairman of the Drafting Committee with other 6 names as members of the committee. The other members were N. Gopala Swamy Ayyangar, Alladi Krishna Swamy Ayyar, Saiyed Md. Sadullah, K.M. Munshi, B.L. Mitter and D.P. Khaithan. Later on Madhava Rao was appointed in place of B.L. Mitter and T.T. Krishnamachari was appointed after the death of D.P. Khaithan. Infact, Dr. Ambedkar entered into the Constituent Assembly with the hope of safe guarding the rights of the down trodden, But, he was immediately called upon to play a major role in framing of the constitution for India. Because that much of knowledge, wisdom on the constitutional matters. Dr. Ambedkar explained his reaction to his selection to the constituent assembly as²....

"I came into the Constituent Assembly with no greater aspiration than to safe guard, the interests of the Scheduled Castes. I had not the remotest idea that I would be called upon to undertake more responsible function; I was therefore, surprised when the Assembly elected me to the drafting committee. I was more than surprised when the drafting committee elected me to be its chairman."

It is understood that the constitution is the basic law for the governance of a country. Dr. Ambedkar considers it as a mechanism for the purpose of working various organs of the government. It defines various organs of the Government, specifies their respective functions and demarcates the fields of their operation. It is a vehicle of the nation's progress reflecting best in the past traditions of the country, to cope up with respond to the needs of the present and possess enough resilience to the needs of the future. At the same time it must be a living organ for the generations to come. ³

Dr. Ambedkar and the drafting committee worked 141 days and then the draft constitution was done by Dr. Ambedkar, Sri Krishna Swamy Iyer with the assistance of Dr. Justice B.N. Ray the Constitutional Advisor. On February 21, 1948, the Draft of Constitution was presented to Dr. Rajendra Prasad, the President of Constituent Assembly. Then the Draft of Constitution contains 315 articles 8 schedules. ⁴

1. To study the main provisions of Indian Constitution.
2. To understand Dr. Ambedkar's efforts for giving various rights to the citizens:
3. To study the Dr Ambedkar's contribution regarding the Democracy..

Methodology:

This study is based on secondary data. The secondary data has used to write this paper. The secondary data from various journal articles, books, news paper articles and reference books.

Fundamental Rights and Directive Principles of State Policy:

Dr. Ambedkar as a great scholar he studied all the important constitution of the world countries and understood their nature and structure. The most important thing in the constitution of India is the dignity of man as a human being and creation of a casteless, classless, homogeneous society. By introducing the chapter on Fundamental Rights, he materialized his aim and objective of safe guarding the interests of the downtrodden. For this, he derived inspiration from the American Constitution. Dr. Ambedkar did not accept the concept of Fundamental Rights in absolute terms and authorized parliament to put reasonable restrictions on these rights in the public interest.

Ambedkar realized that the heart of the constitution is the fundamental rights, given to every citizen. By incorporating the fundamental rights in the constitution, the safeguard is given to every citizen to get liberty, equality and justice. The fundamental rights are guarantee to (1) the basic human rights (2), abolition of disabilities, (3) guaranteed rights to minorities including women and prevention of exploitation of them. ⁵

Justice K. Ramaswamy, states that with the support of Jawahar Lal Nehru, Dr. Ambedkar incorporated the Directive Principles of state policy into the constitution in the part IV, Dr. Ambedkar thought that the political democracy cannot last long unless the secularism and economic democracy provided to the people. Implementation of the directive. Principles will transform the Indian society into an egalitarian and vibrant social order. The planned economy should be the base. Therefore, the relevant article of the constitution provides right to economic justice. Today our union Government and state governments implementing these Directive principles in the name of welfare state. These Directive Principles were declared as non-judicial in the past, Fundamental rights were only justifiable, but years passed over the attitude of the judiciary to interpretation of courts got change, now it is part of interpretation process that "directive principles and fundamental rights constitute conscience of the constitution and are two wheels of the chariot; without the one the other cannot run.

It is suffice to state as Dr. Babasaheb has stated our constitution as a piece of mechanism lays down what is called parliamentary democracy.”⁶

Parliamentary System of Government:

Indian society is a multi-diversified society. It is stated that the graded inequality i.e. the caste system (High castes and lower castes) prevails, in this society, the well established and religious dominated classes, economically stable people do not have sympathy or human attitude towards down-trodden and marginalized, that is why Dr. Ambedkar argued and got acceptance for the parliamentary system of Govt. Dr. Ambedkar argues that⁷:

The parliamentary system differs from a non parliamentary system in as much as the former is more responsible than the latter, but they also differ as to the time and agency of assessment of their responsibility draft constitution in the recommending the parliamentary system of executive has preferred more responsible to more stability.

The draft committee under the stewardship of Ambedkar recommended after careful consideration the parliamentary system of government with its justifications. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar all along defended the parliamentary system with a removable executive. Ambedkar argued that such a system with a removable executives provided greater degree of responsibility which was need of the country.⁸

In India constitution, the head of the state i.e. the president is elected by the members of the parliament and the legislatures of the states. So, this is the indirect election. Under the presidential system of America, the President is the Chief Head of the executive. The entire administration is vested in him. Under the draft constitution the president occupies the same position as the king under the English Constitution. He is the head of the state but not the executive. He represents the nation but not rule the nation. He is the symbol of the nation. His place in the administration is that of a ceremonial device or a seal by which the nation's decisions are made and known”⁹ Dr. Ambedkar explains why the state legislatures are made in the election of the President, because he representing the whole nation, and entire administration is vested in his name, in this regard Dr. Ambedkar gives explanation that “The president is the Head of the state and his power extends both to the administration by the centre as well as to the states. Consequently it is necessary that in his election, not only members of parliament should play their part but the members of the state legislatures should also have a voice.

Council of Ministers and Collective Responsibility:

The President is indirectly elected. He only represents that state but not acts the real head of the Government. Ours is the parliamentary Government in which the executive is the responsible to the legislature. Under the parliamentary system of Government the heads of the Government and the state are different so, the real power is vested in the hands of the Prime Minister. The head of the state, this connection, Dr. Ambedkar said¹⁰;

Supposing you have no Prime Minister; what would really happen? What would happen is this that every minister will be subject to the control or influence of the President. It would be perfectly possible for the President who is no ad idem with a particular cabinet to deal with each minister separately, singly, influence them and thereby cause disruption in the cabinet. Such a thing is not possible to imagine. Before collective responsibility was introduced in the British Parliament you remember how the English king used to disrupt the British cabinet as well as the parliament. That sort of thing was put to a stop by collective responsibility. As I said, collective responsibility can be archived only through the instrumentality of Prime Minister. Therefore, the Prime Minister is really the key one of the arch of the cabinet and unless and until we CREATE that office and endow that office with statutory authority to nominate and dismiss ministers, there can be no collective responsibility”.

Religion and Human beings:

Justice, K. Ramaswamy explains that in a democracy ruled by majority the minority would be at a disadvantage. Articles 25 to 30 provide the freedom of religion and freedom to the minorities to establish and maintain their institutions for religious and charitable purposes, to manage their religious affairs and to administer their properties in accordance with law. Constitution also protects their cultural or linguistic rights and to establish and administer educational institutions. Predominating objectives in this regard is that while assuring the minorities of their rights to establish and administer the religious institutions, to preserve their minority script or culture, there is dichotomy between the religious part and the secular part. The religious part should be confined only to the individual concerned and it should not have any effect on or mixed with the governance of the country. Similarly the secular part should be taken charge of solely by the state and the public money should be spent only for secular purpose and not for any religious purpose though religion as such has not been prohibited under the constitution.”¹¹

Independent Judiciary for integrity of India:

K.C. Daiya explains an independent judiciary is a cornerstone of a Federal Constitution maintaining the delicate scheme of distribution of powers between the centre and the units and preserving certain rights of the people guaranteed under the constitution. It is necessary to ensure proper safeguards in order to ensure the functioning of an absolute independent federal judiciary, neither swayed by the Government at the centre nor in the units, not joining in league with either Central or State Government against the fundamental liberties of the citizens. This was the reason that the constituent Assembly members had gone to great length to keep the court and the judicial system pure and independent.¹²

Reservations:

In our society, the downtrodden and marginalized people were not allowed to get education and other basic human amenities. So, Dr. Ambedkar knew that unless reservations in jobs and legislature was given to Dalits they would never be in a position to be equal partners in the administration of the country and they will remain oppressed slaves for ever. Dr. Ambedkar made social justice a founding faith a built into it humanist provisions to lift the low level of lowly Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes to make democracy viable on an equal footing.¹³ So Articles 14,015,016, and 17 have been incorporated in the Constitution.

Union of States and Integrity:

Indian Constitution has been drafted on the principles of Federal and Unitary forms of governments. These two kinds of Governments and Characteristics are very essential in our constitution. Though Indian constitution is a federal polity that we have in the constitution, nowhere it is referred to as such. Article I of the constitution of India calls India as a “ Union of States” and the federal character of the polity is , therefore, implied though not explicitly written out. Ambedkar had his own explanation and justification to call our constitution as “Union of States” and not federation. He pointed out “ the federation is a union because it is indestructible. Though the country and the people may be divided into different states for convenience of administration, the country is an integral whole. Its people a single people living under a single imperium derived from single source¹⁴”.

Single Citizenship for Integration of India:

Indian society is multi-diversified one. If we allow our citizens to have two citizenships, as citizen of India and citizen of respected state, our integrity certainly get into disunity. So, Dr. Ambedkar defended for the single citizenship for India as¹⁵:...

Each state (in U.S.A.) hascertain rights in its own domain there are number of rights that a state can grant to its own citizens or residents that it may and does legally deny to non-residents or grant to non-residents on more difficult terms.....There is only one citizenship for the whole of India..It is Indian citizenship....Every Indian has the same rights of citizenship no matters in what state he resides.

Linguistic Provinces:

India is a country to have above 1651 languages to be spoken by its citizens. At the same linguistic differences are also arisen in its history. So, Dr. Ambedkar accepted for formation of states on the base of regional development but he did not accept to form states on the declaration of regional language as its official language.

Amendment Procedure:

Indian Constitution is a flexible constitution to be amended by the conditions prevails in the country and in constitution three kinds of amendment procedures have been arranged, so for the granted situations and necessity the constitution could be easily amended for the progress of our society.

Article 17 to Abolish Untouchability:

The practice of untouchability in India is an inhuman practice by somebody against the majority people. Dr. Ambedkar with his commitment and humanitarian and emancipation approach he abolished the practice of untouchability in India by incorporating the Article 17 in the constitution.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, the Father of Indian Constitution:

A single statement is enough to declare that that Dr. B. R. Ambedkar is the father of our constitution, as T.T. Krishnamachari, the member of the Drafting Committee announced that as “the House is perhaps aware that of the seven members nominated by you, one had resigned from the House, and was not replaced, one died and was not replaced. One of the members was away in America and his place was not filled up and another person was engaged in state affairs and there was void to that extent. One or two people were away from Delhi and perhaps for reasons of health did not attend. So it happened ultimately that the burden of drafting the constitution fell on Dr. Ambedkar and I have no doubt that we are grateful to him for having achieved this task in a manner which is undoubtedly commendable¹⁶.”

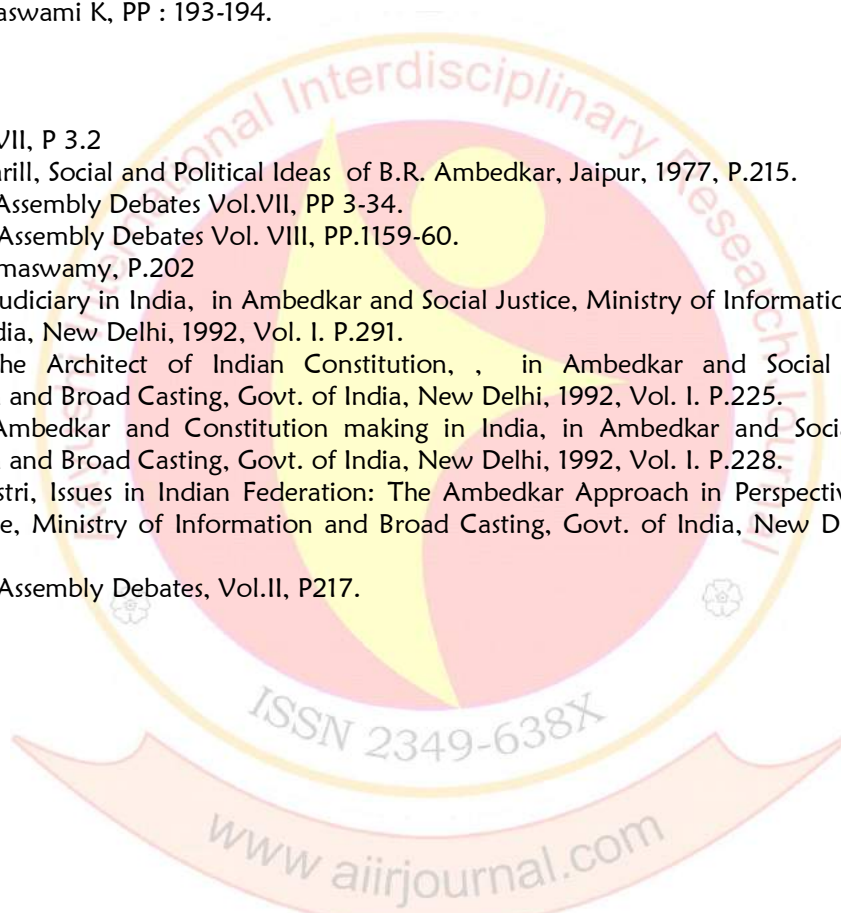

Conclusion:

Today, we are the Indians proud of our Constitution and our Democracy. This credit goes to the Dr. B.R. Ambedkar as he was architect of our Constitution to provide us the beautiful life based on the equality, liberty and brotherhood. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar expressed his views that “Indian Democracy is workable, it is flexible, and it is strong enough to hold the country together both in peace time and in war time.” No one can doubt the workability and strongness of Indian democracy as prescribed by Dr. Ambedkar. However, the journey of Indian democracy has not been smooth and easy and it has, time and again, faced many challenges. Even in 21st Century, larger part of Indian population has not enjoyed the fruits of democracy. They do not have access to basic amenities like education, health services, employment, and proper commutation of rights. These are still unresolved challenges before Indian democracy. Proper implementation and observance of rule of law and constitutional principles is the only solution to address this challenge.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar Contribution Towards Women Equality

Assistant Professor, Department of Economics,
S. K. College of Arts, Commerce and Science, Talikoti - 586214. District - Vijayapur, Karnataka.

India's foremost leader, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, had a profound influence on the social life of post-independence India and was keen on humanizing Hindu law. He worked immensely for development of India as economist, labour leader and social scientist. Ambedkar's universe as the father of the Constitution laid the foundation of a secular idea and democratic system. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has made a tremendous contribution to the equality of women.

As well as the persecution of women around the world, women of all religions and societies are exploited as a whole; women are second-class citizens, disadvantaged, obscure and gender-related issues. These have been running smoothly for centuries.

Women have been living as dependent since ancient times. Since the creation of Manu Mahashayana, the women life has been reduced to four walls, to the very least. Thus, the male plays a major role in every stage of the women life.

This was so intense that the woman had to satisfy herself as much as it is. It is thought that women born and created to satisfy or look after man. He should always be able to earn love and respect from the man who makes his life a happy one. Unmarried women treated with bad vision in society. A foreign feminist thinker who stood firm in the 18th century against such imperfections, Wollstonecraft argues that a person's personal growth rests on education. Thus, eliminating inferiority, enhancing their inner strength and gaining respect for love.

The 19th century was a period of conflict in this history, a transitional period for female life. Along with the National Resurrectionist Movement, social reformers of indigenous orthodox religions have come to life as a philosophical illusion of education, child marriage and marriage. Thus, Rajarama Mohanaraya, the founder of the Brahma samaj, banned 'Sati-practice' and supported women equality and the continued pro-feminist movement along with the national revival. While Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagara promoted widow marriage, Jothiba Phule initiated women education with the establishment of girls' schools.

Although the work of social reformers was held to give women equal status as a man, Babasaheb Ambedkar's work on constitutional liberty in India upheld female independence. In Indian constitution, article 14th declares that everyone is equal before the law. The law does not discriminate on the basis of civilized caste, color creed, sex, and place of birth.

Article 15 of the Constitution of India:

Government banned discrimination against any citizen on the basis of caste, creed, caste, tribe and gender and origin. Separate reservation of provisions in Articles 3 and 4 of the same Act for the benefit of women and children in school, bus, train and employment.

Article 16 of the Constitution of India:

Government prohibited sexism and sexual exploitation and gave equal opportunities to all in the employment opportunities of any government, prompting her to pursue a self-sustaining life using the opportunities she had so far afforded.

Article 23 of the Constitution of India:

Exploitation of rights and exploitation of citizens is prohibited by the sale of children and women, as well as the prohibition on the use of force against them. This is worst to observe that Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's What is not demanded through constitution is still in force today. Still women are facing Social exploitation and injustice in society.

Article 39 of the Constitution of India:

According to the law 39(A), "men and women are equal achievements for the maintenance of equal life."

According to the 39(D) law, men and women have equal pay for work. The legislature demanded equal pay for a woman who knew she could do the job as a male but excludes government departments, earning a lower female salary than a male. Still today women facing wage discrimination in agricultural, industry and service sector even in privatization also.

Article 42 of the Constitution of India:

It is the duty of the government to provide the workers with the necessary facilities and provide maternity relief to the Indians.

Dr. Baba Saheb Ambedkar gave constitutional rights to Indian citizens by correcting the mistakes that have historically been so far. Ambedkar allowed equal rights of women, rights, equality, and liberty against persecution, religious freedom, cultural and educational rights.

Hindu Code Bill :1951

Ambedkar's Hindu Code Bill, the most important act in feminism. Ambedkar, the first law minister in the Nehru Cabinet of Independent India, presented the Hindu Code Bill in Parliament on February 2.

Members of Congress, the ruling party in the Lok Sabha, opposed. Ambedkar was shocked when his ambitious act fell before his very eyes. Similarly, resigning as minister to endure that pain did not leave the legal struggle alone.

Hindu Marriage Act 1954:

Ambedkar, the farsighted, knew that caste destruction was not possible as long as intermarriage did not take place. In those days when marriage was common for a woman, inter-caste marriages were more likely to perish than caste-based marriages. Similarly, young men and women of 18 years, regardless of caste and creed, were given opportunities to get married.

Hindu Marriage Act: There is a declaration that the bridegroom should have 21 years and the bride to be 18 years. The Act gives women the right to oppose polygamy and to get divorced.

1. If the husband is a convert.
2. If the husband is an adulterer.
3. If the husband is married to someone else or the husband has been psychotic for more than 3 years.
4. If her husband is suffering from serious disease

5. If he has not lived with his wife for more than three years, he has declared that any of these elements can be divorced and remarried, thereby giving the woman the freedom to live independently and not be limited to the oppressed of society. This law is a testament to the well-being of women.

Hindu Succession Act 1956:

The Act also gives girls the right to enjoy the property of their father, the right to enjoy the same property as brothers. But in the past, the woman was insecure without financial independence. Women deprived of the right of property at Manu's command. According to Babasaheb Ambedkar's opinion, Manu had left wife as a slave in the matter of property. (Babasaheb Ambedkar's writings and speeches. P. 618) Ambedkar laid the groundwork for the life of women by obtaining the right to alimony, the right to the father's property, the right of alimony by the husband.

Conclusion:

Unmarried Bride, Divorced women and Widow also received the right to adopt. Thinking about taking it a step further, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's right to alimony to a divorced woman by her husband. This in turn inspired the woman to be independent and self-sufficient and to live up to her equal status.

It is Dr. Baba Saheb Ambedkar's fame that gave women the right to equal status in society and gave women the rights to constitutional statutes before fighting for a self-sufficient life.

Ambedkar's convinced that Shudra and Shudra are the same as the two words for the Bride and Shudra are the two faces of the same coin. This is the cause of female equality and They believed that independence should be granted only by statutory law and created pro-women statutes and provided legal justice. Perhaps Babasaheb Ambedkar was well known for his exploits because he was from an exploited area. Therefore, the thinking of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, the country's first lawyer, who fought for casteism, untouchability and female exploitation, is a model for the whole world.

Ambedkar contributed immensely towards Social justice and Women equality through legislate. Due to his contribution women are getting opportunity to work in different field like education, agricultural, industrial and service and many others fields. It increases women empowerment and women status in the society. We may call Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar as Modern Manu by considering his contribution for the social justice and women equality.

Abstract:

What are we having this liberty for? We are having this liberty to reform our social system, which is full of inequality, discrimination and other things, which conflict with our fundamental rights.”

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was the one among the influential thinkers in India. He was a great leader and thinker of women rights. He was a fighter for the dignity of man and deprived people. He is one of the first feminist leader and women's rights advocate in the country. His childhood journey was oppression and unbearable agony. His life was a struggle of a champion of human rights. His Contribution towards Women education, Women freedom in Society, critique of caste and Manusmriti, equal fundamental rights in constitution. Women owes him for enshrining equality as a fundamental right. He is determined fighter and a deep scholar has made significant efforts to lead the society on the path of liberty, equality and fraternity. His aim was to build up the society with social justice. For this he started work for the upliftment of women and their rights. His ambition was that women to realize the equality among genders. He ensured the women that they were also protected under labour laws and laid a foundation against the casteism in nature. This paper intends and tries to narrate the journey of Ambedkar to build up the society with social justice and woman emancipation.

Introduction:

Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar was a prolific student earning doctorate in Economics from Columbia University and University of London and Ambedkar became a big scholar for his research in Law, Economics and Political science. He was born on 14th April, 1891 from the town of Ambedewe in Ratnagiri district of Maharashtra. He was born in Dalit caste which created many difficulties in Ambedkar's education. He faced many obstacles to attend school due socio-economic discrimination made by the society. With the hard work he attained doctorate and also became a barrister. While returning to India he dedicated himself to the task of upliftment of the untouchable community.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a great thinker and fighter too. A significant effort made by him to bring the path of liberty made the Indian society and women to move out the barriers from their life. He was a pioneer in social justice. He incorporated many factors issues related to social justice in Indian constitution through various articles for the Hindu and other sections of society especially for backward communities. He established many organisations to mobilize his followers. He was best example and inspiration for many people. He spent his life for the betterment of society, women and other privileged society. He worked to root out the untouchability, evil practices like prostitutions, child marriages and devdasi system from the society for this he builds up awareness among the illiterate, women and poor and ignited them to fight against the unjust and social practices in the Hindu society. He was a great reformer who brought new laws and rights to women and backward classes. He was considered as father of Indian constitution, a pioneer, freedom fighter, philosopher, economist and so on.....

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has always maintained that women were the gateways of the caste system and the caste system lay down a structure for the subordination of women and it had to be uprooted. He saw castes' exclusionary violence and subjugation of women inherent to the very process that lead to caste formation. Ambedkar in his other works details the gendered violence that women face with in Hindu Smritis and Vedic texts. In the Manusmriti for example, Manu set the ideal for women to worship her husband despite all his flaws. He says "Manu can hardly be said to be more tender to women than he was to the Shudra." He worked out for women to realize the ambition of equality amongst genders. He advocated for the rights of sex workers and spoke out against the casteist nature that was the foundation of sex-work. He worked to ensure that women were also protected under labour laws. He was instrumental in reducing the number of working hours and improving the working conditions. In 1928, as a member of the Legislative Council of Bombay, he supported a Bill granting paid maternity leave for women working in factories. He was of the view that if the employer was getting benefits off of women's labour, they should also be supporting women, partly, when they are on their maternity leave. The other half he believed should be paid by the government as it was in the interest of the nation. Ambedkar also believed that women have the right over their own body. He said that conception was a choice that women should make. He argued for reproductive rights for women, recommended that birth control facilities be made available to them, and was a strong advocate of women's reproductive freedom.

Dr B. R. Ambedkar's role is significant in shaping the social, political and civic contours of India and fostering the advancement of the society in general and women in particular. His personal sufferings as a Dalit and his exposure to Western ideas and rational thinking built in him the confidence to challenge the orthodox Hindu social order and reconstruct the society along the ideas of equality, liberty, fraternity and respect for the dignity of all including the womenfolk.

Women Status In Early Periods:

Women used to enjoy freedom, autonomy and rights in Indian society. Women were considered important in the pre-Vedic period when societies were found to be matriarchal. With the advent of the Aryan or Vedic culture, the matriarchal society got replaced by patriarchal society. However, women still enjoyed autonomy and variegated rights and had access to all kinds of learning. They had significant roles to play in religious ceremonies and in choosing their life partners. They could study the Vedas . Widow remarriage was also permissible. However, the position of women deteriorated in the later Vedic period because of gender differentiation. Socio economically, women were cornered and deprived of basic human rights. They were devoid of autonomy and property rights. The deterioration in their position which started in the later stage of the Vedic period got aggravated by the imposition of stringent rules on them by our lawgiver Manu. Manu, in his book Manusmriti, 'codified a woman has no right to acquire property . Rules like serving husbands faithfully even, if he is devoid of any good qualities ; a girl, a young woman or even an old woman should not do anything independently, even in her own house . A widow should be long suffering until death, self-restrained and chaste . She should obey her husband while he is alive and not violate her vow to him when he is dead. Artha Sastra stated that the principle aim of woman is to get married and bear children. Women were deprived from all the equalities.

Under the influence of Manusmriti , women had to face various deprivations in matters of acquiring property, education and studying religious scriptures. The notion that women should not be given freedom and be made subservient to male domination got deep-rooted. The Muslim invasion of our country and malpractices such as purdah system, polygamy and Talak further worsened the situation. British India gave new hope for the women , the educated and enlightened social reformers attempted to purify the Indian society from the social evils. Many reformers worked out to put an end to sati system and widow remarriage. Jyotiba Phule dedicated his entire life to educate women.

When Ambedkar considers it a crime to keep female subordinated to male. Women comprising half of the world's population need to be strengthened if we dream of a developed world committed to human rights. According to Ambedkar, the main factor that contributed to the emergence of caste was the rising differences within the groups. Castes had been enclosed classes that control women's sexuality through endogamy. Ambedkar believed that political democracy can only be successful if there is social democracy which ensures a way of life build on equality, liberty and fraternity. As a positive step towards this achievement, he felt the urgent need to ensure women's rights and elevate their status and position.

Ambedkar And Justice To Women:

Through his literary contributions, he raised his voice against that social order which taught submission to women and forced her to remain subservient to male domination and adhere to a typical feminine behaviour. His goal was to make a society based on social justice. To secure this goal, Ambedkar has given equal status to women on par with men by providing many provisions in the Indian constitution. To him, sexual discrimination should be root out from the society and everybody should get equal opportunity in the society. The Preamble of Indian constitution guarantees social and economic justice to women and that is because of Ambedkar contribution. In the preamble it is mentioned: i) social, economic and political justice, ii) freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship, iii) equality of status and opportunity and iv) fraternity assuring dignity of the individual and National unity to all the citizens of India without any discrimination of caste, creed and sex.

Constitutional Rights For Women:

In Indian Constitution, the Articles exist that help the women of Indian society to improve their position and to compete with their male counterparts. For example Article 14 – All are equal in the eyes of law and equally protected by the law. It means equal rights and opportunities in political, economic and social spheres. Article 15 prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex. Article 15(3) enables positive discrimination in favour of women. Article 16 mentions there shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office without any discrimination on the basis of religion, caste, creed and sex. Article 24 prohibits the employment of children below the age of 14 years in factories, mines or in any other hazardous employment. Article 39 and 39(d) state Equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work. As per article 41 the state shall guarantee within its economic limits to all the citizens, the right to work, to education and public assistance in certain cases. Article 42 the state makes provision for Human conditions of work and maternity relief. Under article 44, the state provides a uniform Civil Code to all the citizens throughout the territory of India. Article 46 – The state to promote with special care, the educational and economic interests of weaker section of people and to protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation. Article 47 – The state to raise the level of nutrition and standard of living of its people and the improvement of public health and so on. Article 51 (A) (C) – Fundamental duties to renounce practices, derogatory to the dignity of women. Article 243D , 243T & 243R provides for allocation of seats in the Panchayati Raj System.

The Hindu Code Bill:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar not only ascertain constitutional guarantees to women but also introduced and got passed four Acts which strengthened the position of women in the society. These were incorporated in the Hindu Code Bill. These are: i) The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. ii) The Hindu Succession Act, 1956. iii) The Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956. iv) The Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956. These provisions brought a new life to women society. Ambedkar was a great thinker of women rights and emancipation. All these provisions had enshrined the women's life and know women are much forward than earlier.

Conclusion:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a fighter for women emancipation. He fought against all kinds of discrimination against women throughout his whole life. But still discrimination against women in Indian society is overlooked. So it is our duty to fulfill the dreams of Ambedkar for a better life world of women. It may also be mentioned here that the term „Social Justice“ will not be exercised properly if the people of India should not change their attitudes specially towards women, SCs, STs and other weaker section of the society. In the era of globalisation many MNCs are searching for merit for the smooth running of the functions of their companies. In that context, to prevail social justice in the society, the companies should work within the constitutional framework and the concerned state government or central government should make rules, regulation for the engagement and involvement of people from different categories so as to ensure social justice. So that society would be based on equality and equal opportunity. In this way the dreams of Ambedkar would be fulfilled. It is also to be narrated here that, at present the Indian women have progressed a lot in various parts of their life although they are still suffering from various social evils like dowry, eve teasing, rape etc. It is a fact that in the glorious development of Indian society, the Indian women have march forward to the developmental process and somewhere treated equally with their male counterparts but it is yet to be realized by the people of India that women should have given the equal rights and opportunities along with men to establish a shining India where women enjoy freedom and equality. Finally being a Women a big salute to Dr B.R. Ambedkar.....

The Ambedkarite Impact on Literature

Introduction:

All nations world-over are distinguished on the basis of their unique social reality. Whereas the social distinctiveness of the other nations appears to be single-tiered, in a polysemic nation like India social reality appears to be multi-tiered. India is a nation having diversified cultures that exist together. The conflict between cultures seems to have interweaved into the Indian culture. The social distinctness in India is not only extrinsic but also intrinsic. In the rest of the world, there are forms of social reality are manifold. They relate to the society, race, gender and religion but in a unique nation like India, which is almost a subcontinent, its social reality rests on caste alone.

Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, popularly known as Babasaheb Ambedkar, was a renowned politician, an eminent jurist and a social reformer. He dedicated his life towards the eradication of social evils such as untouchability and caste distinction. He had a genius for understanding the inner meaning of the Dharma Shastras and hence challenged it. According to his view, Manu Smriti the Book of Hindu law had been the source of the caste system and discrimination against Dalits in India. He vociferously voiced his views by publicly burning copies of Manu Smriti at a Satyagraha held at Mahad, Maharashtra on the 25th of December, 1927. It was Dr. Ambedkar's slogan: "Educate, Organize and Agitate" – which had a sweeping impact on Dalit communities He was thus a humanitarian and a messiah for the Dalits.

Dr. Ambedkar is and shall always remain the incessant source of inspiration for literature, more so for Dalit literature. Being a revolutionary, he fought for the rights of the marginalized sections of the Indian society. He started expressing his views through his writings. He stood as a role model for all those writers whose voices were unheard. The Dalit writers gained realization that the medium of literature alone could make their voices heard. This gave rise to a horde of writers who represented the pains and sufferings of the underprivileged sections of the society. Most of these writers had themselves been the victims of the class-driven society.

In the present article the researcher has tried to study the impact of Dr. Ambedkar's philosophy, which has been called "The Ambedkarite effect" in select literary works. Some works have been written in English and the others are English translations of the Source languages. The researcher has taken up seven novels which include Bama's Karukku, Perumal Murugan's, Seasons of the Palm, Om Prakash Valmiki's Joothan, Mulk Raj Anand's Untouchable, Arundhati Roy's The God of Small Things, Rohinton Mistry's A Fine Balance and Joseph Macwan's The Stepchild.

Bama's Karukku

Karukku, a Tamil word meaning a palmyra leaf having serrated edges, is a 1992 award-winning autobiography in Tamil by a Christian Dalit woman, translated into English by Lakshmi Holmstrom. Bama details not only her experiences of prejudice in her village but also within the Christian denomination to which she belongs. It is a good reminder that caste is not just a Hindu problem. On its publication, the novel quickly became famous for its earthy language. The book has a universal appeal since it is not only the story of a single Dalit woman but of the Dalit community in general. In order to avoid the scourge of social ostracism, Bama converted to Catholicism. But even this conversion could not do much in her life. She still had to struggle in churches, schools, and society. To work collectively for survival is the requirement for Dalit's existence, so Dalit women also work either as laborers or as sweepers with their family. As Ambedkar once said, "Caste is not just a division of labor, it is a division of laborers." Bama's autobiography exemplifies this statement by describing the servitude of the Dalits like her to the upper sections of the society. While doing their allotted jobs, they had to live an inhuman life.. They frequently become victims of injustice. A critic evaluates this work thus:

"A Dalit woman suffers a double curse, curse of being a woman, curse of being a Dalit in her own house, a woman is like an ox tied to the yoke. In this patriarchal high caste society life of the woman is a curse"

Perumal Murugan's Seasons of the Palm

Seasons of the Palm is the translated version of Koola Madari, the Tamil Novel. It was shortlisted for the Kiriyaama Prize in 2005. The translation by V. Geetha is on point. She doesn't let anything be left out from the book in the process. While translating, she has retained some of the Tamil terms and her effort adds to the charm of the book. The novel Seasons of the Palm is a Tamil novel which had been shortlisted for the Kiriyaama Prize. It presents the life of five characters, all belonging to a different age group. They have been quite uniquely named Shorty, Stumpleg, Belly, Tall fellow and Stone deaf. Their names have been derived from the abuses hurled against them by the members of the upper caste. Shorty, the protagonist, a member of the goat-herding community, lives with his sheep like a family, away from his own family, as he calls/recalls the sheep with the names and their personalities, which he has given to them. All of them work as shepherds. In addition, the primary work of Tall fellow is to clean the shit of his old master whose family doesn't take care for him. Stone deaf carries the baby of a high society women (an unheard thing for an untouchable to do) around as she couldn't take care of her because of her health. The novel sometimes brings out the child in these characters, they run around the fields, climb trees and catch fish. But then they eventually have to return to their life of drudgery.

Om Prakash Valmiki's Joothan

Joothan literally means scraps of food left on a plate. It is related to the Hindi word Jootha which means polluted. Joothan: An Untouchable's Life is the famous autobiography of Omprakash Valmiki, a great poet and short story writer in Hindi Dalit Literature. In 1993, it was originally published as an essay Ek Dalit ki Atmakatha in a book entitled 'Harijan se Dalit'. It was translated into English by Arun Prabha Mukherjee, Professor of English, York University, Toronto. Omprakash Valmiki's family was in a colony of the village where the untouchables lived. Chuhra, Chamar and Jhinwar are the caste names of the untouchables. Tyagi and Taga are the upper caste people of both Hindus and Muslims. Joothan encapsulates the pain of poverty, humiliation, and the atrocities on Valmiki, from the Chuhra (Sweeper) community by the upper caste Taga. The novel documents the long-silenced and long-denied sufferings of the Dalits, It is a major contribution to the archives of Dalit history and a manifesto for the revolutionary transformation of society and human consciousness. Abha Mukherjee critiques the novel thus:

“It (the novel) was speaking of my corner of India, in my first language, Hindi, in a way that no other text had ever spoken to me.” (Mukherjee: iii)

Mulk Raj Anand’s Untouchable

The novel Untouchable, published in 1935, is a widely taught classic by an important Indian writer in English. It presents a day in the life of a Dalit manual scavenger Bakha, who sweeps streets and latrines for the upper class, who are forbidden from cleaning or touching human waste. Being unfortunate to have been born as an Untouchable, this will be Bakha's destiny for his entire life, unless revolutionary reforms are brought about. The entire novel is a slice of life – a single day in the life of Bakha. His daylong journey of humiliation tests his endurance. The novel ends famously with Bakha attending a meeting at which Gandhi appears. Untouchable was written while the caste system was firmly in place. This gives the novel an authenticity and accuracy that make it easy to empathize with Bakha and his family. It is the paralyzing and polarizing distinctions of the social class that shapes the lives of the untouchables like Bakha..

Arundhati Roy’s The God of Small Things

The God of Small Things won The Man Booker Prize for fiction in 1997. The novel has been written by Arundhati Roy a famous Indian novelist and social activist. The God of Small Things is a predicament of untouchables and subalterns in southern Indian society. Velutha is a representative of an untouchable, a Dalit or suppressed, who is gifted with carpentry and mechanic skills. He seems beneficial for Ayemenem house and Pickles and Preservers factory. In spite of his skills, he has unfortunately been paid less than touchable carpenters in the factory but fortunately more than untouchable workers. In the novel, the laws of India’s caste system are broken by the characters of Ammu and Velutha, an untouchable or Paravan. He is the only character from the Dalit community depicted in the novel who has sense of equality and self- respect. Velutha’s lack of complacency causes him many problems throughout the novel. “It was not entirely his fault that he lived in a society where a man’s death could be more profitable than his life had ever been” (p.267). Velutha, the god of small things, transgresses the established norms of society by having an affair with a woman of high caste. The ultimate outcome of this love is tragic death of an “untouchable” by “touchable boots” of Kerala police, an event that makes a travesty of the idea of God. God is no more in control of “small things” rather the small things have an ultimate power over God turning him to “The God of loss” (265).

Rohinton Mistry’s A Fine Balance

The epic novel, A Fine Balance published in 1996, is an extraordinary exercise in realism. Mostly set in Bombay during the Seventies, it portrays the life of four characters from diverse backgrounds whose paths converge in 1975 India. Maneck Kohlah, a college student, has rented a room in the city. On his way to inspect the apartment of Dina Dalal he meets two tailors, Ishwar Darji and his nephew Omprakash (Om) Darji, also on their way to Dina’s to find sewing jobs. The Darjis belong to the “untouchable” caste. By learning the sewing trade, they have escaped their village, where the upper castes oppress the lower ones, and where a local landholder named Thakur Dharamsi killed the rest of the Darji family because Ishwar's brother got above his station. Ishwar and Om hope for a fresh start in the big city and are glad to find employment with Dina. The appalling conditions in which people live in the city deeply affect Maneck. He easily becomes overwhelmed and depressed despite acquaintance Vasant Rao Valmik's advice that he must learn to strike a balance between hope and despair. Being unable to bear the loss of his own makeshift family, Maneck throws himself in front of a speeding train and commits suicide. A Fine Balance between hope and despair; the novel ends certainly on an optimistic and hopeful note. By analyzing the characters, the concept of untouchability is well demonstrated.

Joseph Macwan's The Stepchild

The Stepchild is the first Dalit novel refers to rural Gujarat of the 1930s. In 1989, this novel received the Kendriya Sahitya Akademi Award. It was translated by Rita Kothari from Gujarati Angaliyat into English as The Stepchild, and published in 2004. The novel revolves around the Vankar community which was considered untouchable in Charotar district of Central Gujarat. It exposes the structure of domination prevalent in central Gujarat. It also analyses how Macwan suffered oppression and exclusion since childhood and he faced it with new challenges in a society where forces of globalization had started engulfing local communities along with their traditional culture and dialects. In the novel, the Dalit characters are struggling for their identity. Their anger, agony and protests are presented by the author effectively. Angaliyat is a documentary on the Dalits' suffering and their reactions to it as Joseph Macwan himself saw and experienced in his life. Macwan described the harsh reality without any bitterness but with fragrance of creativity. A critic named Hira Singh has this to say about the novel:

The roots of caste system are not embedded in human nature. Caste is not a natural but a socio-historical phenomenon...impurities of caste is not religious. Macwan tries to show in this novel how this status is eternal and unalterable. (Singh:258)

Conclusion

It is due to the efforts of Dr. Ambedkar that there has been an upliftment in the social status of the marginalized sections of the Indian society. He laid emphasis on the education of the Dalits that ultimately lead to a new writing. Rejection and revolt in Dalit literature have been birthed from the womb of Dalits' pain. It forms an important and distinct part of Indian literature. The contributions of Dalit writers have been emerging every day to enrich Dalit literature, as well as Indian literature in recent years. Critics and reviewers have showed interest in this literature at national and international level. The significance of Dalit identity in the caste hegemonic society are brought out in the Dalit literature. The highest purpose of Dalit writing is not beauty of craft, but authenticity of experience. The most significant attribute is that the Dalit literature displays Dalit consciousness. It is a belief in rebellion against the caste system, recognizing the human being as its focus. Ambedkarite thought is the inspiration for this consciousness. Today Dalit literature includes not only the writings about Indian suppressed people but also other marginalized groups throughout the world that are relegated to a secondary position by the privileged classes.

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar and Indian Political Thought : An analyses

Dr. Sujatha. J. R

Dept., of political science,
Bangalore University, Bangalore,Abstract

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was a noticeable political scholar of our occasions. His political way of thinking partners with the stupendous political streams like progressivism, traditionalism, Marxism and communitarianism. Simultaneously he separates himself with these predominant political customs in his own bona fide and native manner. Ambedkar's way of thinking is basically moral and strict. As far as he might be concerned, social goes before the political. Social profound quality is the vital to his political way of thinking. His origination of vote based system disguises the standards of fairness, freedom, and brotherhood in its actual soul. As far as he might be concerned, majority rules system was the end and the methods for this ideal. It was the end since he eventually thought about majority rule government as coterminous with the acknowledgment of freedom, fairness and society. Simultaneously, vote based system was likewise the methods through which this ideal was to be accomplished. Ambedkar says: "Majority rules system isn't a type of government, yet a type of social association. The underlying foundations of popular government are to be looked in friendly relationship, regarding the related life between individuals who structure the general public". This paper will examine about Dr. Ambedkar's political way of thinking with uncommon reference to majority rule government.

Introduction

B. R. Ambedkar was extraordinary scholarly and social reformer. In his beginning phase of profession, he understood the situation of untouchables. He devoted for what seems like forever for financial upliftment (Bakshi, 2009). The political way of thinking of Ambedkar help with revising the emergency of western political hypothesis, specifically and driving the battles of individuals when all is said in done. Ambedkar has emerged as a significant political savant with the ascent of dalit development in contemporary occasions (Bakshi, 2009). He arose on the Indian socio-political territory in mid 1920s and stayed in the top of all friendly, monetary, political and strict endeavors for upliftment of the most reduced layer of the Indian culture called untouchables. Babasaheb was an incredible analyst who made extraordinary commitments as a financial specialist, social scientist, legitimate light, educationalist, writer, Parliamentarian and as a social reformer and ally of common freedoms. Babasaheb coordinated, joined together and enthused the untouchables in India to successfully utilize political methods towards their objective of social decency. Dr. Ambedkar composed three insightful books on financial aspects:

1. Organization and Finance of the East India Company
2. The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India
3. The Problem of the Rupee: Its Origin and Its Solution

The initial two imply his commitment to the field of public account: The primary work assessing funds of the East India Company during the time frame, 1792 through 1858 and the subsequent one book dissecting the advancement of the Center State monetary relations in British India during the time frame, 1833 through 1921. The third book, his artful culmination in financial aspects, signifies an original commitment to the field of money related financial aspects.

Ambedkar's Social precedes political conception:

Ambedkar's idea, as repeated in his works and addresses, has incredible noticeable quality in drawing the set of experiences and development of social idea in India. It is fundamental to comprehend the way of thinking of Ambedkar which is the hypothetical establishment for the Dalit development. The focal of political considering Ambedkar is encased in two of his assertions, the rights are ensured not by law but rather by friendly and good inner voice of society, and popularity based type of government assumes a majority rule type of society. He ponders popular government as a type of society, or a method of related living, and a social still, small voice is the solitary insurance, everything being equal. The sources of popular government are to be analyzed in friendly connections, regarding related life among individuals who structure a general public. As indicated by him, social connections are fundamental components to majority rules system. Ambedkar is a social liberal in soul and practice. His unique commitment to political idea lies in his associating freedom, fairness and organization to the idea of social majority rules system, which in line, he identifies with majority rules system as a type of government. He further clarified the restrictions of social vote based system in regular working. He completely expressed while tending to the constituent get together (November 25, 1949), "Political vote based system can't last except if there lies at the base of it social majority rules system' which implies, a lifestyle which perceives freedom, balance and society as the standards of life." This assertion demonstrates that he characterized vote based system as a structure and technique for government whereby revolutionary changes in the financial and public activity of individuals are achieved without murdering." Larger part of discourses and works of Ambedkar are about friendly reformism. He frequently examined and tested the issue of predominance of social over policy driven issues. Legislative issues must be basically associated with social issues.

Ambedkar's Concept on democracy:

Ambedkar had a meaningful discussion on fair type of government in his literary works. His origination of majority rule government is not the same as the parliamentary vote based system of Western Europe. Majority rule government accompanied the standards of radicalism. Parliamentary vote based system has every one of the signs of a mainstream government, an administration of individuals, by individuals and for individuals. Ambedkar considered the issues and explained dismay against the parliamentary popular government in countries like Italy, Germany, Russia, Spain and some other European countries in proposing the parliamentary majority rules system in India. Ambedkar investigated reason for the let-down of parliamentary majority rule government that parliamentary vote based system gives no free hand to suppression and that is the reason it turned into a shamed foundation in the nations, for example, Italy, Spain and Germany which promptly invited tyrannies (Roudrigues, Valerian, 2002). The countries that were contradicting fascism and pledged to popular government, to track down their discontent with majority rules system. In the first place, parliamentary popular government started with correspondence of political rights as equivalent testimonial.

Parliamentary Democracy

As per Ambedkar, "parliamentary vote based system has every one of the characteristics of a mainstream Government, an administration of individuals, by individuals and for individuals". "In parliamentary majority rule government, there is the Legislature to communicate the voice of individuals; there is the Executive which is subordinate to the Legislature and bound to submit to the Legislature. Far beyond the Legislature and the Executive there is the Judiciary to control both and keep them both inside endorsed limits". Ambedkar says, "Parliamentary popular government has not been at a halt. It was advanced in three ways. Initially, it started with balance of political rights by extending as equivalent testimonial. Also, it has perceived the standard of uniformity of social and financial freedoms. Thirdly, it has perceived that the state can't be held under control by company which is hostile to social in their motivation". Parliamentary popular government creates the best outcome over the long haul, since it relegates extraordinary importance to ideals like capacity and collaboration, common regard and self-improvement, order and commitment to work, for the joy of the large numbers of individuals. The arrangement of parliamentary majority rules system, consequently, epitomizes the guideline of progress and coherence to which Ambedkar connects incredible significance. As far as he might be concerned, just the soul of individuals can assist parliamentary majority rules system with working great. Individuals and majority rule government are firmly identified with one another. Ambedkar says, popular government is another name for fairness. The outcome is the parliamentary popular government in standing apart as a hero of freedom has constantly out as a hero of freedom has consistently added to the financial wrongs of poor people, the oppressed and the excluded class. Ambedkar says, "Some unacceptable philosophy which has started parliamentary majority rule government is the inability to understand that political vote based system can't succeed where there is no friendly and financial popular government. Some way question this suggestion. To the individuals who are arranged to address it, I will pose a counter inquiry.

Political Democracy

As indicated by Ambedkar, political popular government lays on four premises. They are:

1. The individual is an end in himself.
2. The individual has certain basic rights which should be ensured to him by the Constitution.
3. The individual will not be needed to give up any of his sacred rights as a condition point of reference to the receipt of an advantage.
4. The state will not delegate forces to private people to administer others."

Every one of these focuses is totally significant in Democracy. In this way as indicated by Dr. Ambedkar the fundamental target of Democratic Government ought to be the government assistance of people. The poise of the individual, political freedom, social advancement and basic liberties are important established shields which structure Ambedkar's fundamental respectable popularity based standards in the political majority rules system. As far as he might be concerned, the ground plan implies the social construction of a local area to which the political arrangement is looked to the applied. Political majority rules system and freedom aren't anything if not bent and kicked up by equivalent social examples, on the grounds that the political design lays on the social construction. "To be sure, the social design," he says "profoundly affects the political construction. It might adjust it in its working. It might invalidate it or it might even make a cherry of it." It is subsequently, fundamental that prior to condemning any plan of political relationship in any event, making arrangements for monetary changes, individuals should consider the ground plan that implies social relations; Democracy ought to be viewed as both a social and a political technique. "The spirit of Democracy", he says, "is the tenet of exclusive, one worth".

Conditions point of reference for the fruitful working of current Democracy

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had unequivocally expressed the conditions which are a lot of essential for the fruitful working of popular government. They can be expressed in a word as under.

1. There should be no glaring imbalances in the general public He says, "There should not be a mistreated and smothered class. There should not be a class which has got every one of the advantages and a class which has got every one of the weights to convey. Something like this, such a division, such an association of a general public has inside itself the germs of a ridiculous upset, and maybe it would be unimaginable for the vote based system to fix them".
2. The presence of Opposition for Ambedkar, "Popular government implies a rejection of force. Majority rules system necessitates that not just that the Government ought to be dependent upon the rejection, long haul blackball of five years, because of individuals; however there should be a prompt denial. For this, there should be an Opposition in the Parliament to challenge the Government".
3. Equity in law and organization - There should be equity under the steady gaze of Law, yet there should be fairness of treatment in organization. The organization should be well responsive, dependable and unprejudiced; and it should be all around decided. It should order submission to power, "We should have a Government," he said, "in which the men in force will give their unified faithfulness to the wellbeing of the country.
4. Sacred Morality - Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar said that, "A Constitution which contains lawful arrangements, is just skeleton. The tissue of the skeleton is to be found in what we call established ethical quality." According to Dr. Ambedkar Constitution is significant for achievement of vote based system yet more significant was sacred ethical quality in nation and society.
5. No Tyranny of larger part – Ambedkar says, "There is something other which is essential in the working of Democracy, and it is this that for the sake of vote based system there should be no oppression of the lion's share ludicrous. The minority should consistently have a sense of security that albeit the lion's share is carrying on the Government, the minority isn't being harmed, or the minority isn't being hit unsportsmanlike"
6. Moral request - Dr. Ambedkar said, "A government official doesn't simply exchange legislative issues, and however he additionally addresses a specific confidence covering both the technique just as the transcendentalism of governmental issues." He further said that, Politics has gotten a sort of sewage framework unfortunately, Unsavory and insanitary. To turn into a lawmaker resembles going to work in channel. As per Dr. Ambedkar Politics is the key of all liberation.
7. Public Conscience - According to Dr. Ambedkar Public Conscience signifies, "Still, small voice which gets upset at each off-base, regardless of who is the victim; and it implies that everyone if he endures that specific wrong is set up to go along with him to get him calmed."

Conclusion

Dr. Ambedkar had unshakeable confidence in majority rule government. In his origination of misuse less society, majority rule government has an extra-conventional job which he characterized as „one individual, one vote'; and 'one vote, one worth'. Vote based system implies strengthening of any individual for taking an interest during the time spent dynamic identifying with her/him, popular government implies freedom, equity and clique - Ambedkar's meaning of vote based system had such a tone. He characterized parliamentary majority rules system as "casting a ballot by individuals for their proprietors and giving over the privileges of administering over themselves". His origination of vote based system seems, by all accounts, to be simply individuals arranged. He showed that the learned ideas of equity are unfavorable to the impaired segments of society in the overall social setting and proposed a crucial change in the idea of correspondence. It conceived total cancelation of disparity. His guideline of positive segregation depends on this very idea of balance.

The Vision of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar towards Women Welfare in India

Miss. Shilpa S. Jibhenkar

Assistant Professor

Tirpude College of Social Work, Nagpur.

Historical Background

Indian history and Indian culture are the oldest in the history of the world. The question that comes to the fore as to whether there can be the philosophy of social equity and social justice and if at all it really exists, then what is the contribution of Mahatma Fule in the context. Social equality and social justice are the terms closely linked with each other. Male and female are two different species having a biological difference. Yet, there is equality in some factors among them. All human beings are equal naturally. Therefore, males and females should be treated equally. The architect of the Indian constitution incorporated the principles of social equality and justice in the very preamble of the Indian constitution. Dr. Ambedkar was highly inspired by the exhaustive philosophy of Mahatma Jyotirao Fule and accepted Mahatma Fule as his Guru - the driving force. Therefore, the reflection of Mahatma Fule's philosophy is quite apparent in the Indian constitution penned by Dr. Ambedkar

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar's Vision and Mission

The vision of Dr. Ambedkar about women is explicitly depicted in the Indian Constitution. Equality of sexes is strongly backed by the constitution through articles 14, 15, and 16. The principle of gender equality is enshrined in the Indian Constitution in its Preamble, Fundamental Rights, Fundamental Duties, and Directive Principles. He laid down the foundation of social justice and there can be no social justice without gender equality.

Some people are born great, some have greatness thrust upon them and some achieve greatness to the last category, Bharat Ratna Babasaheb Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar belongs. Ambedkar was a great nationalist, political thinker, reformer, and revolutionary and prolific writer with prodigious ideas. He stood for all scientific and social activities which enhanced the cause of human progress and happiness. His contribution to the making of the Constitution of India was phenomenal. He defiantly fought for the betterment of the oppressed classes. And in this struggle, he showed a rare crusading spirit, carving out in the process an important place for himself among the prominent architects of modern India.

Ambedkar is India's foremost human rights activist during the 20th century. He is an emancipator, scholar, extraordinary social reformer, and a true champion of human rights. It can be said that he is one of the highly regarded Indians whose emancipation and empowering role for oppressed groups that cut against the gender divide has inspired subaltern groups all over the world. His aim was not communal and not limited to personal benefit, but it was essentially social and human, related to all who suffered from slavery, injustice, tyranny, and exploitation.

Constitutional Rights of Women

While drafting the constitution of India, Dr. Ambedkar was the prime movers of the provisions related to the welfare of women. On the question of civil rights, he made provisions in articles 14-16 in the Indian Constitution, which provide equal status to women and also banned the sale and purchase of women prevailing Hindu India. Further to ensure women's status Dr. Ambedkar also introduced an emancipatory bill (the Hindu code Bill) in Parliament which intended mainly 1) to abolish different marriage systems prevalent among Hindus and to establish monogamy as the only legal system; 2) Conferment of right to property and adoption on women; 3) restitution of conjugal rights and judicial separation; attempts to unify the Hindu Code in tune with progressive and modern thought.

The role played by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, as chairperson of the Drafting Committee of the Constitution, has left an imprint on the social tapestry of the country after independence and shaped the socio-political fabric of India today. It would have been a different India without him and, in a probability, a much more inequitable and unjust one. He attempted to forge India's moral and social foundations a new and striving for a political order of the constitutional democracy that is sensitive to the disadvantaged, inherited from the past, or engendered by prevailing social relations.

Dr. Ambedkar also raised the Women's issue as a Member of the Legislative Council during his debate in the Bombay Legislative Assembly on 10th Nov. 1938; he strongly advocated family planning measures and said that besides many other problems giving birth to many children negatively affects a Mother's health. Later in the year 1942, Dr. Ambedkar also introduced Maternity Benefit Bill during his tenure as Labor Minister in Governor General's Executive Council. The Hindu Succession Act gives male and female heirs almost equal rights to inheritance. Section 14 says that any property possessed by a female Hindu shall be held by her as full owner and not a limited owner. He introduced Hindu Code Bill in 1948 which was revolutionary in the confinement of proprietary rights to women but when not accepted by the parliament, he resigned from the ministerial post from the cabinet in 1951.

Conceptual framework of Women Empowerment

Being literate and being educated two different think. Education by means of Dr. Ambedkar strongly believed that women empowerment can be achieved by the welfare of women. The activities of empowering women worldwide should follow the vision of Dr. Ambedkar. Empowerment envelops developing and building capacities of individuals, communities to make them part of the mainstream society. Empowerment refers to increasing the spiritual, political, social, or economic strength of individuals and communities. Empowerment and autonomy of women and the improvement of their political, social, economic, and health status is both a highly important end in itself and necessary for the achievement of sustainable human development.

Dr. Ambedkar described how women were treated cruelly by the way of sati, enforced widowhood and girl marriages just to maintain strict endogamy in a caste. The social evils regarding women in the Hindu religion as well as in Muslim society were highlighted by him. He extensively studied the position of a woman in both the religion (and also in the other religions) and thrown light on denial of rights to her and ultimately the status of an individual. He stated that the consequences of the purdah system on Muslim women were that it deprives them of mental and moral nourishment

Gender equality, gender mainstreaming, networking, leadership, financial freedoms are the essential aspects of women's empowerment. Dr. Ambedkar realized this at his time and included it in the process of social reforms. Dr. Ambedkar started involving women in the struggle, for the eradication of caste systems and upliftment of the underprivileged sections. He realized that this could not be achieved without liberating the women themselves. He motivated women and addressed them to participate in the struggle against caste prejudices. During the Mahad Tank Struggle, women marched in the procession along with men. He encouraged women to organize themselves. Impressed by the large gathering of women at the women's conferences held at Nagpur on 20th July 1942, he told women to be progressive and abolish traditionalism, ritualism, and customary habits, which were detrimental to their progress.

Conclusion

Dr. B.R Ambedkar's philosophy of life happened to be the basic tenets of liberty, equality, and fraternity. A great man must be motivated by the dynamics of a social purpose and must act as the scourge and the scavenger of society. He is a scholar, extraordinary social reformer, and a true champion of human rights. It can be said that he is one of the highly regarded Indians whose emancipation and empowering role for oppressed groups that cut against the gender divide has inspired subaltern groups all over the world. He was for a total reorganization and reconstruction of the Hindu society on two main principles—equality and the absence of casteism. Education is the only mean by which societies grow out of oppression to democratic participation and involvement. It is a powerful tool for the empowerment of individuals.

Abstract:

“Annihilation of Caste” is a speech that was to be delivered by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar for the 1936 Annual Conference of the Jat-Pat-Todak Mandal of Lahore but got cancelled by the reception committee on the ground that the views expressed in the speech would be unbearable to the conference. Today, Ambedkar's undelivered speech has become part of the syllabi of Dalit literature in many of the universities in India. To study the journey of this speech from rejection to become an object of study in academia is the main concern of this research paper. The researchers will be talking about the views given expression in the speech and Dr. Ambedkar's firm stand on his opinions against the censorship of the reception committee of the conference. The researchers will touch upon Ambedkar's various aspects related to Caste System and the ways he is providing to annihilate the Caste System.

The Jat-Pat-Todak Mandal was founded in Lahore in 1922. It was a radical faction of the Hindu reformist Arya Samaj. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar in his prologue to Annihilation of Caste expresses that he was given to understand Jat-Pat-Todak Mandal as an organization of social reformers of caste Hindu, to eradicate the caste from amongst the Hindus. The Jat-Pat-Todak Mandal invited Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar to preside at the 1936 Annual Conference of the Mandal. The Mandal had no idea what Ambedkar was going to say in the presidential address. They had a question about whether it would be suitable for their context or not. Therefore, Mandal asked for Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's presidential address beforehand. Ambedkar wrote his ideas to the Mandal. Mandal found some portions of the address objectionable and asked Ambedkar to make changes to it. Ambedkar took a firm stand on his views against the censorship of the Mandal saying I would not alter a comma. The Jat-Pat-Todak Mandal cancelled the conference and the speech remained undelivered.

The Jat-Pat-Todak cancelled the conference because some portions of the presidential address were unbearable to the conference. In one of his letters, Mr. Sant Ram, the Secretary of the Jat-Pat-Todak Mandal asked Ambedkar to explain his idea of annihilating caste. Ambedkar said, “The real method of breaking up the Caste System was not to bring about inter-caste dinners and inter-caste marriages but to destroy the religious notions on which Caste was founded”. It is this attack of Ambedkar on religious notions that was asked for the explanation. Ambedkar defended this point calling it most relevant and important. For him, it was the way and mean of breaking up the caste system. For Mandal, this argument was irrelevant and off the point.

The overall argument of the Jat-Pat-Todak Mandal shows the hypocrisy of the reformation of the privileged Hindus. The ideas of the organization are contradictory to the name of the organization itself. Ambedkar advocates the idea that eradication of the caste system is almost impossible without the reconstruction of the religious notions and Mandal wants to eradicate the Caste System without this reconstruction. The privileged Hindu class of the Mandal cannot achieve the aim of eradicating the Caste System because maintaining the religious notions serve the purpose of maintaining the Caste System. The ideas of the Mandal are contradictory to what the organization aims at and therefore it is marching towards nothing but hypocrisy.

The Jat-Pat-Todak Mandal was unhappy with Ambedkar's reference to Vedas and other religious books of the Hindus. They questioned these references stating it as an unnecessary attack on the morality and reasonableness of the Vedas and other religious books of the Hindus. Ambedkar was talking about the destruction of the religion with a supplementary explanation. But the explanation got ignored and it became the object of controversy for the Mandal. For them, Vedas did not have any connection with the issue that Ambedkar was going to address. It is a fact that Jat-Pat-Todak Mandal dwelt on the idea of eradication of the caste system. As the Vedas preach and promote the caste system, it has a connection with the issue of caste eradication. Therefore, the cancellation of the conference on false grounds proves a negative attitude towards Ambedkar's way of caste eradication.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar touched upon several issues in this undelivered speech. He talked about two kinds of the reformation in Hindu society and how social reformation has been facing failures from the pre-independence of India. The two kinds of the reformation in Hindu society are two different ideas. First talks about the reformation of the Hindu family which is concerned with widow remarriage and child marriage. The second kind of reformation is the abolition of the Caste System. The social reform in India was of the first kind. It mostly talked about the enlightenment of the high caste Hindus and thus it has been lost in history.

In the fourth chapter of the Annihilation of Caste Ambedkar puts forth his contemporary situation where defenders of the Caste System prevails the society. Ambedkar analyzed defence in favour of the Caste System and concluded that one of the defences of the Caste System in the Division of Labour. As every civilized society needs division of labour, the Caste System is defended on that ground. Ambedkar talks about the difference between the division of labour in India and other civilized societies. For him, in India, it is not only a division of labour but also a division of labourers. He elaborates that division of labour in the Caste System is an unnatural division of labourers into water-tight compartments.

Division of labour in the Caste System is a hierarchy where works are graded one above one so as the workers are graded. Ambedkar finds no other civilized society having gradation of work and workers. Division of labour in India is all about ancestral occupations. Thus, it violates the right to choose. It doesn't provide liberty to be skillful in what one wants. A person is not selected based on his original capacities, but on that of the social status of the parents and this becomes a rigid system that is almost impossible to transgress.

Dr. Ambedkar goes further making a connection between the Caste System and unemployment in India. Ambedkar says "If a Hindu is seen to starve rather than take to new occupations not assigned to his caste, the reason is to be found in the Caste System". As the caste system does not permit one to take occupation that is assigned by the birth, one withdraws from other occupations if found guilty by his community members. In Dr. Ambedkar's words because of the lack of readjustment of occupation, caste becomes a direct cause of unemployment in the country. The issue of unemployment because of the caste system can be seen in all sections of society. For upper castes, it is impossible to get a job assigned by birth if there is limited scope for it. If a person from a lower caste feels insulted in doing the ancestral occupation he will give it up. These are the number of causes of unemployment that are related to the Caste System in India. Therefore, the caste system in India not only affects social life but the economic status too.

In chapter thirteen of “Annihilation of Caste,” Dr Ambedkar discusses the problems in the ethics of Hindus. He problematizes ethics in Hindu society. Ambedkar keeps on harping on the fact that public charity has been hampered by the caste system in India. People do not show affinity towards people from other communities. Emotions and sentiments of people are restricted to their caste. There is no sympathy for needful. Appreciation does not reach one who deserves it. As helping hands do not work beyond the boundaries of caste it becomes impossible to make the help reach the needy. Therefore, Ambedkar rightly points out, “There is charity but it begins with the caste and ends with the caste. This shows that the ethical values of Indian society are bound to the caste of a person.

The most beautiful part of the book “Annihilation of Caste” is chapter fifteen of the book. In this chapter, Dr. Ambedkar talks about his ideal society. For Ambedkar, the ideal society is based on principles of Liberty, Equality and Fraternity. He wants a society that would be mobile and always in flux. He wants channels in society that will be helpful to convey changes in society. He wants a society where continuous communication of multiple interests has a place. Thus he wants a society that will be worth living to everyone. Making this ideal society reality is possible only when the caste factor is abolished from the picture.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar attacked defenders of the Chaturvarnya System that are called Arya Samajists. Ambedkar is not convinced by the defence of the protagonists of the Chaturvarnya System that Chaturvarnya is based not on birth but worth (guna). Ambedkar finds this view contradictory because of the constant labelling that is going around. Men are labelled as Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Shudras which is based on birth. Ambedkar holds a view that there is no need to assign these labels to individuals giving an example of European society that honours its soldiers and its servants without giving them permanent labels. This labelling is related to fixed notions in the minds of people of Hindu society. Ambedkar concludes that unlearning these labels and giving them a new namesake will be helpful to shatter these fixed notions. Ambedkar’s study shows him that the Chaturvarnya system is impracticable, harmful and has turned out to be a miserable failure. Ambedkar finds it difficult to reduce four thousand castes based on birth, to the four Varnas, based on worth.

Ambedkar finds similarities in the Chaturvarnya System and Plato’s ideal. He applies the same criticism to both societies. He says, lumping individuals into a few sharply marked-off classes is a very superficial view of man and his powers leaving no place for the uniqueness of every individual. Ambedkar proves his point with the help of modern science which says the qualities of individuals is incompatible with their stratification by classes since the qualities of individuals are so variable. This attack on the Chaturvarnya System gives us ideas that neither the Caste System nor Varna System can make the place worth living to everyone.

“Annihilation of Caste” is a text which gives a complete analysis of caste and its mechanism. Ambedkar talks about the origin and development of the Caste System. He gives a fundamental difference between Caste System and the Varna System. For him, both these systems are a failure for Indian society and harm the communal harmony of the country. He wanted to democratize the society where inequality pervaded throughout. Ambedkar’s idea of the ideal society is based on principles of liberty, equality and fraternity. The book has made a place in many of the seminar, conference and intellectual discussions. The journey of the book from its rejection at the annual conference of Jat-Pat-

Todak Mandal to place in syllabi of Sociology and gender studies in Indian universities and abroad shows historic changes related to the text. The book will always be helpful to humankind for marching towards humanity. Ambedkar's ideal society will provide a place for everyone worth living. Therefore, "Annihilation of Caste" is a document that everyone should read to live a beautiful life and to make others' lives beautiful.

Abstract:

The term 'Manusmriti' has recently attracted increased attention in the context of denigrating womenfolk, despite that it is assumed as a holy law book of Hinduism. History records that, the Architect of Indian Constitution Dr. B. R. Ambedkar burnt the copy of Manusmriti on December 25, 1927. There arises the question what Manusmriti is all about?. The present paper brings together a study on the origin and role of Manusmriti in Hinduism and Dr. Ambedkar's ideology on 'Manusmriti' through the writings of Amish Tripathi, the modern Indian mythical writer and concludes by inculcating the importance of Equality through various laws of Indian Constitution.

Keywords: Manusmriti, Varna, Laws and Equality.

“I like the religion which teaches liberty, equality and fraternity.”

- Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

The chief architect of Indian Constitution honorable Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar also proudly addressed by his followers since 1927 as 'Babasaheb Ambedkar' is an Indian Economist, a Politician, a Jurist and a Social Reformer. 'Babasaheb' is a Marathi phrase with the meaning "Respected Father" where 'Baba' stands for 'Father' and 'Saheb' stands for 'Sir'. Ambedkar was the pioneer playing a vital role in creating the vast legal dynasty. Hence, he is respectfully referred as the Father of Indian Constitution. His prime motive is to give 'Rights' to every citizen of India regardless of the believed illogical conventions of society especially Hinduism.

Born on 14th April 1891 in Mhow city of Madhya Pradesh, now referred to be as 'Ambedkar Nagar', Ambedkar inspired Dalit and Buddhist movement and fought against social discrimination of Dalits. Dalit is from the vernacular form of the Sanskrit word 'Dalita' meaning broken or scattered. This term was first used by Mahatma Jotiba Phule representing the people belonging to lower caste or outcasts called 'Untouchables' in India. Government of India now basically identified it in the list of Scheduled Caste under Article 341 of Indian Constitution. Ambedkar was born as a Mahar Dalit. As an Untouchable he experienced discrimination even in the School he studied. They were segregated from other upper class students and received a little attention from teachers. Indian writer Mulkraj Anand also explained the sufferings of 'untouchables' in his works like Coolie and Untouchables. He also even lost his aunt who committed suicide for being neglected by her family, as she shared her food with a Muslim woman. Identity on the basis of caste is a poison injected in every individual of the society which kills not only him but also his surroundings.

It is noteworthy to mention a list of things named after Dr. Ambedkar, such as; Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar Airstrip in Meerut, Uttar Pradesh, Dr. Ambedkar National Award, Ambedkar Nagar in Rajasthan, Tripura Medical College and Dr. B. R. Ambedkar Memorial Teaching Hospital, Ambedkar Memorial Park in Lucknow, Dr. Ambedkar Stadium in Karnataka etc. In 1990, India's highest Civilian Award Bharat Ratna was conferred upon Ambedkar.

Dr. Ambedkar publicly burned 'Manusmriti' on 25th December 1927 known as "Manusmurti Dahan Din" (Sabrang n.p.). What is Manusmriti? and why it was burned by Ambedkar? According to Hinduism 'Manusmriti' also known as 'Manava- dharma- shastra' is the foremost of all dharma- shastra with the content tracing back to the Vedas. "Document that compiles and organizes the code of conduct for human society" (Pattanaik n.p.).

Manusmriti is unique amongst dharma- shastras as it presents itself like a holy text, a purana, beginning with the origin of the world, the origin of the four communities, managing adversities, transgressions, and finally the two great conclusions of human life- obtaining fruits of this life's actions in the next birth or liberating oneself from the cycle of birth and death. (Pattanaik n.p.)

'Manusmriti' divides human society into four main communities such as Brahmins, Kshatriyas, Vaishyas and Sudras. These four communities were ranked as upper caste and lower caste according to the job they possess. "And one caste cannot do another caste's job." (Tripathi, 28). 'Mansmriti' refers this system as 'Varna' meaning 'Colour'. Amish Tripathi in his first book of his 'Shiva trilogy' presents the division of communities in a detail manner. "Yes. But the Brahmins don't just cure people. They are also teachers, lawyers, priests, basically any intellectual profession.'... Kshatriyas, who are the warriors and rulers... 'And then they have Vaishyas, who are craftsmen, traders and business people and finally the Shudras who are the farmers and workers" (Tripathi, 28).

According to Indian Mythology, 'Manu' is the legendary author of 'Manusmriti' which literally means 'Laws of Manu'. 'Manu' is assumed as the son of Lord Brahma, one of the three main gods of Hinduism and he is a God of Creation, where the other two; Lord Vishnu and Lord Shiva are for Protection and Destruction.

In the cosmological speculations of later Hinduism, a day in the life of Brahma is divided into 14 periods called manvantara, each of which lasts for 306,72,0000 years. In every secondary cycle the world is re- created, and a new Manu appears to become the father of the next human race. The present age is considered the seventh Manu cycle. (Manu)

According to Hindu Mythology a day in the life of Brahma is known as 'Kalpa' divided into 14 periods with 14 'Manu' kings: Svayambhuva, Svarocisha, Uttama, Tapasa/Tamasa, Raivata, Cakshusha, Vaivasvata, Savarni, Daksha- savarni, Brahma- savarni, Dharma- savarni, Rudra- savarni, Deva savarni and Indra- savarni. The first Manu 'Svayambhuva' is considered as the creator of 'Manusmriti'.

Ambedkar was against the preaching of Manusmriti's segregation of the people as upper and lower caste. Hence, as a symbol of his opposition to the caste discrimination he along with thousands of volunteers gathered to protest in 'Mahad' known as 'The Mahad Satyagraha' or 'Chavdar Tale Satyagraha'. The prime motive of the protest claiming rights for Dalits to drink from Mahad public water tank. That was a period where untouchables were not allowed to drink water from the common tank as it is considered as a sin. Ambedkar also experienced this in his school days where the upper caste students pour water from the height so that they never touch the untouchables. Which Ambedkar in his Waiting for Visa described it as "no peon no water" (Pritchett).

While in the school I knew that children of the touchable classes, when they felt thirsty, could go out to the water tap, open it, and quench their thirst. All that was necessary was the permission of the teacher. But my position was separate. I could not touch the tap; and unless it was opened for it by a touchable person, it was not possible for me to quench my thirst. In my case the permission of the teacher was not enough. The presence of the school peon was necessary, for he was the only person whom the class teacher could use for such a purpose. If the peon was not available, I had to go without water. The situation can be summed up in the statement—no peon, no water. (Pritchett n.p.)

On the day of protest people never want to give up their identity as Brahmins obtained a stay order from a local court against outcasts drinking water from common water tank of 'Mahad'. The aggressive Hindus also tightened to access any public arena for the proposed meeting of Dr. Ambedkar and was helped by Mr. Fattekhann, a Muslim. Banners were erected with the message that 'Destory Untouchability and Bury Brahmanism' and finally 'Manusmriti' was burned. "Manusmriti was moved by Brahmin associate of Ambedkar, Gangadhar Neelkanth Sahastrabuddha and was seconded by PN Rajabhoj, an untouchable leader Thereafter, the book Manusmriti was kept on this pyre and burned" (Sabrang). Gangadhar Neelkanth Sahastrabuddhe an Indian social activist from Maharashtra later, acted as an editor of Ambedkar weekly 'Janata'.

There is also a movement called 'Dalit Panthers' founded by Namdeo Dhasal, Raja Dhale and Arun Kamble in April 1972 in Bombay. They aligned themselves as 'Black Panther Movement' in US. Their manifesto defines Dalits as, "all those who are exploited politically, economically and in the name of religion" (Caste).

Indian Constitution was framed in abolishing the Untouchability by passing many laws and affirmative measures. Article 17 of Indian Constitution considers it as a punishable offence. There is also a penalty for action of stopping persons, especially people of lower caste from entering the place of taking water and place of worship under the law of 'The Untouchability offences Act of 1955' or the 'Protection of Civil Liberties Act'. The Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989 was framed to examine and protect the SC and ST people from injustice against them.

Mahatma Gandhi has also shown his bitter response on Ambedkar's action of burning the text believed as holy by Hindus. In 1928, Gandhiji reflected it in his letter to P.T. Pillay. The term 'Manusmriti' has recently attracted increased attention in the context of denigrating womenfolk against Viduthalai Chiruthaigal Katchi (VCK) leader Thol Thirymavalavan, the city police registered a case against him.

Regardless of the criticisms, the fact to be understand is, Ambedkar was not against any Religion rather he was against the inhuman discriminations followed throughout many ages believing the illogical conventions blindly. He burned ‘Manusmriti’ not because he hatred Hindu religion rather it is the reflection of his disappointment towards caste discrimination preached which according to him ‘graded social inequality’. Caste which is marked not by birth but by skill will make every individual as higher caste. Which Amish Tripathi in his The Immortals of Meluha points out that, “‘Over time my Lord,’ interjected Daksha, ‘we found the percentage of higher castes actually going up in the population. Which means that everybody in the world has the ability to excel. All it takes is for a child to be given fair chance to succeed’” (Tripathi, 101).

The Caste discrimination makes people superior and inferior among themselves. One who is marked as upper class gradually gets the superior mindset over the lower one and never wants to leave their framed identity. This causes numerous conflicts like the problem of ‘inter- caste marriage’ that exists even today regardless of implementation of numerous laws in favor of it. People of lower community sometimes feel insecure in expressing themselves, it is not because they are born in lower caste but because the superior makes them feel inferior. “Is it because of me? Am I not allowed to touch her because I am caste- unmarked? An inferior barbarian?” (Tripathi, 106).

‘Equality’ is the only medicine having the capability of curing this disease of discrimination. Government of India with its numerous laws of Indian Constitution framed by the chief Architect Dr. Ambedkar tries hard in eradicating the class and caste discrimination but unfortunately still the partial mindset exists within the programmed mind of human. It is in the hand of every individual to get rid of inhumane mindset because individuals together makes a Society. “Cultivation of mind should be the ultimate aim of human existence” (Ambedkar).

Abstract :

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar is the only star in space who has sacrificed his life for the country, taught man self-respect and taught all citizens to face adversity. Babasaheb Ambedkar was the eldest son of Mother India. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a very learned, learned and diligent Pandit. He had studied many subjects related to human life. He studied Economics, Political Science, History, Sociology, Anthropology, Philosophy, Psychology, Ethics, Philosophy, Law and Administration while studying at a foreign university. Therefore, he had acquired the ability to observe the whole of human life. This great man who drafted the Constitution of India through the Constitution to protect the fundamental rights of the people of all communities in India to live, speak and exercise their rights independently, the Dalits and the weaker sections, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has given special powers. Highly educated, aware of the rights of every section of the society, Babasaheb was an influential figure who brought Indian society to a developmental stage. Knowledge is light. Buddha gave a beautiful interpretation of knowledge for the masses. No one has reacted as harshly to the Indian social system as Mahatma Jyotirao Phule. Mahatma Jyotirao Phule insisted on the medical idea of the entire Indian society. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar who considered Sant Kabir and Mahatma Jyotiba Phule as his Gurus. Babasaheb Ambedkar took the initiative to take his movement forward. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar made the dreams of these great men more active, sharper and more capable. In the movement that took place in India for the very low working class, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's work is more effective. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was thirsty for knowledge. He used the entire knowledge gained as a curative medicine for social change. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's divine message to the underprivileged in Indian society is to learn, teach, warn and unite, which is our way of life. Introduction :

Ambawade, near Mandangad in Ratnagiri district, is the hometown of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, a great Indian leader, leader of the untouchables and the architect of the Indian Constitution. His father Ramji Sapkal was a Subhedar Major in the Army. He was born on 14 April 1891 in Mhow, Madhya Pradesh to Ramji and Mata Bhimabai. In 1896, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's mother died of cerebral palsy. After that, Babasaheb was taken care of by his aunt Mirabai. At that age, Mirabai was older than Ramji Ambedkar and was loving and understanding by nature. Vishwaratna, Vishwamanav, Vishwabhusan, Dhurandhar, Yugandhar, Yugpurush, Yugpravartak, Mahamanav, Mahapurush, Uchchvidyavibhushit, Paropkari, Krantisurya, Pragyasurya, Ghatana Samrat, Ghatanapati, Buddhi Samrat, Samajsurya, Bharat Bhagyavidhata, Mahavidwan are many titles. Through the efforts of Damodar Savlaram Yande, a scholarship of Rs. 25 per month was sanctioned to Babasaheb Ambedkar by Maharaj Sayajirao Gaikwad of Baroda Institution for college education. Dr. Babasaheb's education was B.A., M.A., P.h.d., M.S. C., D.S.C., Bar – at - Law., (Academic and honorary total of 32 degrees). "The National Divident Of India: A Historical and Analytical Study ". This is Babasaheb Ambedkar's

Ph.D. Was the subject of. He wrote this book from 1923 to 1917 with the diligence of education. Bhimrao Ambedkar, who is just 25 years old, wrote a dissertation on such an in-depth issue and shed light on how the British Parliament was run by the Secretary of State and how the government wasted and irresponsibility was squeezing the Indian people. The budget never came first, when did the provincial economy start, how did the economy expand ? He drew the attention of all the countries of the world to this dissertation. This dissertation was published in book form in 1925 after 8 years. The book, entitled "The Evolution of the Provincial Economy in British India", was dedicated to Maharaj Sayajirao Gaikwad of Baroda for his contribution to higher education and was published by a London publisher (Kasabe, 2007). In this book, we are true patriots. Proved by Babasaheb Ambedkar. B.A. from Mumbai University. Ambedkar became the first student in the untouchable class to achieve the degree of. Professor Edwin Seligman praised Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, saying, "Bhimrao Ambedkar is the most intelligent student not only among Indian students but also among American students."

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Political Action :

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's political views were on Swarajya, Nationalism, Democracy, Fundamental Rights, Minority Protection, Socialism, Communism, Buddhism etc. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has expressed his views on various political issues and political philosophy in India in many of his articles, books and speeches. Some of the political views of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar have been expressed in his speech at the Constituent Assembly. These ideas of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar have influenced the politics of that time as well as independent politics. Like all Indian political leaders and thinkers of the British period, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar also expressed his views on Swarajya but those views are different from others. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar had advocated for democratic socialism. Therefore, they did not approve of one-party socialism in Russia, China and other communist countries. He believed that the socialist system in the country could be established by embracing democracy in the political and economic spheres and by establishing government ownership of industry. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar As a supporter of the democratic socialist system, Babasaheb Ambedkar thought that Marxism and communism were flawed and incomplete. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar strongly criticized the match controversy and the communist system in Russia. Pointing out the flaws in communism, he said that communism gives importance only to economic and material life, communism is anti-religion, communism is anti-independence, communist nations have also adopted imperialist policy and kept many small nations under control.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's political thoughts :

Untouchables have no political rights. Babasaheb Ambedkar was done. So they Attended the first Round Table Conference held in London in 1930. At the conference, he spoke about the plight of millions of untouchables in the country and called for the abolition of untouchability. He drafted a Declaration of the Fundamental Rights of All Dalits and presented it to a committee appointed for minorities. The manifesto called for an independent constituency for the untouchables. Babasaheb's effective speech at this conference impressed everyone. This declaration was accepted by the British government. But Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi strongly opposed the idea of an independent constituency. He also said that even if the life goes on, it will work but it will not give this right to the untouchables. Because, according to Gandhiji, the British were trying to separate the Dalits from the Hindu community with an independent constituency, and he believed that untouchability would convert Hindus in the next ten to twenty years and that untouchability would disappear. But Dr.

Babasaheb Ambedkar did not consider the untouchables to be Hindu because the untouchables were forbidden in Hindu temples, Hindu scriptures and anything else. And he believed that thousands of years of slavery could be abolished once political power was restored. Babasaheb was completely against Gandhiji's logic. Gandhiji started a fast-unto-death against the independent constituency at the Yerawada Jail in Pune. But in the end, due to Gandhiji's fast, huge pressure came in the country. Babasaheb Ambedkar abandoned the demand for an independent constituency through the Pune Agreement and agreed that untouchables should have a reserved seat in the legislature.

As a true leader of the untouchables through the Pune Agreement, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar came to be known. Gandhiji, who called himself the leader of the untouchables, had to face the wrath of the untouchables for opposing the rights of the untouchables. To establish the independent political identity of the untouchable class, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar founded the "Independent Labor Party in 1936". Due to his tireless efforts in the Mumbai Legislative Assembly elections on 17 February 1937, 15 out of 17 candidates of this party were elected. He founded the "All India Scheduled Caste Federation" in 1942 to give a national character to his political party and to bring all the Scheduled Castes under its banner. After independence, Babasaheb Ambedkar took over as law minister in Nehru's cabinet. While he was the Law Minister, he enacted various laws and regulations. In August 1947, Babasaheb was appointed as the Chairman of the Drafting Committee, the main body of the Constitution. One of the world's greatest jurists, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar wrote the world's largest and best constitution in 2 years 11 months and 18 days and submitted it to the Constituent Assembly on 26 November 1949. The constitution written by Babasaheb Ambedkar came into force on January 26, 1950. To give all Indian women equal rights with men, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar did not write the Hindu Code Bill for five years. However, he resigned from the Nehru Cabinet as he was opposed to the Hindu Code Bill he had tabled in Parliament. Along with this bill that gives women their rights, Though Babasaheb Ambedkar and Prime Minister Nehru. President Rajendra Prasad and Home Minister Vallabhbhai Patel were the leaders against the Hindu Code Bill which gave women their rights.

Practice of Untouchability is a Fundamental form of Traditional Social Corruption in IndiaPratap Kumar Ghorai.Senior Research Fellow,
Dept. of Sociology Jadavpur University, KolkataSatabdi MondalResearch Fellow,
Dept. of Sociology Jadavpur University

In order to study about the practice of untouchability is a fundamental form of traditional social corruption. At first we have to understand what is untouchability; its forms and meanings and also the concept of social corruption. Untouchability is a very crucial practices among Indian caste system. India is a caste ridden society where most fundamental social stratification in caste system because caste discrimination is one of the vital instrument of deprivation of caste people those who are mainly belong to lower caste as well as 'Shudras'. From ancient or Hindu period their where mainly 'four Varna's' as 'Brahmins', 'Kshatriya', 'Vaishyas' and the 'Sudras'. Sudras are the lower caste people, who are treated as 'Antaja' or 'Untouchables'. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar has named scheduled cast as 'Dalits' because dalits are the oppressor caste by the Brahmins. The 'Jajmani' system of primitive Indian society whereas mainly two classes one was Jajman and the another was Kamin. Brahmins, Kshatriya and Vaishyas never paid the proper wages of 'Sudras'. So, in our social set up till now 'Sudras' are deprived in various aspects of society like economically deprived, political deprived, educationally deprived an also deprived Religiously. So they never enjoy equally right like other above other three varnas only Jyoti Rao Phule, and B. R. Ambedkar have thought and realised heartly the problems of 'Dalits'.

❖ Social problems and Disabilities

The untouchable caste have suffer for centuries from a number of social problems and disabilities among which the following....

(i) Lowest status in the Social Hierarchy:

In the caste hierarchy the untouchables caste are ascribed the lowest status . They are considered to be 'unholy', 'inferior', and 'low' and are impure by the other castes. They have been suffering from the stigma of 'untouchability'. Their very touch is considered to be polluting by their higher caste people. Hence they have been subject to exploitation and humiliation. They have been treated as the servants of the other caste people. The untouchable castes have always served the other castes, but the attitude of other castes is of total indifference and contempt. They were kept at a distance from other caste people. In some instances (in South India) even the exact distance which an upper caste man was expected to keep between himself and the "untouchables" were specified. During the early times, they were branded as "Paschamas, Antyajas, Svapachas, AtiShudras, Chandalas, Avarnas "etc. and were given the bottom most place in society. The distinction that arose between Aryans and non- Aryan's. Centuries ago culminated in the practice of untouchability. Anaryas were branded as "dasas" or servants and kept at a distance. They were not given any good position in the army, politics and public life but made to follow "unclean" occupations such as scavenging, removing, human waste and dead animals, tanning, shoe-making, spinning, washing clothes, barbaring, supplying water and so on. The physical touch of these people following "unclean" occupations was considered enough to pollute the so called upper caste [verna] people. Thus the so called “untouchables” were not only kept at a distance but also denied of various civic facilities. Several disabilities were attributed to them.

(ii) Civic Disabilities:

For a long time the untouchable castes were not allowed to use public places and avail civic facilities such as -village wells, ponds, temples, hotels, schools, hospitals, lecture halls, dharmashalas, etc. They were forced to live on the outskirts of the towns and villages during the early days. Even today they are segregated from others spatially. They were not allowed to enter the houses of the higher castes. They were allowed to work as labourers during construction or repair, storing grains, etc. But later the houses were purified by sprinkling cow urine or cow dung . In South India, restrictions were imposed on the mode of construction of their houses, types of dresses and patterns of their ornamentation. Some lower caste people were not all owed to carry umbrellas, to wear shoes or golden ornaments and to milk cows. They were prohibited from covering the upper part of their body. The services of barbers ,washerman and tailors were refused to them . In the court of justice they had to shout from the pointed distance and take their change of being heard.

(iii) Educational Disabilities:

The untouchables were forbidden from taking up to education during the early days. Sanskrit education was denied to them. Public schools and other educational institutions were closed for them. Even today majority of them are illiterate and ignorant.

The literacy level of Scheduled castes is extremely poor[21.4% in 1981].It is less than half of the national average[41.3%].In states like Bihar, Rajasthan, Madhya Pradesh and Uttar Pradesh their literacy level is less than 1/4 of the national average. The literacy percentage among the SCs, however, had incresed to 37.41% in 1991[SC males 49.9% and SC females 23.76%] and the corresponding national average figures were 52.21%[64.13% and 39.29%].Female literacy is still poorer among them. In 1991,only 23.76%of SC women were literate while in Bihar, SC women's literacy level stood at the lowest minimum. At college level and university level and in professional courses, comparatively a very limited number of S.C. student are studying even after more than five decades of independence.

• Poor Educational Performance:

The performance of scheduled castes students in the education field is also relatively poor. The pass percentage of the SCs at the high school level is 53,at the graduate level 35,and the post-graduate level 60.The corresponding general pass percentage figures are: 65,57 and 76 respectively. In professional courses the poor quality of their education is very much evident. The enrolment of SCs at primary ,secondary and high school levels is also far less than the national average.

(iv) Religious Disabilities:

The untouchables also suffer from religious disabilities even today. They are not allowed to enter temples in many places. Even after the successful campaign of Dr.Ambedkar demanding the untouchables right to enter the Kalaram temple at Nasik in 1930,things have not improved much. The Brahmins who offer their priestly services to some lower castes, are not prepared to officiate the ceremonies of the 'untouchable' castes. They do not even bow down to the deities of these 'untouchable' castes. The Vedic mantras which are considered to be more pure ,could not be listened to and chanted by the untouchables because of the taboos. They were only permitted to make use of the 'Upanishadic Mantras' which are considered to be less pure and more secular. Burial grounds were also denied to them in many places. However, things have started improving radically in these matters especially after 1990s.

In Gujarat where no 'Dalit Woman' can cover the upper part of their body, because the higher caste people thought that Dalit woman at the fundamental means of their entertainment higher caste people, always ignore Dalit male and never touched with them where has created several disabilities an handicaps for Dalits male persons but on the contrary they are more used to with Dalites woman for their domestic work biasness entertainment and so on. Except it the dalit people are not able to take the service of Barbar, washerhman, Tailor, Goldsmiths. From the ancient period of time Indian varna system has a strong root in society. Caste system is a fundamental forms of social stratification. So, caste based stratified society has created the most pathological condition of the lower caste people. So, this stigmatisation of untouchability is an vital instrument of deprivation and corruption of the lower caste people. Century after country's higher caste people have neglected, ignored and deprived the lower caste people from the rights and responsibility of society . If you see the pre-british India economical system that was Bartar system named as jajmani system where has established jajman and Kamins, jajmans those who has ownership of land an belong to higher caste and other hand the kamins lower caste and has no ownership of land .So, from the grassroots level the practices of untouchability and hierarchical caste discrimination is nothing but and instrument of deprivation of lower caste people. This lower caste deprivation is a fundamental forms of social corruption of India and for this caste based deprivation is the barrier of development of the nation. So, if we analyzed the various forms of corruption where we can see casted based deprivation is the fundamental form of social corruption which has strong effects on Political Corruption, Economical Corruption, Religious Corruption and Corruption in Education.

(a) Political corruption:

Political corruption is a vital problem for the development of India . Indian patriarchal Brahmin ideology based society has it's a main traits as deprivation to the lower caste people. They have no right on common property resources of village community so gradually from the pre-british Indian society to till now scheduled caste are oppressed by the higher caste people. Various developmental measure has taken centrally state wise constitutionally and legally yet till now scheduled caste men and women are facing various kinds of atrocities like rape, murder, toucher etc. No political institution and personalities never thought an acted to remove this type of atrocities from dalities rather most of the political personalities are going to create an anti reservation public opinion because they never thought humanistically but politicaly . So political corruption are the fundamental form of deprivation if we analyzed the real form of social stratification of in Indian society .Forms is caste system and root cause are political corruption of higher caste as well as political leader because till now if we observed 90% leaders are belong to higher caste community.

(b) Economical corruption:

Economical corruption like a blood cancer of our Indian society because each and every economist politician planner always thought about the problems of higher caste people and try to fulfil their demands .They never thought about the deprived section of society those who are Dalities ,sheduled caste untouchables and landless labourers. Most of the people are agricultural dependend their source of income is cultivation and this cultivation many may be seasonal an half yearly. Without cultivation they have to work mainly as daily labourers they don't have any scope to manage to provided the daily job as well as job of 365 days . We have seen into most of the Governmental Development project like MGNREGA which is known as 100 days work . Where most of the Panchayat Proadhan and Panchayat Member are selecting the beneficiaries according to their party color and relatives, so, our grassroots corruption is existed strongly except it in rural India the main functional institution is Panchayati Raj . This Panchayati Raj system developed for local development and correctional work. Development for the poor needy those to has no way to consume the food of proper calories and to fulfil the basic needs like foo, shelter and clothing .Unfortunately the dreams was to develop the rural society but reality is different Panchayati Raj institution become and institution of big farmers and Panchayat officials and also Panchayat corruption a vital problems and draw backs of the village development as well as the poor and needy rural people.

(c) Religious Corruption:

Religion is a happy hunting ground of corruption from pre British Indian society to till now where has mainly four 'varnas' as Brahmins, kshatriya, hierarchical social stratification have existed strongly. The higher caste Brahmins are an unproductive parasites class who mainly depend on other three varnas by using the religious norms and ritualities they are using religious sacred ailments as an instrument of corruption. If we analysed the historical context of the Indian and European society where we have seen that Brahminism and priesthood is the fundamental factors of religious degradation because most of the brahmins and priest never judge religion as higher science of god and never realised the welfareistic and developmental role of religion they only used religion for their own profit and benefit so they use it as an instrument of corruption.

(d) Educational Corruption :

Education is all round development because education can help to develop the personality of an individual as well as social development. Unfortunately this educational system are operating by the orthodox brahmins so education has lost its liberal traits. Educational value has lost by the prevelance of the private gain attitude or profit making attitude. So, educational system became corrupted this kind of educational degradation is very harmful for social development. At first we have to cherish educational value among all the sections of society. Though our India government implemented certain constitution and legal amendments are :

1. Article 46 promotes educational and economic interests of Scheduled Castes, Scheduled Tribes and other weaker sections.
2. Article 330 reserves representation for Scheduled Castes and Schedule Tribes in the Houses of the people.
3. Article 335 mentions the claims of Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes to services and posts.

The "Article 17" of the Constitution which declares the practice of untouchability Punishable offence, the parliament passed the "Untouchability offences Act, 1955".It was later substituted by "the protection of Civil Rights Act, 1976". According to this Act the offences of untouchability include the following."Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes [Prevention of Atrocities] Act, 1989",which came into force on 30th January 1990,specifies offences, which are considered as atrocities and provides for deterrent punishments for commission of the same.

Conclusion:

In the concluding part we can say that the practice of untouchability is not only a disabilities but also a corrupted practice because higher caste people have used the concept untouchability as an strong instrument for making division of society and promoted inequality among the people and also provided religious conversion where upper caste people are enjoying each an every rights and rituals of the society, and the other hand lower caste people become deprived by loot, molestation, burning of house, rape and murder. unfortunately till now no state government and central government are giving right judgement and proper justice. Because most of the leaders belong to higher caste, they never thought and realized the problems of untouchability.

Abstract

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, in those days, popularly known as the father of modern India. He has immensely contributed to India's development in the modernistic sense of the term. He deserves to be a father of modern India. His Contributions in the field of socio-economic and political fields are glazing and without which India's economy would have been crippled and stunted. His industrial development package is essentially an indispensable for backward India. This contribution of Dr B.R. Ambedkar came as a boon for the nation. Similarly, his agricultural and multi-purpose hydrological schemes he devised for India are outstanding and stupefying. And also, his book called "problem of Indian rupee" has become the potential base for establishing Reserve Bank of India. Free education was also his idea and catering, consistently to the educational needs of all citizens. Finally his entire involvement in India's progress is based on socio-economic justice. The abstract is dealt with in detail as the following.

Keywords : Agriculture, Hydrological, Industrial, Justice, Development, Education.

Introduction:

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was gravely considered to be iconoclastic social reformer, reputed Indian jurist, great economist, seasoned politician, distinct philosopher, horrendous writer, great scholar, eminent educationist, chief architect of the Indian Constitution, and father of Modern India. He is a unique and outstanding example of success. Ambedkar fought to uproot the social evils and struggled to restore the right of the Dalit's, women and other socially, economically exploited/deprived classes. As a social reformer Dr. Ambedkar emphasized upon a much broader national base with redefining Indian system with Inclusive growth and cultural integration without caste discrimination. The contribution of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar is not to be forgotten and is memorable. He laid special stress on dignity, unity, freedom, and rights for all Indian citizens as enshrined in the constitution.

Fight Against Untouchability

Untouchability is the bane of the Indian society. Dr Ambedkar knew that the untouchability had ruined the untouchables and the nation. For the eradication of untouchability he adopted consistent, efficacious constitutional method to accomplish his supreme goal. Dr. Ambedkar was appointed on the Constituent Assembly to safeguard the interests of the untouchables. During the evolution of the constitutional process he was always careful that the interests of the depressed classes were protected. Ambedkar's principle idea of fraternity among all people was incorporated in the preamble of the Constitution. Article 17 provides for the abolition of untouchability and its practice in any form is inhuman, anti-humanity and antinational, hence it must be forbidden by all means.

Ambedkar Contribution to Labour Rights

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was a pioneer in advocating for the rights of labour. He played a major role in the passage of an eight-hour working day law. Ambedkar not only piloted but also an instrumental in the passage of amicable measures for labour welfare by laying the firm foundation for the basic structure of the Government's labour policy. He handled the tangled problems of labour with utmost subtlety and won esteem and veneration from the employees and the employers. Ambedkar strongly pleaded for living wages, hygienic working conditions and the freedom of peasants from the grip of devilish landlords in the round table conference. He worked tenaciously with his razor sharp intellect to introduce major labour reforms keeping in view the welfare of labour.

Gender Equality

Dr Ambedkar's major mission was to restore equal status to women on par with men by providing special provisions in the Indian constitution. He felt that the sexual discrimination must be routed from the Indian society and each one should get equal opportunity in the society. Ambedkar's Constitution offered women equal status in the rationality of the law. He bitterly scoffed at all the traditions and customs that undermined the equality of women. He favoured economic independence of women. He waged a war for women emancipation. He fought against wretched discrimination unleashed against women until his death.

The Indian Constitution enshrines within itself the gender parity across its Directive Principles, Fundamental Duties, the Preamble, and Fundamental Rights. Despite the Indian Constitution's guarantee of equal rights, it authorizes the Centre to involve effective actions in support of women. Our laws, schemes and initiatives have been aimed at benefitting women in various fields keeping in with provisions enshrined in the Indian constitution.

Maternity and Ambedkar:

As a Labour Minister in the Viceroy executive council between 1942 and 1946, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was instrumental in bringing the Mines Maternity Benefit Bill for women in India. Stirring the feminist discourse of his times, both the Dalit Feminist movement, and the Indian Feminist movement concurrently. Concern was to protect the rights of women employees during pregnancy and after childbirth; Indian law considers it as mandatory for most establishments to offer maternity benefits to employees. The Maternity Benefit Act originally provided maternity benefit of 12 weeks, and of which about six weeks could be obtained before delivery. However in 2017, the law was amended to extend it to 26 weeks.

Linguistic Organization of State:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar after having done the entire procedural work working on the Constitution of India came out with perspective of reorganized India. He opined that a state should have a people of one language to have uniformity and linguistic culture. Also there should be two states where people spoke the same language. He proposed splitting single-language states. Ambedkar not only supported formation of Linguistic state but also proposed that a geographically conducive people speaking one language should be organized into one state. Ambedkar gave more preference to the size of the states than Language.

Hindu Code Bill

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar has tried to dismantle the hindrances in the way of advancement of women in India. His strong concern for women was manifested in the form of the Hindu Code Bill in Parliament on 11th April 1947, the debate on the bill spread almost on four years but still it remains inconclusive because of strong opposition from the Hindu orthodoxy in the post-independent India. The Bill provided some distinct basic rights to women. Right to property, Order of succession to property, Maintenance, marriage, divorce, adoption, minority and guardianship. Which Hindu code Bill incorporated in favor of discriminated women folk.

The Bill sought to abolish various marriage systems among Hindus and established monogamy as the only legal system. It aimed at conferment of right to property and adoption of women. It provided for restitution of conjugal rights and judicial separation in tune with progressive modern thought.

Agricultural-Green Revolution :

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's view dwelt upon agriculture, land holding, collective farming and land revenue as the most useful in the present time. Ambedkar argued that land was only one among many factors of production and the productivity of one factor of production is dependent upon the proportion in which the other factors of production are combined. He proposed nationalization of entire agricultural land with collective farming as the solution for the ills of agrarian situations. It should have to be the state's obligation to provide the capital essential for agriculture and industry. Ambedkar's scheme of thought in this regard was that agriculture should be the state industry. He also suggested for setting up of an MSP at least 50% above the cost of production.

He mentioned that holdings of lands by few people is an acute problem of Indian agriculture which has various disadvantages, like difficulties in cultivation and utilization and resources, increasing cost, low productivity, inadequate income and low standard of living. His thoughts on agriculture are found in his article "Small Holdings in India and Their Remedies"(1917) and also in "Status and Minorities"(1947).

Hydrological Field Dams

Dr Ambedkar had engineered and architecture the water and river navigation policy in India. He developed new water and power policy to prudently utilize the water resources of the country in the interest of the whole humanity. He rightly felt and visualized that a multipurpose project could be a fine prospect for the appropriate management of the river. A possibility of controlling floods, securing an area under perennial irrigation with consequent insurance against famine, and much needed supply of power for uplifting the living standard of poverty-fraught people of India.

He has also given workable solutions to inter-state water disputes. Ambedkar contributed in a significant measure to the making of policy on water resources and power, India follows same even today.

The water storage scheme that Ambedkar envisaged would give irrigation and electricity plus a long line of internal navigation. He believed that the multipurpose use of water would convert the mishaps into benevolence. This perspective he subsequently emphasized for projects on Damodar, Mahanadi, Sone and other inter-State rivers. Based on his own vision, dr. B.R.Ambedkar executed his workable scheme on Damodar, Mahanadi Sone projects.

Banking Sector –Reserve bank of India

The Reserve Bank of India was conceived on 1 April 1935 to respond to economic troubles after the First World War. It was conceptualized as per the guidelines, presented by Dr Ambedkar before the Hilton Young Commission known as Royal Commission on Indian Currency and Finance, based on his book, The Problem of the Rupee – Its Origin and Its Solution.

Justice- Economical, Social, and Political

Dr. Ambedkar battled to change the existing social order which stood upon caste and class and tried to plant the seed of 'social justice' by advocating various issues pertaining to plight of caste system and untouchability, human rights, labourers, women rights. He considered the caste system as the vicious evil of Hindu religion, and the Varna system is the root cause of all inequality and is also the parent of the caste system and untouchability.

Dr. Ambedkar of the opinion that all types of oppression, denial, exploitation and injustices can be removed by the state. He also made many provisions in constitution of India for SC/ST/OBC/Religious minorities, women and children. The State has been endowed with duty and responsibility of protecting, promoting and shielding the interest of weaker sections of society.

Social justice implies that all benefits and privileges available in the country should be shared by those who deserve it. If there is structural inequality in terms of socio-economic and political sense. Dr. Ambedkar would will to remove inequality and bring about equality. Ambedkar decided to put this onus on the shoulder of the state. The government should take affirmative action in eliminating such inequalities. According to Ambedkar, his social justice is based on moral values and self-respect. Justice situates through social, political and economic justice regulated by constitution.

Opposition to Article 370

Ambedkar was opposed to article 370 of the Constitution of India, which granted a special status to the state of Jammu and Kashmir, However it was included against his wishes. Which he believed that Jammu and Kashmir's special status would create another sovereign state within sovereign

India, provided the status is granted, it can be a potentially detrimental to the unity and integrity of the nation.

Democracy :

Dr.Ambedkar was a true democrat and believed in equality in society in all the three spheres such as social, economic and political. He had invincible faith in democracy. In his conceived exploitation-free society, democracy has an extra-ordinary role. He said democracy means one person one vote and one vote one value. Democracy means empowerment of a person through participation in the process of decision-making relating to himself/herself. To Ambedkar democracy means liberty, equality and fraternity. His conception of democracy appears to be purely people centric. Adult suffrage was introduced in India in the true spirit of democracy. Dr Ambedkar rushed for immediate introduction of adult suffrage to be the basis of representation both for the central and state legislatures.

Reservation :

Ambedkar's life mission was to uplift the untouchables and other downtrodden masses from the unequal to that of equality on parity basis in socio-economic status. For achieving this goal the reservation policy or protective/ positive discrimination was advocated and implemented by him to impress the conditions of the depressed and down-trodden sections of Hindu society.

Ambedkar had vehemently pursued special reservation facilities for the SC and STs in the field of education in both sets of governments. He enshrined the principles of reservation in the constitution for improvement of socio-economic and political conditions of SC and ST's and to further enable them to involve educationally, economically and socially, with extra support in the form of reservation and concessions to uplift them to the level of the advanced classes.

Education

In educational sector Babasaheb's contribution is just stupendous in terms of universal applicability in India. He believed that education is not only the birth right of every human being but also a weapon of social change. The very objective of education is to bring social, economic and political transformation of an individual. A large section of the people of India had remained destitute of the right to education for a long time because of the prevailing social inequality in India. He was an ardent supporter of women education. He also stressed upon the importance to moral education.

Conclusion

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar's contribution fundamentally, in every field of India is glaring. He has made dent in all walks of life. His contributions are not, as others, impractical and unworkable. He was not a dreamer, fanciful, abstract minded and idealist ideas are like seeds that grow and grow into—huge tree. After having gone through his achievements across areas of India's growth and equality oriented. It is quite convincing that he is the real father of modern India.

His efforts to retrieve India from antiquated situation is horrendous and is just unimaginable in India's situation, with whatever degree, is not an easy task. The work is to bring equality in a diseased society by herculean task but Babasaheb has succeeded because of his sky-high intellect, perseverance, unmitigated capacity, zeal, commitment, devotion and his dream of fruition.

The ideological foundation he has laid down to this country is unshakable and it seems that India's growing economy is still benefiting the nation. The voiceless unequal and oppressed classes of people in India, if prospering, is all because of Ambedkar's enduring endeavor which is unforgettable. He is still living among us.

Introduction

“We want to address, analyze and give proper solutions for the caste discrimination; we need News Papers of our own, there no other option” (Mooknayak 1920, First Edition).

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar has not followed the then contemporary and conventional ways of journalistic writing, but he opened a new way of inquiries and analytical writing with social and political context of caste and the practices of untouchability. There was a hardly any social reformer who has intensively written by addressing the issues of untouchables with contemporary social political happenings in the 1900s. M.K Gandhi used to write in Harijan (1933) for untouchables but the title of the same was considered as an insult. A high caste person cannot analyze the problems of Dalits without being with them at ground level or without becoming one of them. Dr Ambedkar has given a new beat for journalism than the traditional one. Dr Ambedkar was from the same community and has seen many critical and complex issues than any outsider who is politically aiming to write about untouchables. The same problem exists even present era because mainstream mass media hardly cover the stories based on caste discrimination.

Janata (The People) periodical has its own political importance if consider the time in which it was published. It was the same time when M.K. Gandhi used to write about untouchables, nationalists like Tilak was in hurry for independence, British Government were also dealing with India`s social cultural transformation and journalism at the same contemporary era due to socio-political movements. Every social reformer had their own publication to spread their thoughts and ideas and generate awareness among the masses. Dr Ambedkar played especially significant role in this scenario than the others because Dr Ambedkar was not directly demanding freedom from British but was more concern about the humiliating treatments given by upper caste people to untouchables. His writings are authentic.

Every word of his journalism has its unique in-depth political understanding and courage to express without mentioning any defamatory word. Janata has mentioned more about caste discrimination, demands of untouchable people from government, important speeches of Dr. Ambedkar, Issues of Muslims, issues of women, analysis of Gandhian movements, Savarkar and his movements, inter-caste marriages, and much more.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar as a journalist put rational, logical, and political lucidity in front of the readers to make them introspect rather than providing just heavy information. His line of inquiry was clear and thought centric than any political ideology. Courage is the main feature of Dr Ambedkar`s journalism, he has never ever shown any soft corner for any political personality though the personal is very much popular and with great mass support. Journalism is always powered by facts. Dr Ambedkar also put emphasis on the facts than giving opinion in his journalistic writings.

The present research paper will explore the then contemporary social and political aspects of the writings of Janata and its current significance. The main objective is to get journalistic insights of Dr Ambedkar`s radical courageous journalism which is particularly important in present context. India is facing caste-based discrimination and practices of untouchability even after independence. Present journalists and students of mass communication must know Dr Ambedkar and his journalistic writing skills to raise the voice of unheard.

Dr Ambedkar has started journalism for untouchable people with Mooknayak (1920), Bahishskrit (outcaste) Bharat (1927), Samata (1928) and The People – Janata (1930). The above-mentioned journalistic materials could not sustain much further due to financial problems, but it has produced so much to understand his journalism

Method: Discursive Analysis

Data: Articles of The People (24th November 1930- 19th October 1931)

Analysis: The research paper will explore on the social and political aspects of Dr Ambedkar`s journalism. It includes issues of Casteism, Social Movements and comments upon contemporary social reformers by The People/Janata.

Issues of Casteism and Social Discrimination:

The People has addressed particularly prominent issue in its first issue regarding caste annihilation. There was a plan of Census and some people spread a thought that we do not inform caste names by doing so we will try to demolish caste system. But a letter written by D.V. Pradhan in the first issue of The People mentions that there are chances of becoming exactly opposite of it. We should make it clear that how many castes and sub- castes are present in India. We should get the exact number to understand the reality. Even today there is a strategy not to count people by their castes in Census. There is a political step behind it. Caste based Census will reveal the actual number of castes and their population. If it will be done, then as per the population the caste or the community will demand. It will affect the present participation of the higher caste people in power. It means the need of caste-based census was first time mentioned in The People (24/11/1930)

The People has radically attacked over casteism. Ambedkar`s journalism was doubting the idea of Swaraj pioneered by Tilak. Because there are many references, we get in which it is indicated that the transfer from British to Brahmin is not the real freedom and independence. The religious monopoly of Vedic Dharma should be reduced. There no meaning of Swaraj without annihilation of caste. It is only Brahmins are interested to handover the authorities from British to them; this won`t affect the common man from untouchable community.

The issue of casteism was not just investigated by the victim`s point of view but from the higher caste because they believe and practice more than the other Hindu people. High caste people need help from low caste people because they (High Caste) people has understood that they need mass support to fight with British rule. High caste people`s population is lower than untouchables and other Hindu people. Abolishment of casteism is not just lower caste people`s duty but an ethical responsibility of high caste people that they should not practice and inform others not to do so.

(The People 29/12/1930)

Dr Ambedkar was the one and only sociologist from India who explained the caste structure and the problematic nature of the same. He not just mentioned about the problems of untouchables but clearly mentioned that Upper caste Brahmins are responsible for the sin. The monopoly of religion and caste is authorized by Brahmins. Dr. Ambedkar not just wrote about caste structure but associated it with nationalism. There is no nation for untouchables. The notion of nationalism is very wider than it is being practiced (by High Caste). Brahmins used to conduct All India Councils and, it was prohibited for untouchables; though it was for all Hindus and untouchables are also from Hindu religion! Untouchables were agitating for their right against Brahmins for their right to attend the councils being a Hindu. The India clearly wrote about this duality and injustice and published. A secretary of the council said “Untouchables are not Hindus; they are out of Chaturvarna hence we cannot include them as an audience for Hindu Sabha and we are going to make a notice of it,” The statement given by D.M. Joshi indicates the hatred of Brahmins for untouchables. These real statements against untouchables were not published by any newspapers of that time. Ambedkarist journalism is democratic in true sense because it is for the last person of the society and about their problems and solutions.

On contemporary Politicians (The People in its 10th Issue dated 13th April 1931)

Gandhi: The People could write very radically about the mass leader of India M.K. Gandhi. Gandhi and Ambedkar debate is well-known for Indians, but many newspapers have published only the positive aspects about Gandhi, and he has been considered as a modern saint of India. Dr Ambedkar is the one and only he analyzed and criticized Gandhian thoughts from untouchable’s point of view and criticized him because a Mahatma cannot deny the development and betterment of his own people. Dr Ambedkar was very sure about the euphemistic behavior of Gandhi. Though Gandhi had showed interest for the betterment of Dalits, but his framework was traditional by which no Dalit person would have achieved anything special. The People wrote about the strategic planning of Gandhi which any other press would have dared to do so. Dr Ambedkar was very strongly attacked over Gandhi from his writings.

Though Gandhi looks very sober and simple but politically he is different. He always praises Muslims and became controversial. He believes in Hindu-Muslim unity. The People has mentioned about Brahmins opinion about Gandhi. Upper caste Brahmins were concern about Gandhi because he had shown no interest regarding untouchability and it is against Brahmins Dharma. Hence, they started hating Gandhi very badly. Gandhi was so clever while dealing with issues of untouchables. Gandhi was not giving priority to the problems of untouchables. Dr Ambedkar was very sure about it and The People clearly wrote about it. Gandhi said After Swaraj I will surely handle the problems of the untouchables. The People writes: If Gandhi saying like this means supporting the upper caste people and making untouchables fools. Gandhi should come front and should behave like a true mass leader but he could not. But Gandhi only spread his irrelevant logic and wealth of vocabulary for others without any action.

2.1 Ambedkar Gandhi Meet (The People 17/08/1931)

The People has published the meeting of Dr Ambedkar with Gandhi which had taken place on 14th August 1931. The entire writing of the meeting has revealed a different aspect of Gandhi which is not yet shown or written in any mass media. The writing has revealed that Gandhi’s response towards Ambedkar was negative. Gandhi talked upon the issues of untouchability and he emphasized that he is tackling the issue since then when Ambedkar was not even born. It indicated that Gandhi was interested to gain the credit that He is the onewho is working for the untouchables and Ambedkar has hardly any experience in this field.

Dr. Ambedkar replied very nicely. He said I was not extremely interested to meet you and I really don't like to interfere unnecessarily into others business. It is only because my nearest friends insisted me hence, I am here. You are talking about annihilation of caste and its efforts, but you have just given promises nothing productive has happened till today. You said that you have spent Twenty Lac rupees, but I think it was unnecessary. I would have spent it much more appropriately than you. I am sorry but history has witnessed many Mahatmas they just come and goes like fleeting phantoms, raise dust but no level...Untouchability will be annihilated only by the efforts by the untouchable itself. I repeat I do not have nation because we are living in very humiliating conditions.

Lastly Gandhi said that he will never agree upon the political separation of untouchables, because they are inseparable part of Hindu; and not shown interest for separate electorates. According to him it won't affect them positively. Dr Ambedkar replied Thanks for saying this by your own.

The above mentioned and published meeting of Ambedkar and Gandhi is very essential to understand the political understanding of Gandhi particularly. He has shown as father of the nation, but the father had given improper treatment to his untouchable children. This kind of information is hardly available in any mainstream media. Dr Ambedkar has logically and politically replied Gandhi, but Gandhi could not give satisfactory answers to Dr Ambedkar.

The People had published it. It is a real courage for journalism because at the same time all the mass media were praising Gandhi for his social work. But Ambedkarist journalism showed the aspect of Gandhian philosophy particularly for Dalits and only a Dalit News Paper can publish it not by any upper caste

Conclusion: Ambedkar and Present Journalism in Indian Mass Media

Present contemporary journalism after the independence (after Dr. Ambedkar's mahaparinirvana) lacks proper attention to tackle the issues of untouchables. Mainstream India journalism needs power of Ambedkarist thoughts, socialistic approach, and way of inquiring political ideologies from caste context. Indian society is caste based even today. No one can skip caste equations from Indian society and politics. Present journalism try to hide or not cover the caste-based writing and just inform the readers about the events of actions. Dr Ambedkar and his journalism is need of present time because present political contexts are also based upon caste equations but hardly any journalist takes it seriously. We cannot write about caste without mentioning and understanding thoughts and philosophies of Dr Ambedkar. Not just about caste conflicts but every economic and political activities and policies can be rewrite with caste context. No sector is free from casteism in India. Politics, administration, commerce and finance, education, social activities, elections, religion, women issues all are caste centric in nature but very few journalists analyze with courage to comment directly by considering name of the people and name of the caste.

Parallel journalistic activities in which they clearly follow Dr Ambedkar's ideology. Their writings are much more fascinated by Ambedkar but those are logically not very much clear like Dr Ambedkar's writing. Dailies like Samrat, Moolnivasi, Bahujan Maharashtra, magazines like Parivartanacha Vatsaru, Vidrohi, are following the writing style of Dr Ambedkar. But we really need a perfectly balanced and deeply researched writings in mainstream journalism to understand caste issues and solutions on it. Government and higher authorities should make changes in the policies and priorities.

Generally, Indian mass media, especially the news media is in the hands of upper class and caste communities. Their economic and political interests tied with the majoritarian narratives which is Hindu centric. Dr. Ambedkar considered as anti-Hindu after the conversion into Buddhism in 1956. There is not even a single beat in the mainstream mass media which is exclusively covers social issues on the ground level. The constitution protects equality, but the mainstream newspapers rarely give enough space the way Dr. Ambedkar had given in The People.

The People has put lights upon caste issues and its analysis in real context. Dr Ambedkar has given a new vision for journalism in which the ordinary man would get information knowledge and thoughts. The People is very essential to study Dr Ambedkar beyond just a politician and economist. It has shown many interesting elements which has not revealed by any publication and mass media from this country. Dr Ambedkar and his journalism is relevant in present context much more than before. As reported by the daily Tribune (14th April 2018). The former press secretary S.N Sahu says, “Dr. Ambedkar has set a high journalism bar.” Not even the technology driven contemporary mass media have ever tried to reach the level. Dr. Ambedkar is an only person whose journalistic ethics can't be matched. Ethics in the post-truth, post globalization era should be redefined on the ethical journalistic approach set by Dr. Ambedkar in India. His journalism was the real voice of the unheard. The journalism had a power of social reforms and truth. After several decades, the present social conditions of Indian society remains same, but we lack the journalistic approach and social revolutionary power of Dr Ambedkar in real sense. The need and scope of Dr Ambedkar`s journalistic approach becomes more relevance in the 21st century where social harmony is in danger and a truth-seeker (satyashodhak) like Dr Ambedkar the need of time.

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar : As An EconomistMs.Rohini Das S.

Previous Guest Faculty,

Department of Economics, Sree Narayana College, Kollam

Abstract

Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar, a multidisciplinary specialist made immense contributions to almost all branches of economics. His ideas in economics were unique and even today it is being followed by policy makers for formulating various policies and programmes. Moreover, still the nation is enjoying the benefits of various schemes laid down by him like dearness allowance, leave benefits, ESI, right to strike etc. His contributions in the field of framing monetary policy, empowering women, bringing land reforms, making policies in power sector etc are highly appreciable. But unfortunately most people are unaware of these contributions made by him.

Key words: Mahar watan, Baluta, women empowerment, Labour policy, Grid system, devaluation.

Introduction

DR B R Ambedkar was one of the first prominent professionally trained economists in India. Even though his contributions spread across various fields like history, sociology, philosophy, anthropology, politics etc, contributions to economics marked admirable. It is vivid from his achievement of double doctoral degrees from London School of Economics in 1923 and from Columbia University in 1927. Moreover, he was an eminent teacher who taught economics for 3 years at a Mumbai college. It is highly remarkable and appreciable that he completed 29 courses in economics, which is considerably a greater number than the courses which he had completed in other areas. So whenever we consider his name as an architect of modern India, contributions in the field of economics lie far above his contributions in other fields. He fought against social discrimination leveled against Dalits, women and Labor. Let us take a look into the contributions of Dr.B R Ambedkar to the field of economics. Here, for the convenience of understanding, the entire contributions are divided into the following headings:

Monetary Policy

The work 'The problem of rupee; its origin and solution' by Dr.Ambedkar clearly tells about his view on various aspects of monetary policy. His contributions were not only related to framing monetary policy but also he played well in the conceptualization of RBI. The formation of Reserve Bank of India in 1935 was guide lined by the ideas of Dr Ambedkar. He presented his guidelines, working style and outlook before the Hilton Young Commission (also known as Royal Commission on Indian Currency and Finance). All these were passed under the name of RBI Act 1934 by the legislative assembly. He analysed very intensively the currency system prevailed in India between 1800 and 1920 and put forward a new currency system. That was against the thoughts of John Maynard Keynes. He suggested a modified gold standard which according to him more stable currency system especially for developing countries like India, while Keynes favored gold exchange standard in his work 'Indian Currency and Finance' .He was in the opinion that country should emphasise more on price stability than on exchange stability and was against the idea of money supply linked to gold. His main intention was to protect poor people. More than a theoretical perspective his ideas have great practical applicability. He was in a thought that should we stabilize our exchange and at what rate?

He favored a limited devaluation of rupee as it is convenient for both business class as well as earning class. He pointed out that a steep devaluation ultimately will lead to a high inflation level and is a burden for earning class. Due to inflation their real wage rate decreases and harmfully affects their purchasing power and standard of living. The benefits of low exchange rate in the form of increase in exports will be entirely wiped out by exporters and business men. So in his view, the source of devaluation is not coming from outside the country but from within the country, from the cost of one class (earning class) to the gain as another class. For him in order to stabilize rupee, stabilizing purchasing power is inevitable. In his book 'Problems of Indian Rupee' he suggested changing currency in each 10 years for checking inflation. He favored automatic monetary management. For him, the prime motive of the nation must be stabilizing rupee and purchasing power.

Land reforms

Dr. Ambedkar fought for landless poor and labourers. He gave much importance to the agricultural sector keeping in mind that India is predominantly an agrarian economy. Through land reforms, he tried to uplift the untouchables who were predominantly landless or small cultivators. During his time, rural Dalits were suffering from a lot of exploitation. In his book 'Small holding in India and their Remedies' he clearly argued against this exploitative land tenure system. As a solution to this, he submitted a bill in the state assembly to put an end to the exploitation by lenders. He fought against Mahar watan, khoti system and propounded collective farming.

The Mahar Watan system exploited people who belong to the Mahar caste, was an outcome of The Bombay Hereditary Offices Act 1874. They usually received a small piece of land called 'Vatan' to cultivate and part of the crop was taken away by the government as 'Baluta'. In order to abolish this system, he presented a bill in poona session of Bombay Legislative Council in 1937 after 10 years of long agitation since 1927. The 'Khoti' system prevailed in some parts of Maharashtra, in which the khots like Zamindars had the right to hold land. They employed farmers on this land, collected revenue and part of it given to the government. The khots severely exploited the tenants and oppressed to the level of poverty by misusing their powers. DR Ambedkar introduced a bill for abolishing this khoti system and ensuring a reasonable payment for the tenants by suggesting a direct link between the government and the tenants.

DR Ambedkar pointed out the importance of intensive cultivation, rather than physical extension. He found out that deterioration in agriculture was mainly due to small and fragmented landholding is the result of enormous pressure of population on land and not just due to law of inheritance. Along with that, he also pointed out that it is not only the size of land holding but also the proportion in which other factors combined with land determines its efficiency (economic land holding). He suggested industrialisation as a solution to agricultural illness by absorbing population pressure on land. In order to uplift the agricultural sector, he put forward nationalization of the agriculture sector with collective farming, which he imagined was suitable for a democratic country like India. For him, agriculture should be a state industry. So he advocated collective farming and suggested guidelines for this. Accordingly, the state is responsible for acquiring the entire land and dividing it into standard size for collective farming. The cultivators should be the residents of the village and they should undertake cultivation according to the rules and regulations of the government. There should be no discrimination either on the basis of caste, creed or like landlord, tenant, landless labourer etc. All infrastructure facilities should be provided by the state and in return entitled to collect revenue and to levy various charges on the produce of the farm. Thus he can be considered as the first Indian economist who analysed the problem of sub division and fragmentation of land and made a clear definition of economic holding of land.

Labour Sector Reforms

Dr. Ambedkar had immensely contributed to the upliftment of labour force in India. Today what developments we are seeing in the labour sector is the result of what hardships once the man has undergone. Now Labour Economics emerged as a specialised branch of Economics, thanks to Dr Ambedkar. He brought several labour reforms. He is the person behind reducing working hours from 12 to 8hrs, made possible in the 7th session of Labour Conference in New Delhi in 1942. In order to place equal opportunity for workers and employers in planning Labour policy and strengthening labour movement, he set up 'Tripartite Labour Council'. He introduced The Indian Trade union (amendment) Bill on November 8 1943 for compulsory acknowledgment of employers to trade union. Being a Labour member of viceroy's executive council from 1942 to 1946 he initiated various measures to upgrade the productivity of workers by enhancing them with proper education, adequate health care measures, maternity leave, other provisions for women workers etc. During the period of II world war he guided Indian labourers.

Industrialisation and economic expansion gave great hope to entrepreneurs and managers while labourers lagged behind in getting their due share. Considering the needs and grievances of the landless poor tenants, agriculturist and workers he formed Independent Labour Party (IPL). He recognized the need to strike and leveled against the introduction of Industrialist Dispute Bill 1937, as it is against the worker's right to strike. Dr Ambedkar enacted the ESI scheme for workers. Among East Asian nations the position of India is the first in bringing Insurance Act for the well being of employees. All the employment benefits that we are enjoying today like dearness allowance, leave benefit, employee insurance, medical leave, equal pay for equal work, minimum wage, periodic revision of pay scale etc are the result of hardships once undertaken by Dr Ambedkar.

Women Empowerment

Dr Ambedkar can be considered as the first Indian who raised his voice for women empowerment by eliminating all the obstacles from their path of progress by formulating various policies and laws. He gave immense support for women workers in various aspects of their life. He implemented 'Mines Maternity Benefit (Amendment) Bill' 1943, which guaranteed maternity benefits to them. He is the first Indian strongly supported for equal wage for equal work irrespective of gender, for this 'The Equal Remuneration Act 1976' passed. He framed special laws for women including 'Women and child Labour Protection Act', 'Restoration of Ban' on employment of women on underground work in coal mines, 'Women Labour Welfare Fund' etc. All these contributed to the socio-economic empowerment of women. Today government of India has also recognised women's issues and their contributions to the economy. Now the government has initiated so many programmes for their empowerment like 'Mahila E-haat', 'Beti Bachao, Beti Padhao', 'One stop Centre Scheme', 'Working Women Hostels', 'Swadhar Greh', 'STEP' (The Support to Training and Employment Programme for Women) etc.

Power Sector Developments

The vision of electrifying the nation was brought up by BR Ambedkar in the early 1940s, and then he was chairman of the Policy Committee on Public Works and Electric power. Under the guidelines of Dr Ambedkar, the Labour department decided to establish 'Central Technical Power Board' (CTPB). He pointed out the significance and need for the 'Grid system in the power sector, even today it is functioning successfully. He is the brain behind training the best engineers overseas. He advocated for a centralised system in power sector while studying the problems and opportunities for electricity development in India. His vision was that only cheap and abundant electricity could be provided through centralized system to ensure success of industrialisation and bringing socio economic development. Today our government has initiated so many projects at the central level for electrifying the entire nation like 'Pradhan Mantri Sahaj Bijili Har Ghar Yojana' in September 2017. The Prime Minister announced the completion of electrification of all census villages on April 28, 2018. In this ground 'World Energy Outlook 2018', the international Energy Agency termed India a "star performer". Dr Ambedkar and his ideas deserve a big salute for enabling our nation to attain this greatest achievement in power sector.

Federal Finance

In India, the federal finance system of administration came from British colonial rule. Dr. Ambedkar very clearly brought in to light the exploitation of East India Company and colonial British rule in his book 'East India Company's administration in India and Financial matters'. He favored a decentralized administrative system for ensuring the economic welfare of the people. It includes state revenue in the form of tax, public expenditure, public debt and the limitations faced by central state and local bodies. He suggested that each administrative unit should be given independent power to frame its policies to raise its own finance. His canons of public expenditure are principle of faithfulness, wisdom and economy. According to Ambedkar the British came to India not for public service but for commerce and business, that they exploited our resources. Accordingly he divided the federal financial system into 3 stages: 1. Budget through delegation (1871-1876-1877), Budget through division of revenue (1877-1878), Budget through financial provisions (1877-1878 to 1881-1882). His independent study regarding fiscal policy of the government from crown system and region (prants) of East India Company and British rule during the period between 1833 and 1919 contributed inevitably for framing India's Federal Finance system theoretically and practically. After independence, the Federal Finance system was incorporated into the Indian constitution. Separate powers were assigned for states and centre.

Conclusion

The nation is committed to Dr Ambedkar for his valuable contributions to our economic history; even today, his ideas are alive in different economic aspects. His effort in formulating economic policies of post independent India, contributions in other areas like monetary economics, agricultural economics, industrial economics, federal finance, labour economics etc are gaining momentum. But the contradictory fact is that even though his contributions in economics overwhelm all other contributions in different disciplines, even economic aspirants aren't aware of this. So it is time to include his contributions in our academic curriculum to unveil the fact that he was the brain behind the present economic gains that we are enjoying today.

Ambedkar in the Digital Age: Caste, Gender and Democracy

Abhishek Kumar

PhD Scholar, Department of Sociology,
Babasaheb Bhimrao Ambedkar University, Lucknow

Abstract

The paper attempts to comprehend the complexities of caste, gender, and democracy by analysing different aspects of Ambedkar's writings and other related texts. It also aims to uncover the similarities and disparities between digital and physical realities. It has been discovered that, like offline environments, online outlets reflect oppressive and abusive practises against women and marginalised caste groups, and are therefore, with few exceptions, clearly representations of the same real-world phenomena.

Keywords Caste, Gender, Democracy, Digitalisation, Reconstruction

Introduction

B. R. Ambedkar, a champion for women and human rights and a leading social reformer, has given a great deal to the world's crucial understanding of democracy, freedom and governance. His conceptualization of the genesis and continuity of the subservience of castes and women is the product of thorough socio-historical analysis and the idea that the quest for human rights and social justice is of great significance and fundamental to a respectful existence. By getting into his understanding of the real world through his writings, this article seeks to explore the reconstruction of caste and gender identities through virtual spaces such as the internet or mass media. The future of democracy, in its entirety, in the digital age, is also being examined.

Methodology

This study paper provides a narrative analysis of caste, gender, and democracy using secondary information sources and other related materials.

Caste in India: Working Prospects and Change

Caste is a hierarchical grouping of people in which their mobility of social status is severely restricted. Ambedkar (1917), one of India's most learned personalities, has excoriated the caste system for lacking any scientific basis for its classification into fixed, watertight compartments that perpetuate graded inequality. Supporters of this system argue that it allows society to function more interdependently. Ambedkar (1917), on the other hand, concluded after a thorough historical examination of various religious and socio-economic texts that caste serves no useful purpose in society, but rather promotes corruption and exploitation of people. It smothers the public spirit and sense of public charity by advocating responsibility as caste loyalty, resulting in forced exclusion and unfavourable inclusion (Ambedkar, 1917; Sen, 2000). Ambedkar (1917) identified the division of castes into different groups as the foundation of privilege and exploitation, and described it as a division of labourers rather than a division of labour because it stifles innovation and fosters distrust between them.

Many modern liberal thinkers believe that caste is evolving in Indian society, and have attributed various aspects of change to it (Kumar, 2014; Jodhka, 2015). The evolution of caste can be seen by listing some of them and grouping them under structural, functional, and attitudinal changes:

1) Structural change

Many believe that structural support for brahmin supremacy has dwindled. With the advancement of educational attainment, and legal & constitutional support, the concepts of equality, liberty, and fraternity gained traction. Special constitutional provisions provided to certain groups of people from the weaker sections of the society under Part XVI have boosted their confidence and provided them with opportunities, as well as enabling them to stand firm against exploitation in some cases.

2) Functional change and change in status fixation

Some believe that occupational flexibility has resulted in a shift in status fixation (Jodhka, 2015). Liberalized constraints and advancement of means of transport and communication have brought intergenerational mobility in education for women and marginalised caste groups. The lifestyle has conflated hygiene rules with caste restrictions, making it easier to maintain caste hierarchy in terms of pure and impure. However, marriage restrictions remain in effect, and any change is met with vehement societal opposition.

3) Attitudinal Change

Ascriptive status benefits only the upper caste elites, not the general public. People in the middle of a shift in attitude towards economic benefits and the exercise of power over others also influenced changes the economic scale, on the other hand, believe in a performance-based hierarchy while maintaining ritual status. As a result, for them, the law of karma and the doctrine of soul transmigration have been diluted by hard work.

Caste discrimination has evolved into a more effect-oriented phenomenon, whereas, the philosophical foundations of caste discrimination continue to be rigidly enforced, even if latently. According to Ambedkar (1917), caste has its genesis and perpetuation in patriarchal control over women and marriage choices. As a result, caste has never been free of women's exploitation. With few exceptions, patriarchal forces continue to hold women captive, and the freedom to choose one's marriage partner, which is a personal and private matter, is heavily influenced by cultural dictations and religious sanctions.

Gender and Patriarchy: Interrelated Evolutionism

Gender is a social construct that divides people into sexes, each with their own set of social roles. Sexuality has always been seen as a gateway to culture, and cultural dispositions have always dominated this realm. Consequently, patriarchy emerged as a result of dominance over sexual desires. The purpose was also to give control of property rights to a small group of people in a closed circle with caste and ethnic boundaries (Ambedkar, 1917; Rodrigues, 2002).

Gender roles are also defined as the ascriptive status of sexes within the binary of men and women. This has been used to draw dividing lines between the sexes, with females assigned to unpaid care work and described as emotional and weak, in need of male protection. Outside work was something that men reserved for themselves. Therefore, there is a complex and interconnected evolutionism between gender and patriarchy.

Caste and gender construction also share a lot of similarities in terms of social role allocation, private and public space engagement, occupational boundaries, marriage restrictions, property rights, and socio-ritual privileges. Gender has only two divisions, caste has four, excluding untouchables, and there are many more subdivisions in the hierarchical orders. Both caste and gender discrimination, on the other hand, is a pattern-oriented phenomenon with the presumption of superiority and inferiority, as well as marginalisation as an effect. As a result, caste and gender are intertwined aspects that define some groups' privileges while marginalising others.

Caste and Gender: Digital Reflections

Digital sociality is fostering virtual human interaction and socialisation in today's world, which is dominated by communication and networking grids. Friendships, relationships, marriages, and other social connections are all pronounced and carried out by the use of social media sites. However, the online world, like the physical world, is not immune to power dynamics, and digital networks have once again become a reflection of socioeconomic inequality and marginalisation.

In the case of gender abuse, multiple threats and offensive language appear on social media platforms on a daily basis in an attempt to silence women's voices in developing countries like India. This not only works against the person to whom it may be addressed, but it also sends a message that men are superior to other sexes in positions of authority. Women's socio-historical disadvantages have a detrimental effect on their share of benefits in modern society as well. Women's virtual movement in the online realm is regulated by their digital engagement, as the movement of women in traditional societies was restricted in order to control their choices, especially sexuality, resulting in a large gender digital divide in men's favour (Kumar, 2018).

Furthermore, the role of family in one's friendship remains intact, reinforcing the notion of same-gender friendship, and it's difficult to allow friendship between people of different genders, even online, without attaching any negative connotations to it. And if it does happen, it will be subjected to a variety of restrictions. True, fear of being watched has harmed the psychological and emotional wellbeing of the younger generation more than anything else. Resistance to patriarchal subjugation and inequality has, on the other hand, made a way through online media channels, as seen in the #MeToo movement. However, only a limited number of people are able to tackle the social stigma and come forward to speak freely about their experiences of exploitation and violence.

Another factor that has been expressed heavily on digital platforms is caste. Today, economic, educational, and occupational statuses play a significant role in digital relationships. However, the core conditions for any involvement are still religious, ritual, and social, with caste identities playing a major role. As much of the space is occupied and dominated by upper caste elites, the digitalisation of caste has diversified its connotation and ill effects. Numerous online communities, many of which are based on caste affiliations are very easy to find today. Although digital caste is as diverse as elitism today, ritual foundations are at the core of choices and preferences, not only in recruitment but also in relationships with friends, mates, and spouses. Online dating apps and marriage websites can be used to investigate the dynamics of marriage and the associated caste preferences. While talking about caste choices in love and marriages, Dr. Dhar, a women's studies professor at the University of Michigan, asks, "How many love marriages do we know of between Brahmins and Dalits?", in her latest collection of essays (Kirpal, 2020).

Boywad (2020), studied different patterns of relationships, such as friendship and love, while researching at the JNU campus in New Delhi, and noticed that ‘love’ could also be a social construction in which questions about caste, class, and gender arise when choosing a romantic partner. Technology has also been identified as one of the most important interventions in providing information about one’s identity. As a result, endogamous marriages have found a new home on digital platforms in order to maintain caste.

Future of Democracy and Digital Marginalisation

Ambedkar’s vision of democracy and his ideal of a ‘good society’ were inextricably linked. One of the important aspects of Ambedkar’s democratic vision was that it was geared towards social transformation and human progress. He considered ‘liberty, equality, and fraternity’ to be essential elements of a good society (Idiculla, 2017).

Democracy is significant not only in terms of politics, but also in terms of socio, cultural, economic, and other aspects. For one to be able to engage effectively and thereby in every element of the democratic setup, social democracy is absolutely important (Rodrigues, 2002). However, the two most prominent forms of social agency, caste and gender, do not bring democratic inclusion into the picture. Caste and gender are both based on the idea of a power hierarchy. As a result, if any participation is given to women and marginalised caste groups, it will not have the same influence over decisions as dominant forces such as higher caste status and male privileges.

The virtual media world, where participation was ostensibly free and democratic, once again reflects real-world power relations in myriad guises. The following are some of the major outlines that characterise the undemocratic digital setup:

1) Participation limitations

In India, digital penetration is inequitable. Not only the economic capital but cultural and social affiliations also influence the digital reach and activity. Most of the Indian digital users are also not the creators of contents rather they are the passive consumers of services and information provided through that platform.

2) Digitalisation: A political rhetoric in India

Rather a socio-economic intervention, digitalisation has gained acceleration in recent past for political reasons. Since there is so little way to verify their authenticity, fake truths, often with political agendas, have become dominant in shaping reality over online platforms. As a result, what appears to be public opinion is simply the viewpoint of the online platform’s dominant players, who can exploit and manipulate it according to their own interests.

3) Increasing political atrocities and degrading voices of dissent

When the number of online passive consumers grows, so does the threat of dissenting voices, especially against big corporations, technocrats, and political figures. As a result, using power and state repressive agents to muzzle dissenting voices may become another means of suppressing freedom of expression. It induces a symbolic fear of actively being online. This causes psycho-emotional discomfort for the dissenting voices which results in an undemocratic condition in which facts can be understood but not expressed or explained to others.

4) Economic compulsion and inequitable benefits

The benefits of the online economy are not equal for everyone. Those who can afford to switch to the digital economy enjoy the greatest benefits. Small businesses and others who are not well-versed in technical know-how, on the other hand, face hindered choices. This can also lead to online fraud, which causes significant damage to people who are on the margins.

5) Life chances of people

“Life chances” is a probabilistic concept that defines the possibility of a person’s life turning out a certain way in particular circumstances (Kumar, 2018). Socioeconomic factors influence digital outcomes and women and marginalised caste groups are often excluded from digital platforms for a variety of reasons, one of which is ‘violence’, which can take the form of verbal, sexual, or physical abuse. Furthermore, although online education offers content, it does not inspire learners to engage in critical thinking. All of this restricts their public participation and establishes a cyclicity of marginalisation for them, limiting their prospects and lowering their life chances.

Conclusion

The function of democracy, according to Ambedkar, is to serve the interests of society as a whole, rather than any particular class, caste, or group. Repression and abuse of a group or underprivileged people in any way, he believes, is the antithesis of democracy and humanism. However, much as in the real world, digital media platforms have become a public space of violence and repression of voices of women and oppressed caste groups. As a result, despite appearing to be free and decentralised, the digital media are once again monopolised by those in positions of power. Therefore, much more needs to be done to seriously address the problem of digital violence and marginalisation, and research emphasis and vision, as well as effective policy initiatives, are needed in this field.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar And His Role As Social Worker In The Upliftment Of Marginalized Sections In India

Assistant Professor

Aniket College of Social Work Wardha, Maharashtra.

Abstract

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a global personality with high knowledge of the constitution and law. He studied progressive constitutions of contemporary life and designed the constitution of India, which is the standard constitution of the world. His efforts to eradicate social evils and discrimination based on caste, class, color, gender, race, language, geographical location are addressed in his series of speeches and he discovered solutions for them through the constitutional provisions. His commitment to social change and development was consistent and he was restless in giving justice and dignity to the marginalized sections of the society. Noninstitutional social work practice was started long back in India and it got acceleration after the legalized efforts of Ambedkar towards the welfare of the marginalized sections. This paper is an effort to analyze the role of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar as a social worker and scientist in the empowerment of the deprived and marginalized sections of society. It is a theoretical paper and secondary sources of data are used to develop this research paper.

Keywords: Social Work, Deprived, Marginalized Sections.

Introduction:

According to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, society is always composed of classes. Their basis may differ. They may be economic or intellectual or social, but an individual in a society is always a member of a class (). Therefore society categorizes people on the basis of their wealth. Marginalized people are also another face of the same coin. Social work education and profession have greater responsibility in the process of empowerment of the marginalized sections. Hand by hand support of education and field practice can contribute to the welfare of the various sections of society. Well qualified, practice-oriented, and committed social workers, engaged in improving the socio-economic status, and quality of life for Marginalized sections. Prior to this Dr. B R Ambedkar constitutes the various provisions in the constitution of India, and they are implemented in the frame of various policies, programs, and laws for the benefit of these sections.

Objectives:

The objectives of this paper are:

1. To develop an understanding of Empowerment of Marginalized Sections.
2. To explore the role of Dr. B R. Ambedkar in the Empowerment of Marginalized Sections.

Methodology:

This paper is a theoretical paper extracted from the basis of a study that adopted secondary sources of existing literature. The descriptive method was taken into consideration to examine relevant literature deeply for this study purpose. To select adequate literature for the paper, two methods were followed such as systematic search of academic literature on Social Work and Marginalized Sections and random search of research articles on Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar and empowerment of Marginalized Sections

Conceptual Framework:

Social Work:

Social work is an organized profession to extend the helping hands to an individual, group, and community, for their betterment as well as sustaining them to help themselves by adopting varieties of professional strategies. Disadvantaged sections of the society like the weaker sections, downtrodden, orphans, laborers are considered to be needy of the profession. A social worker can provide psychological counseling, guidance, and assistance in the form of helping people to help themselves.

Social Worker:

A social worker is a professional who works with people to help themselves so that people can manage their daily lives with respect and dignity.

Marginalized Sections:

According to the business dictionary, marginalized sections mean the process whereby something or someone is pushed to the edge of a group and accorded lesser importance. This is predominantly a social phenomenon by which a minority or sub-group is excluded, and their needs or desires ignored (Dhavaleshwar, 2017).

Empowerment:

Empowerment is the enhancement of the social status, economic condition, and political participation strength of individuals, groups, and communities. Empowerment envelops developing and building capacities of individuals, groups, and communities to make them part of the mainstream of the society (Dhavaleshwar and Swadi, 2016).

Ambedkar as Social Worker:

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar was the mastermind for the progressive state, he has developed a nationalistic, secular attitude with his sacred soul. His views about the caste system, class, practice of untouchability, and discrimination on the basis of race, religion, color, gender, and geographical location are always clear that any country or state should not be dividing on the basis of religions or fundamentalist way (Kamble & Dhavaleshwar 2014). Such portions are absolutely threat to the development of the country, in this regard he shared many of his experiences before the Indian society and parliament, especially he proposed for a secular state. As a result of his thought, India adopted secularism in the constitution.

He proposed many policies to the planning commission for the empowerment of marginalized sections; reservation for SC, ST, OBC, and Women is the prime step taken for the welfare of these categories is the synchronized thought of Ambedkar for the empowerment of landless communities and women. He had a great social concern and a developmental attitude. As a result of his thought, we are going to become a superpower in the next few decades (Mathur, 2000). His social concerns came in to act by developing various social policies. Implementation of policies is the important responsibility of the government and the same needs to be carried out a hand in hand with the social work profession and social workers have greater responsibility in the process of need assessment of local communities and encouraging the marginalized sections to take optimum use of them.

The social work profession is broader than most disciplines with regard to the range and types of problems addressed with the settings in which the work takes place, the levels of practice, interventions used, and populations served. Social workers may be engaged in a variety of occupations ranging from hospitals, schools, clinics, police departments, and public agencies, court systems to private practices or businesses. The practice of social work requires knowledge of human development and behavior, of social economic, and cultural institutions, and of the interaction of all these factors.

National policy on Women, Education, Health, Schedule caste, Schedule Tribe and prevention of Atrocities Act and reservation policy are the greater contribution of Babasaheb for the welfare of the marginalised sections. Similarly Social work providing both institutional and non-institutional services with the intuition of empowerment of marginalised sections. Services are providing the as per the guidelines of policies and Acts. Social work is a vibrant profession; longitude and latitude of the profession are largely widened. Direct roles of social worker begin with the practicing primary methods of social work. Primary methods are the participatory method with the individual, group and community. Secondary methods are both participatory and non-participatory to be used for the benefit of society at large. Therefore role of social worker is widened for the betterment of individual, group and community (Magar and Kallolikar, 2016).

As a result of development of marginalised sections in the field of education, health, public service, economic independence and dignified social life are greatest social contribution of Babasaheb. His concept of social service and social work are about to strengthen the weaker with the legal, economic, and political support. Further he adds that education; economic independence and political power are the master keys of development of down thrown, weaker sections and marginalized sections of the nation.

Constitutional Provisions for Empowerment of Marginalized Sections:

Dr. B R Ambedkar was the chief Architect of Indian Constitution has given special space and provisions to the empowerment of Marginalised section in Indian Constitution, some observations are as below: Constitutional protection to the Marginalized / Vulnerable groups Constitution of India: Preamble: Promises to secure” Justice-Social, economic & Political”. - Art. 40: Provides reservation in 1/3 seats in Panchayats.
- Art. 46: Enjoins the states to promote with care the educational and economic interests of the weaker sections, specially SC and STs.

Implications:

There were many social reformers before Dr. B R. Ambedkar but, various presidencies fail to adopt and implement to uniform civil and criminal laws for the welfare of the marginalized sections as system was highly controlled by the British. Great awareness by the Babasaheb and his restless efforts for empowerment of marginalized sections resulted positively after the few decades of independent India. His social concern and concern of national building took great shape after 70th decade of 20th century. Assertive life style of marginalized sections of the contemporary society was the mission of Babasaheb. Therefor marginalized sections proudly says “We Are because you were”. Major implications of thoughts Babasaheb with sociological and social work perspectives are as below:

1. Practice of Untouchability and Devadasi system abolished
2. Reservation in education and government jobs introduced for marginalised sections.
3. Marginalised sections got awareness about their entity and rights.
4. Concept of self, self- conscience, and self-dignity, increased for the weaker sections.
5. Professionalism adopted by the Institutional and non-institutional services for empowerment of marginalised sections.
6. Strict implementations in rules, regulations, policies, programmes related with the welfare of the marginalised sections.
7. Social work profession strengthens with the support of laws and policies in community development and in other social work aspects.
8. He proposed the patriotic slogan for the unity of all sections of the society that is “I Am the first Indian and I am the last Indian”, finally slogan resulted in to social transformation and reduce the impact of social stratification.

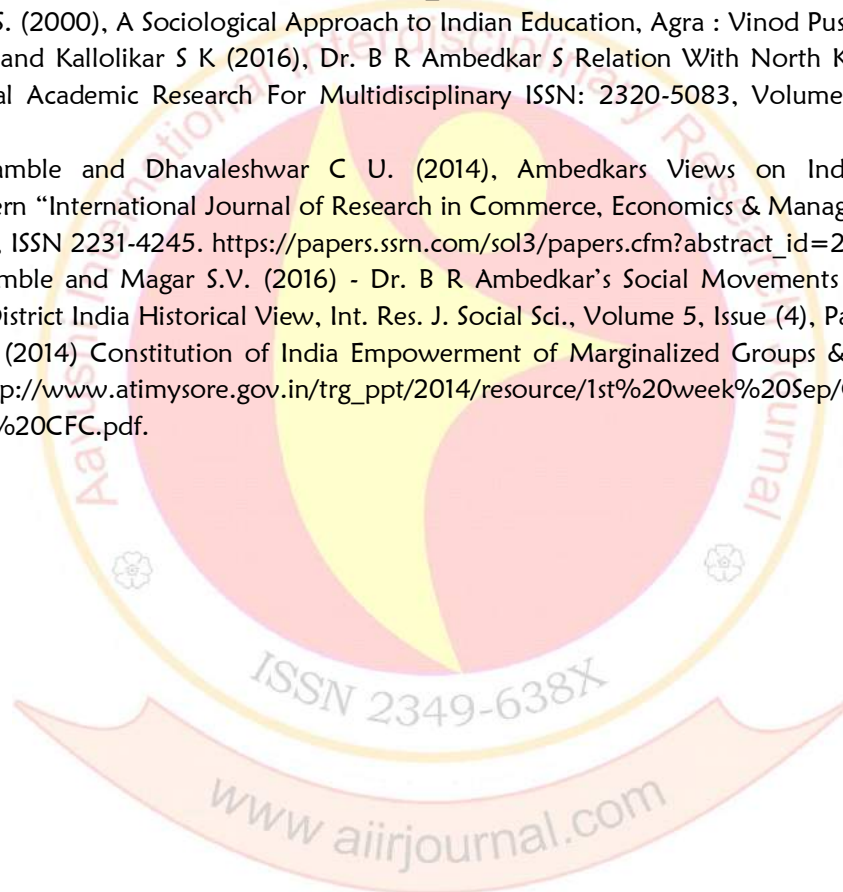

Conclusion:

Very few social reformers fought against the unnatural social practices like untouchability and all other discriminations against marginalized sections. Mahatma Basaveshwar, Jyotirao Phule, Savitribai Phule, Chhatrapati Shahu Maharaj, Shri Narayan Guru, Periyar E. V. Ramaswamy and B. R. Ambedkar were main of them. Ambedkar asserts that caste is not based on division of labour. It is division of labourers. As an economic organization also, caste is a harmful institution. According to him, the society must be based on reason and not on atrocious traditions of caste system. Social work education and profession have greater responsibility in the process of removal caste system and community development. Hand by hand support of education and field practice can contribute for the welfare of the various sections of the society.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar As An Indian ReformerDr. Vinod Kumar Cherukuri

Academic counselor,

Dept. of Political Science, Centre for Distance Education,
Acharya Nagarjuna University, Guntur District, Andhra PradeshIntroduction:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar is one of the most important intellectuals of modern India. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, affectionately and respectfully called "Babasaheb" by his followers. Bharat Ratna Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was a man with different personalities, a great economist, constitutional, social reformer, political thinker, advocate of the oppressed, and above all a great humanist. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a great Indian socio-religious reformer like Buddha, Mahaveera, Phule, Gandhi, and others. His constant struggle for social change and social equality has no equivalent in world history. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar is rightly considered to be one of the leading speakers of the depressed classes in India.

Dr. Ambedkar, the Chief Architect of the Indian Constitution, is well-known not only as a constitutionalist and a parliamentarian but also as a scholar and active reformer all over the world. As a champion of the down-trodden, he waged a relentless struggle against the oppressive features of Hindu society. Throughout his life, he strove for the establishment of a new social order based on the principles of liberty, equality, justice, and universal brotherhood. He was born into the Mahar community, which at the time was one of the "untouchable" castes. According to the Hindu caste system, Ambedkar, who was untouchable, had been discriminated against at every stage of his life. During his school life, he and his Dalit friends were not allowed to enter the classroom. The teachers did not touch their books and the peon also poured water from a height to make them drink. On the days when the peon was not available, Ambedkar and his friends had to go through the day without drinking water.

Finally, Ambedkar became known as the social reformer and leader of the depressed classes in India. As such, he worked hard to get them out of the oppressive position in which they lived due to religiously sanctioned and customary social, economic, religious and political disabilities. He said that Indian society was a very undemocratic society in which people were divided into classes and castes not based on their condition, ability or profession but because of their birth and confirmed the position to continue indefinitely the child is hereditary. Ambedkar's main purpose and life's work was to lead the depressed classes to higher social, political, and economic status and to free them from the stigma of stillness that hung on their foreheads. In other words, he wanted to ensure complete equality for the depressed classes at the same level as the Hindus.

Ambedkar realized that for this extremely difficult goal, he would have to plan a full attack on the launch and immobility system. But Ambedkar's greatest contribution is that he, as the leader of the depressed classes, was able to awaken them to the awareness of their humble existence and the life of humiliation and shame they led. He made them aware of their weakness and told them how some sections of people made them helpless. In short, he has given them a new spirit of excitement, a questioning attitude, and a desire to do justice for depressed sections. For this reason, he is known as the reformer of their spirit and as the initiator of the self-respect movement among the untouchables in Indian society. He awakened them against social injustice and gave them the spirit of self-reform, self-strength, self-confidence, self-respect, and self-confidence. Dr. Ambedkar tried to free their minds from the inferiority complex these people had due to their belief that they belong to the lower strata of Hindu society that he was introduced into their minds through religiously sanctioned customs and practices. Eventually, Ambedkar told the depressed classes to stop observing caste and stillness between them. "Charity must begin at home." He encouraged them to participate in group dinners and get inter caste weddings between the various communities.

In 1916 he had studied the problem of caste and had written his article on its original growth and spread. In 1936 he again reported in detail on caste in his lecture "Annihilation of Caste". The purpose of these two writings has been largely achieved. This has led to a self-analysis attitude among both progressive Hindus and social reformers. He founded the Marathi fortnightly, 'Mooknayak' (leader of the voiceless), in 1920, and the organization, 'Bahishkrit Hitkarini Sabha' in 1924 to create awareness among downtrodden people.

In 1927, Dr. Ambedkar organized the historical Satyagraha in the city of Mahad, where untouchables were forbidden to fetch water from Lake Chavdar lake to guarantee this right to the oppressed masses and to stop discrimination. This discrimination was broken by Ambedkar. This movement has marked a turning point to Dalit movement, and Dr. Ambedkar became an icon of inspiration and hope for the depressed classes.

Ambedkar's ideas for the Indian constitution focus on civil liberties for individual citizens, including religious freedom, the abolition of immobility, the insistence on the economic and social rights of women, and the prevention of all forms of discrimination in Indian society. He has introduced the reservation system in official positions, schools, and colleges for people in backward and downtrodden grades.

As a social revolutionary, Ambedkar identified with the struggle of the oppressed masses for human rights, dignity, freedom, and justice. The endless war against the evil essence of the Hindu social caste system has established his identity in the history of Indian social reform. His continued efforts and unwavering spirit in the fight against caste discrimination will continue to inspire exploited, subjugated and marginalized people in their struggle for a good place in society and politics and economy. In this connection, Dr. Ambedkar considered education a prerequisite for any kind of organization or movement. This is convincingly reflected in his trio-slogan of action "Educate- Agitate, Organize".

Ambedkar has launched a struggle to eradicate the untouchability of Indian society in order to improve the conditions of the depressed classes. He believed that conditions for the untouchables could not have changed under British rule. The British rulers wanted to eradicate immobility, but they lacked the courage to implement swift social reforms that could provoke the wrath of the upper caste. Ambedkar supported the demand for self-government, but at the same time spoke in favor of the immobile share of power in society, without which his total revolt would not be possible. Dr. Ambedkar believed in peaceful methods of social change. He was the opposite of the aggressive method of social change because it hinders calm and creates chaos. He didn't trust illegal practices. A welfare state for all cannot be developed on the basis of terror violence and brutal methods. According to him, the violent method is not only unsuitable for a peaceful culture but too irrational and immoral.

He was a true Renaissance man, a person who excelled in many areas of study. Although hated by common Hindus and marked as the destroyers of Hinduism, Historians now recognize the pivotal role that Dr. Ambedkar has played in the recognition of Hindu society.

Ambedkar, best known as the father of the Indian constitution and leader of the Dalits, began his career as an economist and made important contributions to the great economic debates of the time. In fact, he was one of the most educated economists of his generation in India after earning a doctorate in economics from Columbia University in the United States and the London School of Economics.

Ambedkar's view of economics was as complex as his view of politics, and it is likely that one shaped the other. As his view of India's agricultural problems shows, he sees no contradiction between the promotion of industrialization on the one hand and cooperative agriculture on the other. In both cases, he supported his arguments with examples of countries in other parts of the world that had adopted the solutions he advocated. Although Ambedkar advocated industrialization and urbanization, he also warned of the evils of capitalism and argued that unlimited capitalism could become a force of oppression and exploitation. Responding to liberal lawyers who claimed for minimum state intervention to protect liberty, Ambedkar argued that withdrawal of the state may lead to liberty but that liberty is "liberty to the landlords to increase rents, for capitalists to increase hours of work and reduce the rate of wages".

Ambedkar was the first Indian to graduate in economics overseas. He argued that industrialization and agricultural growth could improve the Indian economy. He focused on investing in agriculture as India's main industry. According to Sharad Pawar, Ambedkar's vision has helped the government achieve its food security goal. Dr. Ambedkar supported national economic and social development and emphasized education, general hygiene, public health and housing as basic services.

Ambedkar's view of agricultural land was that too much land was not being used or was not being used properly. He believed that there was an "ideal proportion" of inputs that would allow agricultural land to be used in the most productive way possible. To this end, he considered most of the people living off agriculture at that time a big problem. Therefore, he supported the industrialization of the economy so that these agricultural workers could be more useful elsewhere. Ambedkar trained as an economist and was a professional economist until 1921, when he became a political leader. He has written three academic books on economics i.e.,

1. Administration and Finance of the East India Company
2. The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India
3. The Problem of the Rupee: Its Origin and Its Solution

The Reserve Bank of India (RBI) was based on ideas presented by Dr. Ambedkar to the Hilton Young Commission.

Around 1950, he began to devote himself to Buddhism and traveled to Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) to attend a meeting with the world community of Buddhists. As Ambedkar dedicated a new Buddhist vihara near Pune, he announced that it was writing a book on Buddhism and that when it finished, he would officially convert to Buddhism. He visited Burma twice in 1954; to attend the third World Fellowship of Buddhists conference in Rangoon for the second time. In 1955 he founded the Bharatiya Bauddha Mahasabha or Buddhist Society of India. In 1956 he completed his last work, Buddha and his Dhamma, which was published posthumously. after meeting the Buddhist monk Hammalawa Saddhatissa from Sri Lanka. Ambedkar held an official public ceremony for himself and his followers in Nagpur on October 14, 1956. By accepting the three places of refuge and five commandments of a Buddhist monk in the traditional way, Ambedkar completed his own conversion with his wife. Then he converted about 500,000 of his followers who had gathered around him. This has created history in Indian society. The change of religion occurred due to inequality and discrimination in Hindu society. With this modification, Dr. Ambedkar has created a radical change in Indian society as a reformer.

Ambedkar's legacy as a sociopolitical reformer has profoundly influenced modern India. In India after independence, his socio-political thinking is respected across the political spectrum. His initiatives have influenced various areas of life, changing India's views on socio-economic policy, education, and positive action through socio-economic and legal incentives. His reputation as a scholar led to his appointment as Minister of Law Free India Law and Chairman of the Draft Constitutional Committee. He passionately believed in individual freedom and criticized the caste society. His accusations of Hinduism as the basis of the caste system made him controversial and unpopular among Hindus. His conversion to Buddhism sparked renewed interest in Buddhist philosophy in India and abroad.

Ambedkar's political philosophy has led a large number of political parties, publications and trade unions to remain active throughout India, especially in Maharashtra. His promotion of Buddhism rejuvenated the Indian people's interest in Buddhist philosophy. Today's mass transformation ceremonies have been organized by human rights activists imitating the Nagpur ceremony of Ambedkar in 1956. Some Indian Buddhists consider him a Bodhisattva, even though he never said so himself. Outside India, some Hungarian Roma drew parallels between their situation and the oppressed people of India in the late 1990s. Inspired by Ambedkar, they began to convert to Buddhism.

Caste activities both at the system level and as a function of patriarchy, increasing caste class difference in feminist political discourse makes Ambedkar perceive women's oppression, social democracy, caste, social order, and philosophy. Although Ambedkar proved himself to be a genius and was known as a great thinker, philosopher, revolutionary, outstanding advocate, prolific writer, social activist, and critic, and rose like a colossus on the Indian socio-political scene until his death, Current social realities, however, require a careful examination of the broad spectrum of his subjects, the breadth of his vision, the depth of his analysis, the rationality of his vision and the essential humanity of his proposals for practical action. For the Indian women's movement, therefore, Ambedkar provides a strong source of inspiration for formulating a feminist political agenda that simultaneously addresses the issues of class, caste, and gender in the current socio-political framework and maintains conservative and reactionary values in many ways, especially in gender relations. Ambedkar's writings and speeches show the values India should develop and how it should modernize its social and political institutions. Ambedkar saw women as victims of the oppressive, caste-based, and rigid hierarchical social system. Dr. Ambedkar has provided safeguards in the Indian constitution to women's protection in Indian society.

Conclusion:

On 6th December 1956, he died at his home in Delhi. He was posthumously awarded the Bharat Ratna, India's highest civilian award in 1990. He was a well-known educationalist, reformist, politician, and eminent jurist. It is a very well-known fact that Ambedkar had renounced Hinduism and had adopted Buddhism as his mark for protest against the prevalent Caste system in Hindu religion, which he believed was the original religion of his ancestors. As an Indian reformer, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar has played a vital role in the socio-economic and political change scenario in Indian society. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was still alive in the Indian society through his works and contribution to the upliftment of the backward and downtrodden, women communities.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar and Social Reformation

Krishna Mohan Lal

M.Phil Research Scholar of Tata Institute of Social Science, Mumbai

Abstract:

Indian society is based on the caste system, before the constitution came into force on 26 January 1950; the rights of all the citizens of the country were pre-decided on the basis of their caste and gender. When Dr. Ambedkar returned to India after getting higher education from America and London, he faced casteism in his daily life even after getting higher education, because he came from an untouchable caste. He gave up his good job for social reform, Ambedkar started his social reform movement during the British rule itself. He undertook tremendous social reforms for the upliftment, equality and rights of the underprivileged, untouchables, tribal, backward and women of the country. They embodied and protected equality, justice and freedom for the people of these disadvantaged societies through their social reform movements and the formulation of the Indian Constitution. On the strength of his political, economic and social work, he laid the foundation of modern India. In this article, we will discuss the social construction and social reform of Dr. Ambedkar and the role and importance of his ideas. Which we will try to understand with the help of this article.

Keywords Social Reform, Social Reconstruction, Social Institutions, Social architect, caste conflict, Social superiority, State socialism, Constitutionalism

Introduction

Dr. Ambedkar was a jurist, a great scholar, educationist, visionary, economist, historian, sociologist, social reformer, politician, journalist, champion of human rights, and an advocate of an oppressed and depressed section of the Indian society. Dr. Ambedkar holds the title of Babasaheb in India with love and respect, which means fatherly, the first black President of South Africa Nelson Mandela has received a similar honor in his own country, he is fondly called "Madiba" which means equivalent to father. Ambedkar considered Tathagata Buddha, Sant Kabir, and Jyotiba Phule as his gurus, all three have been great social reformers of India. Babasaheb, being a sociologist, knew well that untouchable society can never get respect and rights while being a part of Hinduism, that is why he said in a meeting in Nashik district in 1935 that I must have been born a Hindu. It was not in my power but I would not die while being a Hindu. At that time, he thought of embracing a new religion, excluding Hinduism, and building a cultural capital for his society. Man is a creature who also needs his life religious-cultural capital to live life, Ambedkar understood this as a sociologist. He wanted to free his people from the inferiority complex, so he joined Buddhism; He wanted a complete revival of the identity of the untouchables, so he accepted Buddhism. Ambedkar embraced Buddhism with 6 lakh people in a religious-cultural revolution. He also holds the title of Bodhisattva, who carried forward the Buddha's Dhamma movement. Through acceptance of Buddhism, he improved his identity. On October 14, 1956, Ambedkar embraced Buddhism. Four lakh followers in Nagpur. Before adopting Buddhism, he completed his final book ha Buddha and His Dhamma. The religion of Buddhism is also based on the concept of freedom, equality, and fraternity, and the Preamble of our Constitution also praises this concept. Ambedkar also revives Buddhism.

Social Reformation

During higher education in America and London, Babasaheb saw the progressive society there. Personal experience of the caste discrimination in India and by getting liberal western progressive education he understood very deeply social, economic, political, cultural aspects of the caste system and also know the solution of this discrimination (Rajasekhariah & Jayaraj, 1991). He was deeply impressed by the dignified status of women in America and London, he wanted to preserve Indian women with equal rights to men through legal protection. As the first law minister of independent India, when the Hindu Code Bill was not passed in Parliament, he resigned from the post of law minister in 1951 in protest against the denial of women's rights from the cabinet of the first Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru. Her statement is that I measure the progress of any country by looking at the status of the women of that country. He believed that the country where women would get equal rights as men would be a developed socio-democratic country in itself.

In 1927, Dr. Ambedkar led the historic Satyagraha in the city of Mahad, untouchables did not have the right to drink water from the public place at that time, by agitating the Mahad Chavdar pond, and they gave the untouchables the right to drink water from the public place through the British. In 1930, Dr. Ambedkar started a movement to enter the Kalaram Temple in Nashik. Ambedkar wanted to show to the British government through this movement that untouchable society is not a part of this Hindu religion, that is why they are prohibited from entering the religious place of Hindus. He also wanted to realize his untouchable society that the patron of this Hindu religion hates you so much, even they do not want to let you enter their religious place, through this movement he wanted to awaken the self-respect of the untouchables.

On 4th May, 1955, Dr. Ambedkar founded the "Buddhist Society of India" to spread the Buddhist Dhamma. To work for the education of depressed students, he founded the "People's Education Society" in 1945. Ambedkar had started four newspapers Mooknayak (1920), Bahishkrit Bharat' (1927), Samata (1929), Janata (1930), and Prabuddh Bharat, in his lifetime for social awareness and social reform, this is also the part of his literature movement. Ambedkar wanted to bring social reform through law-making, hence on 15th August 1936, he formed the Independent Labour Party (ILP) to raise the voice for the laborers, in 1942 he formed a political party called Scheduled Castes Federation (SCF) to fight for the right of the untouchables, and after independence, he conceptualized the establishment of the Republican Party of India (RPI) to work for every oppressed and depressed Indians.

Ambedkar started the liberation movement for the oppressed and depressed sections of Indians, Ambedkar favoured socio-religious-economic and political reforms by implementing the rule of law, Ambedkar supports constitutionalism. He wanted to develop the state as a welfare state, he supported state socialism based on democratic values. Dr. Ambedkar, being a lawyer, knew very well that only through political power and constitutional rights would people of the marginalized sections of the country get human rights, and their basic rights would be protected because in India there are lacks of social democracy. Indian social reform can only be done through legislation. He attended all three Round Table Conferences (1930-32) in London and legally provided many fundamental rights to the Untouchables through this conference. He wanted to establish social democracy in India through the movement for social reform. At that time, social democracy was negligible in India. For this reason, all forms of discrimination and exploitation were prevalent here. Ambedkar's personality and vision can be gauged from the fact that he used to say that I measure the development of any society from the position of women of that society, how much women have developed there. With the help of the social reform movements, he led and the Indian Constitution written by him, he reconstructed and extensively reformed the social institutions of our country, creating this new modern society through law.

At that time, the leaders of the Congress only wanted political and economic freedom from the British regime, they were not agitating for the rights of the deprived and exploited society in the country. That is why Ambedkar started social reform movement for the rights of the underprivileged. Dr. Ambedkar started many social movements so that the deprived and oppressed sections of society get their rights and self-respect. In his last speech in parliament before implementing the constitution on 25th November 1949, he said that we are going to enter where we have the equal political opportunity but there is not equality in social and economic life. Dr. Ambedkar had said that our political democracy should be based on social democracy, without social democracy, political democracy will not be effective. We must also work on the establishment of social democracy and economic freedom to make political democracy successful. Dr. Ambedkar also granted voting rights to all citizens of this country, this voting right is based on one vote, one man, and one value.

The political revolution led by Chandragupta Maurya was the result of the Dhamma revolution of "Gautam Buddha". The political revolution led by Shivaji was the result of the religious and social revolutions did by the saints of Maharashtra. The political revolution of Sikhs was the result of the religious and social revolution of Guru Nanak Dev (Ambedkar, 2014, p. 44).

Ambedkar failed politically because he did not belong to a society that at that time had no awareness, nor did he have any social, economic, and cultural capital. Dr. Ambedkar believed that social and religious reforms lead to political success. Babasaheb explained why communists in India failed to carry out social reforms because they focused only on economic norms, but in India, the caste of the individual determines their authority. Caste in India determines what social, political, economic, religious rights a person will have (ibid). Religion, property, and social status are all sources of authority and power in India. The only difference is that one is dominated in one and the other is dominated in another one, but a large section of Indian society does not have any kind of authority and power (ibid). They did not stand up for the reform of the Hindu society but they only want the reform of the family. Their reform did not relate to the social reform in the sense of the breakup of the caste system. It was never put in issue by the reformers. That is the reason why the Social Reform Party lost (Ambedkar, 2014, p. 42). In European society, the property is the source of power not in India (Ambedkar, 2014, p. 45).

Dr. Ambedkar was appointed as the Chairman of the Drafting Committee of the Constitution of India on 29 August 1947 through which he brought many social reforms in India. Real democracy should be based on liberty, equality, fraternity, it is the foundation of the establishment of any social democracy. To become a great developed nation, elimination of caste is necessary, how can thousands of castes build a great nation. Therefore, to build a developed nation, we have to abolish the caste system. Indian society is a very undemocratic society, that is based on the caste system. The caste system is an ascribed status, it's a division of laborers. There is no merit concept in Indian society. There is a stigma attached to untouchable castes. Therefore, only a democratic institution can build a great nation. So only democratic institutions can make a great nation, for making a democratic nation we need affirmative action and also need social democracy. Dr. Ambedkar is the true father of the nation, he did many things for the nation at all levels - social, economic, political, constitutional but due to caste hatred many people do not follow him. He worked for the upliftment of 90% of the population of this country. He had said that I am Indian firstly and lastly. He was a true patriot.

Dr. Ambedkar viewed the world from the point of view given by his famous teacher, American philosopher John Dewey. He looked at Indian history and culture from the viewpoint given by his professor John Dewey (Mukherjee, 2009). Ambedkar was the first Indian who went to another country to pursue Ph.D. in economics, He reformed the Indian economy too. The Finance Commission of India was also founded by Ambedkar in 1951. The establishment of the Reserve Bank of India is also based on the ideas of Dr. Ambedkar which he put before the Hilton Young Commission. He was also the originator of the Employment Exchanges of this country. Despite doing such a big job in the field of economics, Indian governments have intentionally ignored Dr. Ambedkar by not printing his photo on Indian currency.

Ambedkar provided voting rights to everyone, through the allotment of the reserved constituency to untouchable castes and Tribal castes; he provided political space for SCs/STs. Babasaheb Ambedkar was the Minister of Labor in the Viceroy's Cabinet from 1942 to 1946 as Labor Minister, he did a lot of work by reforming labor laws for the workers such as reducing the work from 14 hours to 8 hours, ban on bondage labour system, Maternity act, Equal payment, factory act, DA, PF, ban on child labour, extra payment for over time, health insurance, welfare fund etc.

Dr. Ambedkar founded Samta Sainik Dal (SSD) on 24th Sep 1924, this is a volunteer force, the aim of this organization to fight for the right of oppressed and depressed sections of the society and bring equality. On the counter-revolution of this organization, the RSS organization is formed by the Dwij Hindu castes. On 4th may 1955 Ambedkar founded an organization "Buddhist society of India" in Mumbai to spread Buddhism in India. Rajaratnam Ambedkar (grandson of Dr. Ambedkar) is the current President of this organization. On 20th July 1924, he formed 'Bahishkrit Hitakarini Sabha' in Mumbai, the main aim of this organization was to solve the socio-economic and educational problem of the untouchables and put this problem into the front of the British government.

In view of his great social reform work, Babasaheb should have received the Bharat Ratna long ago, but after 34 years he was awarded the Bharat Ratna in 1990. In India from 14 April 1990 to 14 April 1991, this year was considered as 'Social Justice' year in Babasaheb's honour. The "Dr. Ambedkar Foundation" was established on 24 March 1992 under the aegis of the "Ministry of Social Justice and Empowerment", in honour of Babasaheb's social reform work.

Conclusion

Dr. Ambedkar spent his entire life in the struggle and movement against caste discrimination and injustice of the deprived society and the exploited classes. He struggled to establish equality and humanity through social reform throughout his life. This is the reason why Ambedkar is remembered as the messiah of social justice not only in the country but in the world. Ambedkar has become a worldwide symbol of social justice. His idol has been installed in many universities/Institutions of the world and the whole world celebrates his birth anniversary with great enthusiasm. Day by day people is getting to know Babasaheb's social reform work and understanding the importance of social reform work by done him.

An Over View of Constituent Assembly Debates of Gandhi, Ambedkar on the Establishments of Village Panchayats in India

Abstract

Mahatma Gandhi envisioned that a free India would rest on a foundation of gram panchayats, village republics that governed locally and epitomized Swaraj in practice. B.R. Ambedkar was sceptical; he described the caste-ridden, unequal village society as a cesspool. Yet, he was not unequivocally against decentralisation. Yet, the progress of panchayati raj has been patchy, since from the establishment of Indian constitution. Some States have walked the talk by devolving untied grants to panchayats so that they can plan flexibly and implement locally relevant initiatives. However, in most, the substantive spirit of the constitutional design has been obstructed by politicians and bureaucrats, who fear the loss of their patronage powers. Panchayats are not given enough funds and are bypassed by State-controlled line departments that continue to implement programmes falling within the rightful domain of the former.

However the article will establish an argument made by the fathers of the Indian Constitution, by discussing the facts as of how the village was rejected by B.R. Ambedkar and how it was contrasted by the other members to give the status of power and authority in the hands of the people in the villages.

Introduction:

Ambedkar stated in the Assembly that “the love of the intellectual Indians for the village community is of course infinite if not pathetic. It is largely due to the fulsome praise bestowed upon it by Metcalfe who described this as little republics having nearly everything they want within themselves, and almost independent of any foreign relations. The existence of these village communities each one forming a separate little state in itself has according to Metcalfe contributed more than any other cause to the preservation of the people of India, through all the revolutions and changes which they have suffered, and is in a high degree conducive to their happiness and to the enjoyment of great portion of the freedom and independence. No doubt the village communities have lasted where nothing else lasts”.

He concluded his comment by stating, “What is a village but a sink of localism, a den of ignorance, narrow-mindedness and communalism? I am glad that the Draft Constitution has discarded the village and adopted the individual as its unit”. November 4, 1949 is a moment in the history of India when liberal democracy was founded on the individual as the unit. And the individual overrode the village – the most chastised unit of Indian social life. In this way, Ambedkar’s that part of speech which critiqued Indian village has twofold significance in the construction of post-colonial modernity. Ambedkar broke the imaginary construction of the village as the ideal social space. Simplicity, tradition, closeness with nature, a great sense of community, etc. were attached with the meaning of the village. He provided an opposite picture of the village as a social space of human degradation. Secondly, it was a statement which confronted and contested Gandhi's idea of Hind Swaraj. However he was not alone in his views on the Indian village life.

Gandhi's Views

Gandhi believed that in order to attain true freedom we would have to live in villages. He wrote to Nehru, "You will not understand me if you think that I am talking about the villages of today "My villages today exist in my imagination...."After all, every person lives in the world of his own imagination". He then outlined the village of his imagination, "The villager in this imagined village will not be apathetic – he will embody pure consciousness. He will not lead his life like an animal in a squalid dark room. Men and women will live freely and be prepared to face the whole world. The village will not know cholera, plague or smallpox. No one will live indolently, nor luxuriously"

It is clear from the above that Gandhi was building a utopia, but in the process, at the same time, he was constructing the Indian nation and showing the way for nation-building. His answer implicated an altogether different notion of India, Nehru's notion representing European modernity. He wrote, "Briefly put, my view is that the question before us is not one of truth versus untruth or non-violence versus violence I do not understand why a village should necessarily embody truth and non-violence. A village, normally speaking, is backward intellectually and culturally and no progress can be made from a backward environment. Narrow-minded people are much likely to be untruthful and violent.

Village as an Important Unit

In the light of the above knowledge about Nehru's views on village, one could easily assume that Nehru was on the side of Ambedkar with regard to his views on Indian villages which he made part of his speech. Reminding oneself that Gandhi and his ideology had permeated into the Congress cadres it is also possible to look back at the reaction of some of the members of the Constituent Assembly. It began immediately after Ambedkar moved the Draft Constitution for discussion, which began on November 5, 1948. After the preliminary discussion on modalities, expressions and legalities, the first to make comment on Ambedkar's views on village was HV Kamath who said, One thing I join issue with Dr. Ambedkar. He was pleased to refer to the villages..... as "sinks of localism and dens of ignorance, narrow- mindedness and communalism"; and the "pathetic faith" in village communities. He contended that Ambedkar's attitude towards the village was that of an 'urban highbrow' and was not acceptable. He then went on to identify the problem in terms of the urban background of the members of the Drafting Committee and pointed out that with the exception of Sriyut Munshi none of them had participated in the freedom struggle. He then went on to underline that India's ancient polity was organised around village communities which were autonomous and self-contained'. Obvious implication of such an emphasis was that the villages were indispensable for the political life of the country. He further added, "I believe the day is not distant when not merely India but the whole world, if it wants peace and security and happiness, will have to decentralise and establish village republics and town republics, and on the basis of this they will have to build their State; otherwise the world is in for hard times". Said Kamath.

Attempt To Set Autonomous Village Panchayats

On the same day in the afternoon, that is, November 6, 1948, K. Santhanam from Madras, who served as railway minister in Nehru's cabinet, while referring to Ambedkar's comments on village, said, "I do not agree with his condemnation of the village panchayats and his statement that they are responsible for all the national disasters”. As a matter of fact, he opined, despite all changes the villages have preserved the Indian culture and saved society from anarchy. An attempt should be made to set autonomous village panchayats for which there is a need for such provision in the Constitution, because “in the long run local autonomy for each village must constitute the basic framework for the future freedom of this country”. The same day, Pandit Thakur Dass Bhargava from East Punjab, after a long speech touching on various aspects of the Draft Constitution, spoke on what and how the village India should exist by assuming that Ambedkar’s views on it had been negated.

He misunderstood Ambedkar in the sense that when he introduced the Draft Constitution, his speech touched upon the village in terms of what would be the unit of Indian citizenship – individual or collective. In the process of elimination and with the knowledge that Gandhi had extolled villages, he argued that village could not be the unit of citizenship. However, the matter was clearly discerned by some of the members among whom many chose to ignore the issue of village, but some of them took it up quite seriously.

The discussion on the Draft Constitution, as had been decided by the Vice-President, Dr. H. C. Mookherjee, who was chairing the proceedings of the Assembly in the absence of the President, was to be concluded on November 8, 1948. When the Vice-President asked Alladi Krishnaswami Ayyar from Madras, there were still forty members who had not got the time to speak. Ayyar started his speech by saying that “I do not share the views of my honourable Friend in his condemnation of village communities in India”. He then went on to summarise the debate so far had taken place. He touched upon the issue of village in the following manner:

The constitution does not give sufficient importance to village communities, which are an essential feature of India’s social and political life. With the large powers vested in the provincial or state legislatures in regard to local self- government and other matters, there is nothing to prevent the provincial legislatures, from constituting the villages as administrative units for discharge of various functions vested in the state government. It should be reminded that Ayyar was member of the Drafting Committee, which means that he largely agreed with Ambedkar on the question of individual as unit, but he might have felt that villages could be the administrative units in certain ways.

Constitutional Status for the Village Panchayats

On November 22, 1948, after the Article 31 was added to the Constitution after discussion and amendments, a new Article 31-A as an amendment was moved in the Assembly. It was amendment No. 927 which stood by the name of M. Ananthasayanam Ayyangar who prayed to the Vice-President that K. Santhanam’s amendment was better worded than his and should be taken for discussion. The Vice-President accepted his request and asked K. Santhanam to move the amendment who did so thus after article 31, the following new article be added: ‘31-A. The State shall take steps to organise village panchayats and endow them with such powers and authority as may be necessary to enable them to function as units of self-government’. Santhanam went on to elaborate that many other members had proposed similar amendments.

He emphasised that how much power was to be given to the village panchayats was a matter which would vary from state to state. He added, “What is attempted to do here is to give a definite and unequivocal direction that the state shall take steps to organise panchayats and shall endow them with necessary powers and authority to enable them to function as units of self-government”. Immediately after Santhanam completed his speech, Ambedkar was on his feet and said, “Sir, I accept the amendment'. It seems that the pressure of the Gandhians, who considered Ambedkar as the opponent, might have weighed on him to accept the amendment. It should be reminded that with the Congress majority in the Assembly, the amendment could have been adopted and added to the Constitution even if Ambedkar had opposed it.

Conclusion:

Ours is an ancient, a very ancient country and the village has had always an important position here. In Greece, for instance, towns had greater importance than villages. The Republics of Athens and Sparta occupy a very important place in the world history today. But no importance was attached by them to the villages. But in our country the village occupied such an important position that even in the legends contained in most ancient books – Upanishads – if there are descriptions of the forest retreats, of the sages, there are also descriptions of villages. Modern historians have also admitted this fact. The Vice-President commented that all these speeches were nothing except praising the amendment and then he moved the amendment which was passed and the Article 31-A was added to the Constitution on November 22, 1948.

The above view was stated to be in accordance with Gandhian values – an idea of self-sufficient village as unit of governance and self-rule. After suggesting the needed amendment of the Preamble of the Indian Constitution, Jhunjhunwala went on to quote most of the speech on the village delivered by Dr. B. R. Ambedkar when he moved the Draft Constitution for debate on November 4, 1948. After reading Ambedkar's views on village, he said, "Nothing can be more uncharitable and unjust to the villagers than what Dr. Ambedkar has said". Same day Dip Narayan Sinha from Bihar emphasised the importance of Indian villages as the custodians of the civilisation, whereas most of the countries of the world are turning to the cities.

Revisiting Dr Ambedkar's Vision of Tribal Life: A Developmental Perspective

Uday Kumar Ravi

Doctoral Fellow, SNCWS,
Jamia Millia Islamia University, New Delhi

Abstract:

This paper is to analyze the status and development prospects of indigenous communities by adopting the ideas of Dr. Ambedkar for tribal upliftment. It is solely based on the existing data sources to understand the current socio-economic status of Scheduled Tribes. Dr. Ambedkar all through his life as a social reformer, a statesman and as the chairman of the Drafting Committee firmly represented and strongly debated for the rights of the exploited and the marginalized sections of the society, including the tribal communities. Despite strong oppositions in the Constituent Assembly and long debates, his full awareness of tribal issues and problems made him come up with various constitutional safeguards for them. From time immemorial, these groups had been in a symbiotic relationship with Mother Nature until the colonial policies destroyed the balance. Post-independent successive governments' initiatives towards tribal development have failed to bring the expected results. To meet Ambedkar's dream of tribal life, there is a need for a more holistic and participatory approach towards planning and policy formulation for them, where their ethnicity, culture, sense of place and more importantly their views are recognized and respected.

Introduction

The novel thoughts and actions of Dr Bhim Rao Ambedkar, as a social reformer, an intellectual, an eminent economist, a renounced philosopher, a prominent jurist, an anthropologist, a writer, an editor and as a real politician cut across the limits of time and space. His ideas of justice, liberty, equality and fraternity in the Indian context is transcendent. He is also addressed as "Babasaheb" because he is considered as a "great liberator" (Dahiwale, 2018). His life experiences of humiliation, discrimination and exploitation instigated, motivated, and activated Dr Ambedkar to take it as a challenge and goal to make India a place to live with harmony, peace and togetherness where, there are no systematic, cultural and hereditary injustices and wrongs bestowed upon the lower sections (includes tribes) of the Indian masses (Vijaykumar, 2020). And, in doing so, he well utilized all his education, knowledge and expertise to fight for the rights of the systematically exploited, discriminated and unprivileged groups, not only against the British government but in post-independent India as well. As the first Law Minister of India and the Chairman of the Drafting Committee, he firmly put his ideas, discussed and debated in the Constituent Assembly to bring amendments wherever needed to safeguard the interests of Scheduled Castes (SCs), Scheduled Tribes (STs), Other Backward Classes (OBCs) and Women of all sections in the Indian society, to bridge the gap between the "Haves" and the "Have-nots" (Turner, 1985).

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar closely studied and observed the status of the Indian tribes and was fully aware of the British policies and actions towards the administration and control of the Scheduled Tribes (Babar, 2019). His understanding of socio-economic, political and cultural aspects of the Indian tribes was later materialized into various Constitutional rights and provisions such as the 5th Schedule and 6th Schedule. It is in this direction, this paper aims: 1) to know Dr Ambedkar's perspective on tribes

2) to revisit various Constitutional safeguards for Scheduled Tribes 3) to understand the current socio-economic location of STs.

Methodology

The paper is an analytical study based on the analysis of the secondary data collected from the Ministry of Tribal Affairs, the Office of Registrar General of India, the National Family Health Survey, the Planning Commission of India, published reports, articles and books to understand the issues, challenges and the overall development prospects of the tribal groups.

Who are Tribes?

Contrary to forming a homogeneous understanding of the various tribal groups, it was imperative for colonial administration to categorize them based on their location in social, economic, political, geographical and cultural patterns (Xaxa, 2005). They form heterogeneous groups because they differ in many aspects from each other such as their ethnicity, food, clothing, beliefs, work-life values, language, customs, traditions cultural patterns etc. Thus, it is problematic to give a uniform definition of a tribe. However, for administrative purposes, according to Article 342, the President may with respect to any State or Union Territory, in consultation with the Governor, notify a specific tribe or group within tribal communities as Scheduled Tribe in relation to the State or Union Territory.

Ambedkar's Views on Tribes

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar's understanding of the Indian tribes was unique in the sense that he viewed their plight in two ways. Firstly, the mainland nomadic tribes were ill-treated, discriminated against, excluded and subjugated by the mainstream Brahmanical society due to their distinct culture, beliefs, customs and traditions which they have developed over thousands of years. The upper-caste Hindu society had a feeling of superiority over these mainland tribes thus, they deliberately kept them excluded, underdeveloped and treated them as untouchables (Harshavardhan, 2017). Secondly, other tribal groups which were largely dependent on forest and its product to make their living were exploited by the colonial government for their self-interest. Their autonomy to forest resources was removed by implementing draconian and hostile Forest Acts and Regulations. They were forced to work as labourers in the construction works and in the agricultural fields to grow crops such as indigo, cotton, jute, tea, tobacco, rubber etc.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar (1945) expressed his views about the Aboriginal Tribes of India in his book "Communal Deadlock And Ways to Solve It", where he writes "The Aboriginal Tribes have not as yet developed any political sense to make the best use of their political opportunities and they may easily become mere instruments in the hands either of a majority or a minority and thereby disturb the balance without doing any good to themselves. In the present stage of their development, it seems to me that the proper thing to do for these backward communities is to establish a Statutory Commission to administer what is now called the 'excluded areas' on the same basis as was done in the case of the South African Constitution. Every Province in which these excluded areas are situated should be compelled to make an annual contribution of a prescribed amount for the administration of these areas" (Ambedkar, 1945).

Constitutional Provisions

Knowing the status of indigenous tribes, Dr Ambedkar considered them no much different from Scheduled Castes in terms of their systematic exploitation, exclusion, discrimination, humiliation and subjugation in the mainstream society. Thus, he drafted separate and distinct Schedules (5th Schedule and 6th Schedule) to deal with the specific problems of tribal development despite a lot of uproar and disagreements from other members of the Constituent Assembly for treating tribes differently and making special provisions for them in the Indian Constitution (Jadhav, 2016). The 5th Schedule deal with the administration and control of Scheduled Areas and Scheduled Tribes whereas, the 6th Schedule is related to the administration and control of the tribal areas in the four states of Assam, Meghalaya, Tripura and Mizoram. In addition to these, he came up with various other Constitutional safeguards to preserve their identity, protect their rich culture and promote their overall development. As per NCST (2016) the following constitutional safeguards have been enshrined in the Indian Constitution: Educational and Cultural safeguards (Art. 15(4); Art. 29; Art. 46; Art. 350; Art. 350A; Art. 23; Art. 24) etc.), Economic and administrative safeguards (Art. 244; Art. 244A; Art. 275) Political safeguards (Art. 164 (1); Art. 330; Art. 332; Art. 334; Art. 243D; Art 338A; Art. 339; Art. 371), Service-related safeguards (Art. 16(4); Art. 16 (4A); Art. 335).

Other than the above constitutional protection, there are Fundamental Rights (Art. 12-35) enshrined in Part III of the Constitution which are available to all citizens (includes STs) of India and the Directive Principles of State Policies (Art. 36-51) in Part IV of the Constitution which is specific guidelines to the states to work for the welfare of people (includes STs) in all possible ways.

Where do they stand?

In post-independent India, the successive governments came up with different programs, policies and plans such as Five-Year Plans to protect and promote the welfare of tribal groups. All these initiatives have been influenced and guided by three approaches towards tribal development: 1) the 'Isolationist approach' of Verrier Elwin 2) the 'Assimilationist approach' of G. S. Ghurye and, 3) the 'Integrative approach' put forward by Jawaharlal Nehru (Purkayastha, 2015). Considering tribal development initiatives in independent India, this paper has tried to locate the contemporary position of Scheduled Tribes in terms of fundamental socio-economic indicators.

According to Census (2011), the population of Scheduled Tribes is 10.42 crore which constitutes 8.6 per cent of the total population of the country. During 1961-2011, the population of Scheduled Tribes (including rural and urban) with respect to total population has been increasing as shown in Table 1.1. There is an increase in the total proportion of STs population from 6.9 per cent in 1961 to 8.6 per cent in 2011 (Chandramouli, 2013). But their increasing population is not adequately met with other basic requirements such as literacy, health and hygiene, housing, employment etc.

Census Year	The proportion of Scheduled Tribes to Total Population (in %)
	Total	Rural	Urban
1961	6.9	8.1	1.0
1971	6.9	8.4	1.2
1981	7.6	9.2	2.0
1991	8.1	10.1	2.3
2001	8.2	10.4	2.4
2011	8.6	11.3	2.8

Source: Census of India (2011)

Coming to the literacy rate of STs, it increased from 47.10 per cent to 59 per cent from 2001 to 2011. The literacy rate of India has increased from 64.84 per cent in 2001 to 73 per cent in 2011 causing a gap of 14 per cent between all India literacy rate and the literacy rate of STs (Ministry of Tribal Affairs, 2017-18). Though the gaps in literacy rates of persons, men and women for years 1991, 2001 and 2011 shows a declining trend (Table 1.2) but still, there is a need to improve more.

Year	All			Scheduled Tribes
	Persons	Men	Women	Persons	Men	Women
1991	52.21	64.13	39.29	29.60	40.65	18.19
2001	64.84	75.26	53.67	47.10	59.17	34.76
2011	73.00	80.90	64.60	59.00	68.50	49.40

Source: Office of the Registrar General, India

As per the National Family Health Survey (NFHS)-4, conducted by the Ministry of Health and Family Welfare in the period 2015-16, the respective gaps between STs and all other categories with respect to Infant Mortality Rate (IMR), Under Five Mortality Rate (U5MR) and percentage of women of age 15-49 years with any anaemia are found to be 3.7 per cent, 7.5 per cent and 6.8 per cent respectively (Ministry of Tribal Affairs, 2017-18) as depicted in Table 1.3.

These gaps in health indicators speak about the reality of nutrition food available to children and women, vaccination coverage of children, institutional delivery and health infrastructure available in the tribal areas.

Persons	Infant Mortality Rate (IMR)	Under Five Mortality Rate (U5MR)	Percentage of Women of age 15-49 with any anaemia
All	40.7	49.7	53.0
STs	44.4	57.2	59.8

As per the estimates of poverty ratio for various social groups during 2004-05 and 2011-12, following Tendulkar methodology, the percentage of STs Below the Poverty Line decreased from 62.3 per cent to 45.3 per cent in rural areas and 35.5 per cent to 24.1 per cent in urban areas during the same period (Planning Commission, 2014). The gap in the poverty ratio for STs during 2011-12 is largest as compared to other social groups in terms of the poverty ratio of all population as shown in Table 1.4.

Social Groups	Rural		Urban
	2004-05	2011-12	2004-05	2011-12
Scheduled Tribes	62.3	45.3	35.5	24.1
Scheduled Castes	53.5	31.5	40.6	21.7
Other Backward Classes	39.8	22.6	30.6	15.4
Others	27.1	15.5	16.1	8.2
All Population	41.8	25.7	25.7	13.7

Despite various initiatives and attempts to bring developmental changes in the lives of Scheduled Tribes, the status of their literacy, health, housing, livelihood and poverty has not improved as envisioned by Dr Ambedkar and lags behind all other social groups in India.

Conclusion

In his speech in the Constituent Assembly, Dr Ambedkar cautioned by saying that, "...however good a Constitution may be, it is sure to turn out bad because those who are called to work it, happen to be a bad lot. However bad a Constitution may be, it may turn out to be good if those who are called to work it, happen to be a good lot" (Emmanuel, 2018). It is relevant because most schemes and policies designed for tribals have failed to bring the desired results. The constitutional provisions speak about the vision and perspective of Dr Ambedkar towards development in all aspects of tribal life particularly in education, health, housing, livelihood, culture etc. These need to be followed and implemented without modifications. There is also a need to give special emphasis on the participation of tribals in the formulation and implementation of policies and programs because, in absence of a full understanding of diverse culture, traditions, customs, ethnicity and socio-economic status of tribals, there is all possibility of failing these initiatives.

Dr. B. R Ambedkar And Woman Rights: An Analytical StudyDr. Shambunath

Guest lecturer in Dept, of Women's Studies

P.G Center Halahalli Bidar Gulabarga University, Kalaburagi

Abstract:

Dr. B. R Ambedkar is one of the greatest personalities of 20th century India. His life was a great saga of suffering, sacrifice and struggle. His birth as an untouchable gave him a bitter taste of caste tyranny, oppression and unbearable agony. He was a fighter for the dignity of man and deprived people. His life was a struggle of a champion of human rights. So obviously he was a great thinker of woman and their rights. Being a pioneer of social justice, he always worked for the woman emancipation. His principle aim was to build up a society based on social justice. To secure and fulfill his dreams he thought everybody should be equal irrespective of caste, creed, gender and religion. For that reason he started work for the upliftment of woman and their rights. In this context, the present paper intends and tries to narrate the rights and upliftment of woman in the view of Dr. B. R Ambedkar. The endeavor was also given to highlight the relevance of Dr. B. R Ambedkar at present day India.

Key Words: Dr. B. R Ambedkar, woman rights, social justice, relevance, India.

Introduction:

Dr. B. R Ambedkar -the great fighter and a deep thinker has made significant efforts on the path of liberty. He was the first Indian reformer who roots out the barriers in the way of advancement of Indian society in general and of women in particular. Above all he was a pioneer of social justice. To secure all these goals he laid down the foundation of social justice by incorporating many factors or issues into Indian constitution through its various articles for the Hindus and other sections of the society; specially for backward communities and for under privileged classes.

He started his movement in 1920. He raised his voice against the Hindu social order and social system through his renowned journal Mook Nayak in 1920 and Bahiskrit Bharat in 1927. Almost through its all issues he spoke on the gender equality, women education and exposed the problems related to women and other depressed class. He was also a strong advocate of family planning measures for women in Bombay Legislative Assembly.

Dr. B. R Ambedkar was an example of inspiration of many classes of society. He spent his whole life for the betterment of Indian society as well as women and other under privileged sections. He was also involved to root out the evil practices like prostitutions. He worked for the welfare of the people for his whole life. He builds up awareness among poor, illiterate women and inspired them to fight against the unjust and social practices like child marriages and devdasi system. As a result of that finally he added and incorporated many rights of women in the constitution of India. It is to be noted here that Dr. B. R Ambedkar was not only the father of Indian constitution, he was a freedom fighter, political leader, philosopher, thinker, economist, editor, social reformer, revivalist of Buddhism and above all he was the pioneer of backward classes. He stated women of Indian society should be given equal opportunity and equal share with their male counterpart.

Objectives, Methods and Materials:

The present paper is an endeavor to highlight Dr. B. R Ambedkar's view on women rights and problems in pre and post independent India and the relevancy of his ideas in present political and social scenario of India. Secondary data have been collected from internet, news papers, published papers and books.

Analysis and Discussion:

It is to be noted here that if we look at what Dr. B. R Ambedkar has done for the emancipation of women in Indian society, we have to highlight his pioneering work to improve the status of women by granting the fundamental rights to all the citizens irrespective of caste, creed, race and sex. Infact during the introduction of Hindu Code Bill in the Parliament, he had been strongly opposed by many MPs. Although later on, Dr. B. R Ambedkar supported his views on the ground that woman's right to property was accepted by Brihaspati Smriti and divorce by Parashara Smriti (T.Bharati). To understand the contribution rendered by Dr. B. R Ambedkar to liberate women from the cruel command of men, we have to trace out the status of women from the Vedic period to British raj.

In the initial stage of human history, the families were matriarchal. In those days of matriarchal families, it is a well known fact that women were physically stronger than men. During menstruation, pregnancy and child birth, she had to depend upon men for food and her protection which subsequently enslaved her and society took the form of "Patriarchal". In this way the matriarchal families have been changed to patriarchal families. Still women continued to enjoy authority and respect in the family. This was continued to Vedic period.

Status of women in Vedic period:

In the Vedic period women enjoyed all the necessary rights which are common for a human being. The women had access to all branches of learning. In Brahadaranika Upanishad (III, 6-8) we are told that in the king Janaka's Court, the maiden scholar Gargi was examined in her knowledge by Yaghavalkya (Tikoo, P.N.). The women enjoyed equal position on par with men. Even in a religious ceremony, women played an important role. No religious ceremony by men was complete without participation of his wife. For instance, Rama had to get statue of Sita made to carry on with ceremonies for Ashwamegh Yagna. In that period, the girls were free to choose their husband in open "Sayambars"

Status of women in later Vedic period:

The status of women in later Vedic period had been down grading and enslaving through sexual discrimination. The socio-economic status of the women was decreasing day by day. Many orthodox principles were imposed upon them and they had been deprived of basic human rights and opportunities. They were treated as slaves. They had no choices or freedom. They had been discriminated by men and orthodoxy structure of the society; even the minority suffered at the hands of majority. They were considered as one of the three „W"s-the wine, women and wealth (T.Bharathi). The women were expected to show their obedience to men. They had no property rights but they were treated as the property of men. Consequently the women in later Vedic period had thrown in complete darkness.

According to Manu, in his book “Manu Smriti” it is the very nature of women to corrupt men verse 2(213); woman has no right to acquire property verse 8 (416); Rules like serving husbands faithfully even, if he is devoid of any good qualities verse 154 (5); a girl, a young woman or even an old woman should not do anything independently, even in her own house, verse 147 (5). A widow should be long suffering until death, self-restrained and chaste (Abstain re-marring) verse 158 (5). She should obey her husband while he is alive and not violate her vow to him when he is dead 151 (5).

The Artha Shastra stated that the principle aim of woman is to get married and bear children. Bhishma and Yudhistira believed that the woman is the root cause of the evil. Swamy Sankaracharya (9th century A.D.) of Kerala proclaimed that a woman is a gate to hell and she is poison in the disguise of nectar. Katha Upanishad (2-5) strictly warns men not to follow women for “they strut about within the periphery of ignorance. They lead us as blind men lead the blind” (Tikoo, P.N.).

The so called golden Age of Guptas had been the Dark Age for women due to some evil practices performed by the women. They had been bound to perform those practices. They advocated early marriages-even the pre-puberty marriages. Some brahminical rules and dogmas were imposed upon women. The system started for keeping unmarried girls/women in temples „Dev-Dassies“ for the service including sexual abuse by the priest in the name of God. Polygamy, child marriage, illiteracy for women and discrimination on sex, besides caste, creed became order of the day. This is not the end, in the medieval period; Muslims invaded India and introduced strict rules for women to remain in Parda (Veil). It cannot be completed without mentioning the view of Tulsi Das about women. In his „Ramchariter Manas“ he said, „Nobody can be as vile as a woman, who for a moment’s enjoyment does not understand the pains of hundreds of births” (Sloka-9). In Sloka 5 he furthered said, “A woman is impure from her birth”. In Balkanda (Sloka-57-A) Tulsi wrote that a woman is silly and stupid by nature. In recent past a writer summed up the plight of women in his song „Aurat Ne Janam Diya Mardon ko, Mardon Ne use Bazar Diya’. (Woman gives birth to man, but man puts her in prostitution centre.).

Social Reformers:

After the era of such suffering, oppression and the outlook of many thinker regarding women and their rights, it would be quite inspiring and interesting to mention women position in the society in later periods. In the reign of British Raj in India, a new hope dawned in the mind of women for their emancipation. In most of the part, the western education system attracted and enlightened many Indians to work for the eradication of all evil practices that had been prevailed in Indian society. They started work to purify Hindu society from its old age tradition. In this context, we can make some illustrations such as according to Swami Vivekananda, “Women will work out their destinies much better than men can do for them”. Raja Rammohan Roy worked hard for the abolition of sati system. Jyotiba Phule sacrificed his life for the education of girls. There were many social workers who had sacrificed and laid down their lives for the rights of women.

Dr. B. R Ambedkar and justice to women:

Dr. B. R Ambedkar’s approach to women’s right is exclusively different from other social reformers like Jyotiba Phule, Raja Ram Mohan Roy, Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar and Mahatma Gandhi who tried to reform the Hindu society of certain outdated customs and practices without questioning the hierarchical social order. But Dr. B. R Ambedkar made his own view for the women rights and that has been reflected in Indian constitution. His goal was to make a society based on social justice. To secure this goal, Dr. B. R Ambedkar has given equal status to women on par with men by providing many provisions in the Indian constitution. To him, sexual discrimination should be root out from the society and everybody should get equal opportunity in the society. The Preamble of Indian constitution guarantees social and economic justice to women and that is because of Dr. B. R Ambedkar contribution. In the preamble it is mentioned: i) social, economic and political justice, ii) freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship, iii) equality of status and opportunity and iv) fraternity assuring dignity of the individual and national unity to all the citizens of India without any discrimination of caste, creed or sex.

Constitutional Rights and Women:

In Indian Constitution, there are few articles exist that help the women of Indian society to improve their position and to compete with their male counterparts. For example Article 14 – All are equal in the eyes of law and equally protected by the law. It means equal rights and opportunities in political, economic and social spheres. Article 15 prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex. Article 15(3) enables positive discrimination in favor of women. Article 16 mentions there shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office without any discrimination on the basis of religion, caste, creed and sex. Article 24 prohibits the employment of children below the age of 14 years in factories, mines or in any other hazardous employment. Article 39 and 39(d) state Equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work. As per article 41 the state shall guarantee within its economic limits to all the citizens, the right to work, to education and public assistance in certain cases. Article 42 the state makes provision for Human conditions of work and maternity relief. Under article 44, the state provides a uniform Civil Code to all the citizens throughout the territory of India. Article 46 – The state to promote with special care, the educational and economic interests of weaker section of people and to protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation. Article 47 – The state to raise the level of nutrition and standard of living of its people and the improvement of public health and so on. Article 51 (A) (C) – Fundamental duties to renounce practices, derogatory to the dignity of women. Article 243D (3), 243T (3) & 243R (4) provides for allocation of seats in the Panchayati Raj System.

The Hindu Code Bill:

Dr. B. R Ambedkar not only ascertain constitutional guarantees to women but also introduced and got past four Acts which strengthened the position of women in the society. These were incorporated in the Hindu Code Bill. These are: i) The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955. ii) The Hindu Succession Act, 1956. lii) The Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956. Iv) The Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956.

If we look at the provisions of those Acts, we can easily make out that Dr. B. R Ambedkar was a great thinker of women rights and emancipation. Provisions that have been enshrined in the Acts are as follows:

The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955

The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 was amended in 1976 made the following provisions for women:

1. The legitimization of illegitimate children (Sec.16).
2. Punishment-bigamy (Sec.26).
3. Custody of children (Sec. 26).
4. Marriageable age of females raised to 18 years.
5. Provision for alimony (Sec. 25). The Act abolishes the difference between a maiden and a widow.

The Hindu Succession Act, 1956

This Act contains the following provisions for women:

1. A widow has a right to adopt a son or a daughter which was not there in the Hindu Law.
2. It also provided an opportunity to be independent and dispose of her property by will as she wishes and desires (Sec. 14).
3. A uniform scheme of succession to the property of a Hindu female, who dies, intestate after commencement of the Act, was made in Section 15. Previously under the uncodified law the succession to stridhan varied according to the marital status of a woman.

The Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956:

Following provisions are come under the purview of this Act:

1. The mother is empowered to change the guardian, appointed by the father and may appoint a new guardian by will.
2. The father's right to appoint a guardian for the minor by will during the life time of the minor's mother is prohibited under this Act.

The Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956:

This Act has the following provisions:

1. This Act accepts adoption of a male and a female child without any difference, whereas under the uncodified law a daughter could not be adopted.
2. This Act permits a wife to adopt a child on her own right even during her husband's life time. She had no such right prior to this enactment.
3. In the uncodified law a spinster or a widow had no right to adopt whereas this Act grants them the right to adopt.
4. Under the old Hindu Law a wife need not be consulted while adopting a child or while giving a child for adoption, whereas this Act made it essential to consult her in both the cases.
5. Section 11 lays down that, a father should adopt a daughter at least 21 years younger to him.

Conclusion:

It may undoubtedly be mentioned here that Dr. B. R Ambedkar was a path-maker of all the women irrespective of religion, caste, creed, gender etc. He brought a new trend for uprising the women through his thoughts and beliefs. Not only women all the people of India should thankful to him because of his tremendous and everlasting steps of developmental works. He also talked about the Muslim women about wearing veil, their religious traditions and marriages. Keeping in mind the importance of Dr. B. R Ambedkar "s views towards Indian society, the then prime minister of India Pandit Jawaharlal Neheru said, "Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a symbol of revolt against all oppressive features of Hindu society". In present day context, Dr. B. R Ambedkar and his thoughts on society based on equality are yet to be realized for reconstructing Indian society and making the life of women better.

Dr. B. R Ambedkar was a fighter for women emancipation. He fought against all kinds of discrimination against women throughout his whole life. But still discrimination against women in Indian society is overlooked. So it is our duty to fulfill the dreams of Dr. B. R Ambedkar for a better life world of women. It may also be mentioned here that the term „Social Justice“ will not be exercised properly if the people of India should not change their attitudes specially towards women, SCs, STs and other weaker section of the society. In the era of globalization many MNCs are searching for merit for the smooth running of the functions of their companies. In that context, to prevail social justice in the society, the companies should work within the constitutional framework and the concerned state government or central government should make rules, regulation for the engagement and involvement of people from different categories so as to ensure social justice. So that society would be based on equality and equal opportunity. In this way the dreams of Dr. B. R Ambedkar would be fulfilled.

It is also to be narrated here that, at present the Indian women have progressed a lot in various parts of their life although they are still suffering from various social evils like dowry, eve teasing, rape etc. It is a fact that in the glorious development of Indian society, the Indian women have march forward to the developmental process and somewhere treated equally with their male counterparts but it is yet to be realized by the people of India that women should have given the equal rights and opportunity with men so as to establish a shining India where women can live freely and equally irrespective of religion, caste, creed, gender etc.

I would like to conclude here by quoting Dr. B. R Ambedkar's slogan on Unity, Education and Agitation.

“Unity is meaningless without the accompaniment of women. Education is fruit-less without educated women, and Agitation is incomplete without the strength of women”.

Ambedkar underscored the point that it was shameful to survey the land point that it was unfair to evaluate the land income on the pay. The pace of evaluation didn't rely upon the ability to cover the assessment. The available limit was upgraded with the development in the income. After autonomy the public authority has proceeded with the current land income framework in the country. A few states have received rural annual expenses, yet not canvassed any remaining states in the country. Rural areas might be one of the significant expense bases of the country. It should be a brought together arrangement of tax assessment from agribusiness and non farming areas.

1.10 Economics of Caste System in India-

The significant obstruction to monetary development and improvement in India is the standing framework. idleness work and capital in the nation is because of the position framework in the country, the work and capital into the occupations chiefly allotted as per the station framework, which can be depicted by the way that individuals in India contribute and utilize their abilities according to project. regardless of whether these choices may be wasteful for them. The position framework then again, advocates propagation of the customary financial example and as such is unfavorable to monetary turn of events. Ambedkar accepts that the act of Distance is a revile to humanism. He clarified that the standing framework is liable for the financial strength class and blacklist of the lower class of society, because of the way that this condition naturally shuts the entryways of schooling and preparing to the more vulnerable people groups and furthermore answerable for the division of works. The work force was separated based on the Byte Framework in India. Standing situation kept the privileged from getting living, instruction and work according to the station of the more vulnerable part of the general public. Standing framework prompted the subjection, fortified work framework which was answerable for the sexual and monetary abuse of the oppressed.

1.11 Economic Growth and Development

1.12 Strategy for Economic Development:

To recommend the technique of financial development and advancement, Ambedkar investigates the issue of little land property in India. He found in his investigation that more than union and expansion of land possessions, change of them into financial property using right extents of capital and different sources of info is required. Also, he expressed that the advancement of industrialization would from one perspective reduce the weight over the farming area by moving the overflow work from e land and then again, make more capital instruments for use In agribusiness area along these lines driving its encouraging. So his procedure for monetary development and improvement is a comprehensive just as right development technique according to best ideas of Financial matters whereby monetary advancement begins with the development of essential areas, excess work from it moves to optional area business and concurrent improvement of two areas to support one another. Ambedkar put stock in a ridiculous society yet not in a stateless society. He kept up that the state would keep on existing as long as human culture endured.

1.13 Trade Cycle

Exchange cycle is the necessary element of the industrialist economy. Two class economy for example rich varcess poor, is the aftereffect of an entrepreneur economy. Ambedkar concentrated in detail the significant part of the exchange cycle which was dismissed by Prof. Keynes and other present day market analysts of the world. Dr. Ambedkar clarified that discriminative society was liable for the diverse effect of the exchange cycle. Ambedkar contended for the fixing of the economy through legitimate money related just as the financial strategy of the country. Poor need to forfeit in wretchedness while the rich are ahead in the period of thriving. Dr. Ambedkar clarified the imperfections of exchange cycle and proposed measures to control exchange cycle with uncommon reference to poor people,

Economic Thoughts of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar : A Discussion

Dr Bandana Pathak

Assistant Professor in Economics(OES - I)

S.B.Womens' Autonomous College, Cuttack.Odisha.

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar is known as the architect of Indian constitution. He is also well known for his views against social discrimination. But the other side of his personality is not been discussed much. Particularly on his academic aspect. Very few people known that he was an economist. This review articles tries to touch the very less told or untold activities of his life. Some of his economic ideas too deserve greater attention. The article highlights those areas.

A brief Life History

Babasaheb as he is popularly known was born in 14 April 1891. He was a jurist, economist, politician and social reformer. He was the member of the Drafting Commission of Indian constitution. He was first Minister of Law and Justice of independent India, and was the chief architect of the Constitution of India. In 1951, Ambedkar established the Finance Commission of India. (wikipedia), He was conferred upon Bharat Ratna award posthumously in 1990.

An Economist

He began his career as an economist, making important contributions to the major economic issues of that era. He was, in fact, among the best educated economists India ever had. He got his doctorate degree in economics from Columbia University in the US and another from the London School of Economics. His thesis of London School of Economics was based on the management of the rupee. At that time, there was a big debate on the relative merits of the gold standard vis-à-vis the gold exchange standard.

Objective of the study

The objective of the study is to discuss the economic thoughts of Dr. Ambedkar. His views on different economic aspects only. His ideas were discussed on the basis of macro economic angle by taking into account monetary standard, public finance, land holding, production activities, social evil, problem of unemployment, problem of industrialization and urbanization and welfare motive.

Sources of Information

The study is based on secondary sources, from publications by different authors. Since the study is based on economic aspects, it has borrowed facts from authors like Pramit Bhattacharya, Manjula Laxman, Dillip Halder and many others mentioned in reference. The information available on his academic, particularly as an economist is very few in comparison to his political and social activities.

Economic Thoughts of Dr B.R. Ambedkar

In this article a brief account of his works in the field of economics is discussed by taking into accounts certain important units. It is concerned with the problems of that time period. But some of his ideas are still relevant. "Dr. Ambedkar wrote three scholarly books on economics (i) Administration and Finance of the East India Company, (Columbia University,

Theme of the Special Issue Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar : An Architect of India (Special Issue No.84)	ISSN 2349-638x Impact Factor 7.149	14 th April 2021

1915). (ii) The Problem of the Rupee: Its Origin and Its Solution. (P S King and Son Ltd, London 1923) (iii) The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India, – A Study in the Provincial Decentralization of Imperial Finance (P S King and Son Ltd, London 1925). The first and third books represent his contribution to the field of public finance: the first one evaluating finances of the East India Company during the period, 1792 through 1858. The second book, represents a seminal contribution to the field of monetary economics.”(Laxman M)

On Monetary Standard

At that time there was a big debate on the relative merits of the gold standard vis-a-vis gold exchange standard. The gold standard refers to a convertible currency in which gold coins are issued, and may be complemented with paper money, which is pledged to be fully redeemable in gold. In contrast, under the gold exchange standard, only paper money is issued, which is kept exchangeable at fixed rates with gold and authorities back it up with foreign currency reserves of such countries as are on the gold standard. “Ambedkar argued in favour of a gold standard as opposed to the suggestion by John Maynard Keynes that India should embrace a gold exchange standard.He argued that a gold exchange standard allowed the issuer greater freedom to manipulate the supply of money, jeopardizing the stability of the monetary unit.”(Bhattacharya P. 2016)

On Federal Finance

He had also presented his idea on federal finance. Ambedkar’s Columbia dissertation was on the state-center financial relations. His guide was Edwin Seligman one of the foremost authorities on public finance in the world. Ambedkar argued that under a sound administrative system, each political unit should be able to finance its expenditure by raising its own resources, without having to depend too heavily on another. .(Bhattacharya P. 2016) Ambedkar’s views on the rupee and on public finance were responses to the economic problems of the day so not all of his analysis may be relevant in current situation. But some of the his principles such as that of price stability and of fiscal responsibility remain relevant even today.(Laxman M 2019)

On land as a factor of production and land holding

Ambedkar was aware of the problem of small landholdings in India and their fragmentation. After examining various proposals to consolidate and enlarge such landholdings that were being debated in those days, Ambedkar came to the conclusion that such proposals were problematic. According to him land was only one of the factors of production required to produce crops, and unless it was used in an optimal proportion with other factors of production, it would be inefficient.it expresses the factor proportion relation. “Landholdings should, therefore, not be fixed but should ideally vary with the availability of other factors of production: increasing with the availability of farm equipment and shrinking if the latter shrank.”(Bhattacharya P. 2016)

On stock of Capital

He was also aware of capital and saving and both are related to income. Ambedkar argued that raising of stock of capital will be possible with greater savings in the economy.(Bhattacharya P. 2016) This was not possible as long as a great mass of people depended on land for their livelihoods. This shows one of the reason that India or any developing countries are poor in capital due to lack of saving. Therefore, he mentioned about industrialization in relation to India’s agricultural problem.“In short, strange though it may seem, industrialization of India is the soundest remedy for the agricultural problems of India," Ambedkar concluded. “The cumulative effects of industrialization, namely a lessening pressure (on land) and an increasing amount of capital and capital goods will forcibly create the economic necessity of enlarging the holding. Not only this, industrialization by destroying the premium on land will give rise to few occasions for its sub-division and fragmentation” (Bhattacharya P 2016)

Concept of disguised unemployment

What is most remarkable about Ambedkar’s analysis is that he was able to conceive of the notion of “disguised unemployment” much before it came into vogue in development economics, and that he was able to anticipate one of the key insights of Nobel Prize-winning economist Arthur Lewis three decades before Lewis formulated his famous two-sector model of the economy. (Bhattacharya P 2016) Lewis explained the theory of “unlimited supply of labour” by taking into account subsistence sector and capitalist sector.

Lewis presumed that developing economies had surplus and idle labour in the farm sector, and showed how transferring labour from farms to factories would raise savings and productivity levels in both sectors, leading to overall growth. The capitalist surplus so created is used for expansion so the it can able to absorb some more labour and the process will go on. The model Lewis formulated in 1954 was far more elaborate than what Ambedkar outlined in his essay, but there are much similarities in the both analysis.

On process of industrialization and urbanization

Although Ambedkar spoke out in favour of industrialization and urbanization, he also warned of the ills of capitalism, arguing that uncontrolled capitalism could turn into a force of oppression and exploitation. Though at that time environmental degradation due to too much industrialization was not much discussed .But he was fully aware of ill effects.

It was Ambedkar who proposed to the Constituent Assembly that the chapter on fundamental rights in the Constitution should include both negative rights (relating to civil liberties) as well as positive rights (relating to social and economic justice). In a memorandum on this subject, Ambedkar outlined his vision of the rights of citizenship in a free India, and explained why it would entail extensive state control over the economy.(Sonone O 2018))Probably at that time just after independence this should be the policy towards growth.

He concludes that “Industrialisation of India is the soundest remedy for the agricultural problems of India”. This can generate adequate surplus that will also eventually benefit the agriculture. Industries need raw material and most of it available from agricultural production. Most of the population is engaged in farming in India. Disguised unemployment in a agriculture and dependency of increasing population can become problem for an economy. According to him industrilisation is a positive solution.

Ambedkar was against “economic exploitation”, so that he believed , that key industries should be owned and run by the state and that agriculture should be a state industry. Ambedkar argued that a modified form of state socialism in industry was necessary for rapid industrialization, and that collective farming was the only salvation for landless labourers belonging to the “untouchable” castes.

On Profit Motive

Ambedkar argued that an economy based purely on the profit motive violated two tenets of political democracy: one, it allowed private employers, rather than the state, to govern the lives of individuals, and two, it may force an individual to give up his constitutional rights to gain a living.(Singh A. P. 2018)

“If a person who is unemployed is offered a choice between a job of some sort, with some sort of wages, with no fixed hours of labour and with an interdict on joining a union and the exercise of his right to freedom of speech, association, religion, etc., can there be any doubt as to what his choice will be?” Ambedkar wrote. “The fear of starvation, the fear of losing a house, the fear of losing savings if any... are factors too strong to permit a man to stand out for his Fundamental Rights.”(Singh A. P. 2018)

On Public Fund

Ambedkar stressed on maximum utilisation of public funds. He opposed income tax for low-income groups. He contributed in Land Revenue Tax and excise duty policies to stabilise the economy. He played an important role in land reform and the state economic development. He said that economic achievement is optimum utilisation of public funds. But mere apparent faithfulness to the original intentions and wisdom are not sufficient in themselves for public expenditure to achieve social well-being. The importance of the third canon of public expenditure that is canon of ‘Economy’ in public expenditure does not simply a low level of public spending, but it is the intelligent use of funds so that every paise fetches the most benefit.(Laxmam M 2019) Those in charge of public funds must strive to evaluate alternative methods of achieving the objectives to stop leakages. The canons emphasise that the expenditure decisions should closely relate to the specified objectives and the available resources besides ensuring economy, efficiency and effectiveness in the implementation of government decisions, schemes, projects, etc. Public funds are asset of country it is in large scale but due to corruption and political pressure it does not reach completely to the end beneficiaries. .(Laxmam M 2019)

On social evils

He was a staunch supporter of socio-economic equality in society. He devoted his whole life for upliftment of society. He tries to stop the discrimination of high level and low level untouchable. He fought for human rights and equality in connection to use of natural resources. He placed much value on democracy ,individual and judicious state action

On Liberalism

Just after independence India continued to be a mixed economy. Reform process started in 1990s. So at that time Indian economy adopted the good features of capitalism and socialism. Some libertarian lawyers were in favour of minimum state intervention to protect liberty, Ambedkar argued that withdrawal of the state may lead to liberty but that liberty is “liberty to the landlords to increase rents, for capitalists to increase hours of work and reduce rate of wages”.

“In an economic system employing many workers, producing goods at regular intervals, someone must make rules so that workers will work and the wheels of industry run on,” he wrote. “If the state does not do it, the private employer will. Life otherwise will become impossible. In other words, what is called liberty from the control of the state is another name for the dictatorship of the private employer.”(Laxman M 2019)

These thoughts show the greatness of an economist, who thought about all the important aspects of economy. Economics is involved with human behavior in a system and always affected by that era. India was mixed economy when Ambedkar worked. But now after reforms liberalization, privatization and globalization prevails. So some of his idea may not be appropriate in this era, but one can imagine about the depth of the knowledge he had.

Concluding Note

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was an intelligent economist of his time. He had contributed not only thoughts but also fought for upliftment of exploited masses. His economic thoughts have been useful to Indian economy and can be used as positive solution for some of current economic problems in India. In his work he had mentioned everything from land and labour to profit motive and welfare motive. He was aware of the fact that in developing, highly populated country like India, the role of state is important. He was aware of employment generation and income creation through industrialization, but at the same time he was also aware of ill effects of industrialization. He was supporter of equal rights and equal opportunity among the people of the country. This kind of eminent personality is no more with us but we can get immense benefit from his views on economic activity which leads to growth.

Dr. Ambedkar : As a Great EconomistDr. Narayanamma.P.N.Assistant Professor of Economics, GFGC Malur, Kolar (D),Abstract

Dr. B.R Ambedkar was among the most outstanding intellectuals of India in the 20th century. His work in economics is noteworthy. His views deals with public finance and agriculture are landmark in the economics. Ambedkar's commitment was internal stability and he was convinced that only an automatic system based on gold standard with gold currency could achieve this desirable end. He was of view that governments should spend the resources garnered from the public not only as per rules, laws and regulations, but also to see that "faithfulness, wisdom and economy". Intervening in a discussion in the Bombay Legislative Council on October 10, 1927, Dr. Ambedkar argued that the solution to the agrarian question "lies not in increasing the size of farms, but in having intensive cultivation that is employing more capital and more labor on the farms such as we have." Further on, he says: "The better method is to introduce cooperative agriculture and to compel owners of small strips to join in cultivation." Thus Ambedkar thought on public Finance and agriculture has vital relevance and still applicable in current situation of India. In order to enhance productivity of agriculture sector, government is needed to take measures on the basis of Dr. Ambedkar's thought.

Introduction

After long stretches of disregard, the thoughts of B.R. Ambedkar appear to acquire money. While his musings on Indian culture and governmental issues have earned more consideration, a portion of his monetary thoughts also merit more prominent consideration. Referred to a great extent as the dad of the Indian Constitution and a head of Dalit's, Ambedkar started his profession as a market analyst, making significant commitments to the major financial discussions of the day. He was, truth is told, among the best instructed financial specialists of his age in India, having procured a doctorate in financial aspects from Columbia University in the US and another from the London School of Economics. Ambedkar's London doctoral theory, later distributed as a book, was on the administration of the rupee. Around then, there was a major discussion on the overall benefits of the best quality level opposite the gold trade standard. The highest quality level alludes to convertible cash wherein gold coins are given, and might be supplemented with paper cash, which is sworn to be completely redeemable in gold. Interestingly, under the gold trade standard, just paper cash is given, which is kept interchangeable at fixed rates with gold and specialists back it up with unfamiliar money stores of such nations as are on the highest quality level. Ambedkar contended for a highest quality level instead of the idea by John Maynard Keynes that India should accept a gold trade standard. He contended that a gold trade standard permitted the backer more prominent opportunity to control the stock of cash, endangering the strength of the money related unit. Ambedkar's Columbia exposition was on the state-focus monetary relations under the direction of Edwin Seligman, one of the premier experts on open money on the planet.

Ambedkar's perspectives on the rupee and on open money were reactions to the seething monetary issues of the day and not the entirety of his investigation might be significant today. However, a portion of the standards he articulated like that of value solidness and of financial obligation stay applicable even today. Of all his scholarly distributions, the one that has matured best and has extraordinary importance for contemporary monetary discussions is a 1918 article on cultivating and ranch property distributed in the diary of the Indian Economic Society.

Objectives:

1. To consider and comprehend Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's monetary way of thinking.
2. To learn about Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's part in our financial matters.
3. To investigate Dr. Ambedkar's flexible job in friendly financial aspects.
4. To study the Economic contemplations of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's.

Research Methodology:

This paper depends on the part of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's in financial matters with the assistance of auxiliary information assortment. The optional information is accumulated from different distributed Journals, Books, Internet (websites) and exploration papers.

This paper examines about the commitments of Bharat Ratna awardee Dr. B.R. Ambedkar in the field of financial matters. The significant commitment of Babasaheb in the sub fields of financial aspects like public account, rural financial aspects, issue of standing framework in monetary turn of events, thought regarding new water and force strategy are the not many which is examined in this paper. These amazing commitments by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar are talked about under the accompanying heads:

1. Issue of Rupee: Gold Standard versus Gold Exchange Standard
2. Commitments in Public Finance
 - a. Development of Provincial Finance in British India
 - b. Annulment of Khoti System
 - c. Ambedkar's Canons of Public Expenditure
3. Contribution in Agriculture Economics: Problem of Small Holdings in India
5. Other Contribution in the Economic Development of India
 - a. New water and power policy

1. Problem of Rupee: Gold Standard versus Gold Exchange Standards Before 1835 in India numerous coins were available for use and this was very befuddling. East India Company (EIC) attempted to tackle this issue by bringing together every one of the monetary standards. A demonstration was passed to present the bimetallism (Gold and Silver). Because of the revelation of gold in different pieces of Australia and California gold coins (Bad money) were exaggerated and drove the silver coins (Good cash) out of the market. In 1853, EIC quit getting any gold coins and attempted to demonetize the gold money. This prompted liquidity emergency and simultaneously interest for silver coins irritated. Legislature of India was not for presenting gold cash and favored paper money to improve the circumstance. In this way, in 1861 paper cash act was passed and paper money was made the legitimate delicate. Yet, these paper and silver monetary standards were sufficiently not to adapt up to the expanding monetary interest. In 1870's silver metal was found in South America and Mexico, because of this in 1873 the estimation of silver definitely tumbled down regarding gold. Subsequently there was a fall in the conversion standard and British imports got costly. Enormous scope printing of rupee around then offered ascend to high expansion. Idea was made to receive the best quality level and quit printing of silver coins. In 1893, printing of silver coins was halted and Indian rupee was received as the lawful delicate. In the time frame 1898 to 1916, gold trade standard were embraced and more accentuation was given to the outside solidness for example swapping scale strength. In 1914-15, the conversion scale got powerless and India was running out of gold to repay its settlements. Prompting an increment in the interest of rupee, subsequently administration of India began stamping rupee to handle the circumstance. This made inflationary pressing factor in the economy at that timeframe. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar contemplated this matter top to bottom and remarked on whether the highest quality level or gold trade standard would be better for check the swelling in a nation like India. In his doctoral proposition he has referenced that overabundance significance was given to swapping scale solidness as opposed to value dependability. As indicated by him conversion scale dependability will profit just the exchanging class not the poor's in the economy.

2. Commitments in Public Finance

2.1 Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India In 1925, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar composed a book on "The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India". In this book he has examined about the cause, advancement and system of common money. He has likewise referenced about the commonplace money under legislature of India act 1919. The time frame which he has canvassed in this book is from 1833 to 1921. Babasaheb has discussed the issue with the centralization of government account in India from 1833 to 1871. He showed that in this period the financial framework was blemished with dangerous assessments and the consumption done by the public authority was ineffective. After 1858, it was seen that supreme government as the official didn't oversee the country while commonplace government who regulated the nation didn't have the ability to make the laws. Common government used to make the financial plans and magnificent government reserved the privilege to back these spending plans. All things being equal common government didn't have ability to raise its own assets and to make arrangements in administrations. This allowed the chance to the public authority of India to meddle in the common managerial works. By this Government of India began abusing its consumptions, accordingly they went under a horrible monetary strain. Eventually, in 1871, it was concluded that common government ought to set up its own income and consumption spending plan. There onwards from 1871 to 1876 commonplace money was presented as a financial plan. Under this Diarchy framework monetary duties were split between the common government and the middle. Ambedkar examined that this sort of plan prompted high tax assessment which was more perilous.

Annulment of Khoti System

Ambedkar moved a bill against the Khoti framework in 1937 which was famously known as "The Khoti Abolition Act". English government used to name some amazing people known as Khots. They were mediators between the expense authority (British Government) and citizen (Inferior land holders). Khots were dependable to surrender the expense income gathered for the whole domain to the British government, for this they used to uninhibitedly adventure and misuse the mediocre land holders. This sort of framework was more conspicuous in the Ratnagiri area, Kolaba region and Thana locale. Ambedkar needed that this enemy of Khoti bill ought to be authorized in the total Bombay Presidency.

Ambedkar's Canons of Public Expenditure

In 1945, while examining about the elements of Comptroller and Auditor General of India Ambedkar called attention to that administration ought to mindfully spend the public assets. The income which is gathered from people in general ought to be spend as indicated by rules and guidelines and due regard ought to be given to unwaveringness, intelligence and economy. These standards of expenditure the public asset are known as Ambedkar's Canon of Public Expenditure. The word reference implications of confidence are obligation, responsibility and guarantee. It's the obligation of the public authority to give the fundamental conveniences to the citizens. We realize that it is not difficult to hoodwink general society as the public venture has a long development slack period. Along these lines, each administration should remember that public has an enormous confidence in them and they ought to be resolved to give streets, clinical offices, peace and lawfulness to its residents.

Contribution in Agriculture Economics: Problem of little possessions in India

The serious issue of Indian horticulture is low profitability of land. One of the principle reasons of low efficiency is the little land possessions by the ranchers. In 1917, a council was shaped to give ideas on the issue of little holding in the Baroda state. The panel gave an idea to combine the holding which can be developed by an individual rancher under the regulatory measures. Dr.B.R.Ambedkar was agreeable to solidification of land possessions yet as per him it ought to be state claimed. State ought to obtain all the horticultural land from the private players, proprietors, inhabitants or mortgagers and pay them the correct remuneration, subsequent to merging the gained land it ought to designate this land in a standard size to the first cultivators with no segregation dependent on position, ideology and religion.

Other Contributions in the Economic Development of India

New water and power policy

Ambedkar's job as a Minister of public works has completely been neglected. In 1942-46, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar started new water and force strategy. The principle motivation behind this approach was to use the water assets of the country in an ideal manner. Ambedkar had a dream about the activities remembering the Tennessee Valley Scheme of USA. He was an extraordinary visionary and properly saw that it is just the multipurpose tasks which can take care of the issues of floods, starvations, power deficiency, and water system. For the improvement of the country Babasaheb started fabricating the primary multipurpose waterway valley project known as Damodar Valley Project in Bengal and Bihar. As a piece of public water strategy the targets of this undertaking was to control the floods in the encompassed districts, to help the ranchers through water system, to control the starvations and to tackle the issue of force supply. This isn't the single waterway valley project which was architected by Dr. B.R.Ambedkar different tasks were Bhakra-Nagal Dam (Highest gravity dam), Hirakud Dam (Longest major earthen dam) and Sone waterway valley project. Dr.B.R.Ambedkar needed that water assets and their administration ought to be constrained by the middle, so the issue of water questions, water starving and so on could be settled.

Conclusion

What would we be able to close from this short introduction to the different financial subjects with whom Ambedkar was concerned? The estimation of his decisions is significant unequivocally in light of the fact that his investigation depended on sound experimental and recorded establishments. Key ventures will be claimed and run by the state. Fundamental yet non-key ventures will be claimed by the state and run by the state or by partnerships set up by it. Horticulture will be a state industry, and be coordinated by the state assuming control over all land and allowing it to out for development in reasonable standard sizes to inhabitants of towns; these will be developed as aggregate ranches by gatherings of families. He likewise focuses on the requirement for industrialization in order to move overflow work from horticulture to other beneficial occupations, joined by huge capital interests in agribusiness to raise yields. He sees a critical part for the state in such change of agribusiness and supporters the nationalization of land and the renting out of land to gatherings of cultivators, who are to be urged to frame cooperatives to advance farming.

Abstract –

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was more than a minority leader. He was a lawyer with forensic intellect and an economist of no mean repute. Dr. Babasahen Ambedkar was a keen expert of economics. This article analyzes his views and thoughts on economic development and Planning. The objective of this article is the focus on the aspects of Dr. Ambedkar observations on economic and social issues in India.

Introduction

It is well recognized that Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was one of the great intellectual giants who contributed to making of the nation that India is today through intellectual discourse and social activism, to an extent through a kind of crusade, besides leading the drafting committee of the constitution which may later in life he might have loved to repudiate. Many study articles/study papers have been carried out on his work and contribution to the much desired social causes, but it is observed that enough attention has not been paid to his contribution in the economic domain. It was clear right from the beginning that Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar used his scholastic understanding, his perceptions, western as it was, to study the problems of India, Indian Society, economy and polity-was facing, much in the fashion classical economists were doing in the 18th and 19th centuries in European Countries. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar has made many contributions, as a budding economists. He had made in depth study of Indian agriculture, Indian economy etc. He wrote many research articles and organized seminars and conferences in order to solve the economic problems, problems of farmers etc. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar criticized the imperial government for their oppressive system of taxation and emphasized the necessity of progressive system. Through the tax policy of India is based on the principles of equity and justice theoretically, but in practice the experiences in this regards are disappointing. Similarly Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar critique of the British Government expenditure policy of top propriety to unproductive expenditure on welfare programmes held equally good in case of expenditure policy after Independence.

Economic Thought and Philosophy of

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar – He had extensively written on most complex and technical, as also theoretical issues including day to day economic problems. The studies done by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar are economically logical, thoughtful and analytical. Though almost all of his literature on economy and social issues pertained to the pre-Independence period; but his approach and his thoughts, foresights kept them so fresh that they throw a light on some of the most important economic problems facing by the country even today. He put to a close scrutiny both-the tax structure and expenditure pattern under the financial system and indicated that, they were against the interests of the Indian society, since the policy was in favor of British Government. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's work related to the all aspects of the finances of the Union government, Provincial governments and various local bodies. Therefore, his studies and thoughts pertaining to economy provide deep insights into intricate issues arising out of the strained Centre states financial relations in the country.

He was probably the first thinker to analyze economic dimensions of social issues in India such as the caste system and untouchability. In the opinion of Dr. Ambedkar “caste in India means an artificial chopping of the population into fixed and definite units, each one prevented from fusing into another through the custom of endogamy,” This castes system rained the social and economic development of depressed section of Indian Society. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar favored state intervention in economic affairs. His advocacy for the establishment of state socialism forcefully brings out is vision of free India’s political economy. He emphasized the role of the state to guarantee equality of economic opportunities, where the poor the downtrodden and the oppressed classes of people are able to defend their economic liberty. He was in the opinion that state should plan the economic development of the people on the line, which would lead to the highest point of productivity without clasing every avenue to private enterprise and also provide for the equitable distribution of wealth.

Dr. Ambedkar had also made in-depth study of Indian Agricultural sector in terms of economy. His views on agriculture are found in his article titled-“Small Holding in Indian and their remedies,” (1917) and also found in “Status and Minorities,” (1947). Dr. Ambedkar mentioned that holdings of lands by few people is an acute problem in Indian agricultural sector which has various disadvantages, such as difficulties in cultivation and unilization of resources, increasing cost, low productivity, inadequate income and low standard of living. According to Dr. Ambedkar productivity of agriculture is related to not with the size of holdings of land, but also with other factors like capital, labour and other inputs. In the opinion of Dr. Ambedkar if capital or labour are not available in adequate quantity and quality, then even a large size land can become unproductive. On the other hand small size land become productive if capital and labor are available in a large quantity. With this vision of Dr. Ambedkar, the “Land Ceiling Act,” is passed arfter Independence. He suggested many measures for solving agricultural problems. These measures are collective farming, economic holding of land or eual distribution of land, large scale industrialization, monetry provision water seeds and fertilizers by the government, allotting waste land to landless labour, minimum wages to labour, control over and regulation of private lenders of loan to farmers etc. Dr. Ambedkar was not the first to take note of low productivity of agriculture, or the idleness of labour, nor was he the first to advocate for industrialization but, it is important to note that, he was probably the first to interconnect the three in general interdependence framework.

In the opinion of Dr. Ambedkar the socio-economic development of an economy depends primarily upon the availability of adequate finances and their proper utilization. Under the East India Company, there was generally an inadequate supply of finance and also misuse of available sources. He observed that, in spite of the early industrialization in some parts of India, te country as a whole was predominantly as an agricultural one and as a result, land provided the state with a major part of its revenue.

Dr. Ambedkar’s opinion was that the burden of tax should be as per ability to pay to the government but some studies shows that it is far away from reality. The tax pattern in case of direct taxes remains near about same in proportion. According to him, because of faculty system of taxes, there is adverse effect on horizontal and vertical equity. Dr. Ambedkar pointed out that exemption and deduction for a variety of purposes have eroded the tax base. According to him, the burden of taxes was more on the poor people of the society in British regime. He criticized the revenue system of British government. He mainly criticized the revenue system on the background that it was against the interests of poor people. Dr. Ambedkar also pointed out that, land revenue was highly oppressive and other taxes like, salt tax, custom duties were injurious. Therefore he argued that the government should undertake legislation to make the tax policy more equitable and elastic. According to him, the first and most essential requirement of a good tax system is that it should be reliable. In his opinion it does not matter whether that revenue system brings in large revenue or small revenue but whether it brings it ought to be certain in its yield. He criticized the British government because they did not reduce the land revenues, nor were they prepared to tax the rich farmers.

Dr. Ambedkar was of the opinion that, tax must be levied on taxable capacity or income and it must be progressive that is the rich people must be taxed more and the poor people less. According to him exemptions to tax payers should be allowed to those who have a lower income. Dr. Ambedkar suggested that, land revenue item must not be rigid and complicated but it should be flexible and subject to variations; and there should be equity in taxation. He opined that, no taxation system should be manipulated to lower the standard of living of the people. There should be efficiency in taxation system.

Dr. Ambedkar wanted the expenditure policy of the state to be guided by the principle of providing more public utility services and generating more employment. On many occasions he referred to the nature and structure of general budgeting and complained against meager provision for social development. In his opinion, the government was willfully neglecting developmental activities for the social beneficiaries' activities as the army was eating into the vital share of the funds. Thus, Dr. Ambedkar was a strong critic of the expenditure pattern of the British government of India, because the government was spending large proportion of total revenue on non-development and unproductive activities leaving a meager provision for welfare programmes. Dr. Ambedkar had rigorously examined the financial policies of British government in India. He proved that the principal single head of Dr. Ambedkar was critically discussed on the problems related to currency in his book titled- "The Problem of the Rupee." It was an instructive treatise on a controversial subject. According to him, closing of the mints would prevent inflation and disturbances in the internal price level. Dr. Ambedkar advocated that the standard of value should be gold and the elasticity of the currency should come from this source. He emphasized that with a gold basis both-expansion and contraction should be easy. Dr. Ambedkar had shown great scholarship and tremendous amount of hard work in the economy sector.

Hence, it is evident that Dr. Ambedkar's thoughts, philosophy and his economic vision and many others are significant contributions to the economic development of India. As the existing laws and reforms Land Ceiling Act, Minimum wages Act. Distribution of surplus land etc. are not effective- it is necessary to reconsider them in the context of Dr. Ambedkar's perspective. Also as current scenario of Indian economy, inflation, conditions of farmer, India's large young labour force not being fully utilized for the economic development there is a need to reconsider the thoughts of Dr. Ambedkar and again frame the nation's economic policies towards better economical growth of India. Dr. Ambedkar was for development of agriculture, employment of all idle labour, economic holding, and increase of productivity of factors responsible for the development of society as well as country. It should be noted that, Dr. Ambedkar remarked about the Constitutional provisions of federal finance. He said – "I feel that Constitution is workable, it is flexible and it is strong enough to hold the country together in peace time and in war time. If things go wrong under the new Constitution, the reason will not be that we had a bad Constitution, what we will have to say is that the man was vile.”

Conclusion

Dr. Ambedkar was the outstanding and intellectual economist of India. He studied under the intellectual personalities of the time at Columbia University and University of London. He influenced by the outstanding philosopher, John Dewey of America. John Dewey was one of the teachers of Ambedkar. His contribution in Indian economy is noteworthy. Dr. Ambedkar's thoughts were related to public finance and agricultural economy which is landmark in the Indian economy. He was in the opinion that government should spend the resources garnered from the public according to the rules, laws and regulations. It must see that faithfulness, wisdom and economy. From the above discussion it is concluded that the value of Dr. Ambedkar's conclusions is substantial precisely because his analysis was based on the empirical and historical foundation.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar also emphasized on industrialization with a view to reduce surplus labour force from agriculture sector to industrial sector along with huge capital investment in agriculture sector. He observed a significant role for the state in such transformation in agriculture sector and given the stress on the nationalization of land and the leasing out of land to the small farmers. By studying his literature pertaining to the economy, it is observed that, his standing as an economist was a reflection of Ambedkar as a politician statesman. He wrote on economic issues and economic matters, when it became expedient in the field of politics. Through the study it is observed that, the dominance of political activities overshadowed his study of economics and it will not be out of place here if we say that we have suffered a great loss in losing in him an economist of no mean ability.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar & UntouchabilityDr. Aparajita Dutta,

Asst. Professor, Dibrugarh University, Dibrugarh-4,

Ayesha Khatoon,

LL.M, Advocate, Jorhat-1 (Assam),

Abstract:

Untouchability is a curse to social fabric of secular India. It is not merely the inability to touch human being of a certain caste or sub-caste, rather it is an attitude of a part of people of the whole society that reflects a deeper psychological process of thought and belief which is invisible to the naked eye, transformed into various physical acts, behaviours and practices.

Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar devoted his entire life in uplifting the exploited. He was the first man who demanded for the treatment to the man as the man. He himself had been the part of the society who got ill-treatment at every step and stage. He made several provisions in the Constitution for the upliftment of the Dalits. He was the principal architect of the Constitution of India. This Paper will analyse about his contributions against Untouchability.

Introduction:

“Democracy is not merely a form of Government. It is primarily a mode of associated living, of conjoint communicated experience. It is essentially an attitude of respect and reverence towards our fellow men”.

-Dr B. R. Ambedkar

Indian society is a famous one for its traditions. India has played the most significant role in the promotion of the Human Rights.

With the attainment of Independence, India has made sincere efforts for the protection and promotion of human rights and dignity over the world. India has incorporated the most elaborate Declaration of Human Rights, 1948 in its Constitution. Being the first legal document protecting universal human rights in the world, Article 1 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 1948 states that “All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood.”

Today, India is committed to the establishment of a just social order and activities with a view to improve the lots for the common man. The evolution from status to the contract, from immobility to mobility, from the tendency to look to the past as ideal to the belief in bright future sustained by socialist ideals of equality and fraternity are the some delicate features of the socio-economic scenes of the free India, the making of which is used most and played a vital role by the philosophy and the ideals of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar.

Babasaheb Ambedkar had played a crucial role in diagnosing the ills of a caste society. He was one of the greatest crusaders who had struggled his entire life in fighting for the rights and liberation of the Untouchables or “Dalits” from social discrimination, economic alienation and political exclusion. As a great thinker of modernity, he hoped that the upcoming industrial development, democratic institutions and republican values would form the superstructures on which the liberation of untouchables will be assured.

The Issue of Untouchability, the Abolished Menace:

Untouchability is a curse to social fabric of secular India. It is not merely the inability to touch a human being of a certain caste or sub-caste, rather it is an attitude of a part of people of the whole society that reflects a deeper psychological process of thought and belief which is invisible to the naked eye, transformed into various physical acts, behaviours and practices. The problem is of great amplitude and has various facets that are studied and researched time and again.

Untouchables are literally outcastes. They are also known as depressed classes, harijans etc; but since 1970, they are more frequently referred to as “Dalits”, a term first used by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar.

Dalits, literally means “broken people”. However, historically persons born in lowest castes and classes of persons doing menial jobs, criminals, persons suffering from contagious diseases and tribes living outside the so-called civilized world were considered as Untouchables.

The discrimination can be of physical or social boycott from the society. Untouchability is a menace and social evil associated with traditional Hindu society. It was believed that people of higher castes could become impure even if a shadow of an untouchable person touches him and to regain his purity he had to take a dip into holy waters of the Ganga. Today members of SC/ST are considered as “Dalits” and they are subjected to various forms of discrimination in the society.

Forms of Untouchability:

Till date, more than 80 forms have been identified, many of which are apparently free India’s additions to the list. From time immemorial Dalits have been deprived of their rights to education and the rights to possess land and other forms of property. Left with nothing but their physical labour to earn their livelihood they have all along been forced to do the toughest and most menial jobs for survival.

Although all state governments claim that they have abolished manual scavenging reports reveal that this practice is very much alive in many places. Postmen have also been found to practice Untouchability. There are also road transport related violations of the law against Untouchability.

Apart from the denial of access to public roads, tanks, temples and burial or cremation grounds there are other forms of Untouchability. While Untouchability is still rampant and is taking new forms particularly in villages, the Constitutional ban and compulsions of modernity and development have to some extent blunted its rigor. Rail transport has been unifying forces in society.

Measures for the Upliftment of Dalits and Removal of Untouchability:

i. Significant International Instruments:

Article 1 of Universal Declaration of Human Rights, 1948 states that, “All men are borne free”. The inclusion of caste, suggested by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights under Article 2 has the recent issue of caste discrimination gained traction within the global human rights community.

The Committee on International Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Racial Discrimination, 1965 affirmed by Article 6 that the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes falls within the scope of it.

The Human Rights Committee considered India’s third periodic report submitted under Article 40 of the ICCPR in its 6th Session. Articles 2, Articles 7, 9, 14, and 26 of the ICCPR are of particular relevance to the abuses documented in this report.

Article 7 of ICESCR, 1966 provides that state parties shall recognize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of just and favourable conditions of work.

The definition of torture under Convention against Torture and Other Cruel, Inhuman, or Degrading Treatment or Punishment, 1984 includes severe torture of Dalit men and women in the police custody.

Article 32 of CRC, 1989 dictates state to recognize the right of the child to be protected from economic exploitation and child's health or development.

The International Labour Organisation's Forced Labour Convention, 1930 requires signatories to suppress the use of forced or compulsory labour. In 1957, the ILO explicitly incorporated debt bondage and serfdom within its definition of forced labour.

The International Dalit Solidarity Network (IDSN), 2000 facilitates co-ordination and information sharing among foreign organizations advocating for Dalit rights.

The 2001 UN World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance (WCAR) presented the most significant breakthrough for the Dalit movement.

ii. Indian Laws:

The struggle for independence was not only against the foreign Rule of British but it was against the social evils such as Untouchability prevailing from Centuries.

Constitution of India, 1950:

Part III of the Constitution deals with Fundamental Rights to which every citizen is entitled.

Article 14: "The State shall not deny to any person equality before the law or equal protection of law within the territory of India."

Article 15: "The state shall not discriminate against any citizen on ground only of religion, race, caste, sex or place of birth or any of them."

Article 21 states that, no person shall be deprived of his life or personal liberty except according to the procedure established by law.

Article 23 forbids forced labour.

Article 17 reads as "Untouchability is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden."

Article 46 says about special care, educational and economic interests of the weaker section of the people and shall protect them from social injustice and exploitation".

iii. Landmarks in Indian Legal System:

In the protective sphere, Untouchability was abolished and its practice in any form was forbidden by the Anti-Untouchability Act of 1955. This Act was later reviewed by the Government of India and Protection of Civil Rights Act was passed in 1976.

In 1989, the Government of India passed the Prevention of Atrocities Act (POA) which delineates specific crimes against scheduled castes and scheduled tribes as atrocities and describes strategies and prescribes punishments to counter these acts. Repeated suggestions concerning reforms to be done in various provisions of POA, 1989 have been advocated by the Supreme Court and other legal reform organisations.

Dr. Babasaheb's Contributions for Dalit's Rights:

Untouchability is the Achilles' heel of the Indian society. The journey of India's struggle against Untouchability seems to be long drawn.

Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar (14 April 1891 – 6 December 1956), was an Indian jurist, economist, politician and social reformer who campaigned against social discrimination against Dalits, women and labour. He was the principal architect of the Indian Constitution. His later life was marked by his social freedom for Dalits.

Dr B. R. Ambedkar had a real vision towards the fundamental rights of Indian citizens and upliftment of Dalits. He made several provisions in the Constitution for the upliftment of the Dalits. Dr. Ambedkar introduced Article 13(2), Article 14, Article 15, Article 15(4), Article 16(4A) and Article 16 (4B) to the Indian Constitution. Based on Article 17, the Civil Right Protection Act 1965 and the Prevention of Atrocities (SCs and STs Act 1989) were enacted by the Parliament for the protection of Dalit rights.

Ambedkar's Contributions in the Upliftment of Modern Days Dalits and Women of the Indian Constitution declares reservation for SCs and STs Article 332 and Article 243 of the Constitution of India says about it. Besides, several benefits such as grants, scholarships, loans, stipends etc. are being provided for Dalits.

Ambedkar's Remedial Measures to eradicate Untouchability:

Babasaheb had devoted his life to remove untouchability. He made a critical assessment of Hindu philosophical traditions. For him, Untouchability is the slavery of the entire Hindu society. While Untouchables are enslaved by Caste Hindus, they themselves live under slavery of religious sculptures. So the emancipation of the untouchables leads to the emancipation of the whole Hindu society.

Ambedkar's remedies against discrimination on the basis of Untouchability were:

Social Reform:

- He believed that Economic and Political issues must be resolved only after achieving the goal of social justice. For social reform, Casteism has to do away with.
- Social reforms consisted of family reform and religious reforms. Family reforms included removal of practices like child marriage etc. He strongly supports the empowerment of women. He supports women's rights of property which he resolved through Hindu Code Bill.

Identity Building: As Sons of the Soil:

- Creating self-respect as "sons of the soil" among Untouchables by removing the myth of inherent pollution that has influenced their minds.

Education:

- For Babasaheb, one of the reasons for the degradation of Untouchables was that they were denied the advantages of education. He insisted on secular education to instil values of liberty and equality among the students.

Economic progress:

- He wanted Untouchables to free themselves from the bondage of the village community and traditional jobs and achieve new skills and start a new profession and move to cities to take advantage of industrialization. He described villages as “a sink of localism, a den of ignorance, narrow mindedness, and communalism”.

Political strength:

- He wanted Untouchables to organize themselves politically. With political power, Untouchables would be able to protect, safeguard and introduce new emancipatory policies.

Conversion:

- When he realized that Hinduism is not able to mend its ways, he adopted Buddhism and asked his followers to do the same. For him, Buddhism was based on humanism and believed in the spirit of equality and fraternity. He said, “I’m reborn, rejecting the religion of my birth. I discard the religion which discriminates between a man and a man and which treats me as an inferior”.

So at the social level, education; at the material level, new means of livelihood; at political level, political organization; and the spiritual level, self-assertion, and conversion constituted an overall program of the removal of Untouchability.

Concluding Observations:

Although India has made measurable progress in the protections afforded to Dalits since independence with the incomparable efforts, tremendous hard-working of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, Dalits still suffer invidious discrimination and mistreatment by the upper caste members and law enforcement officials. Such mistreatment is inexcusable under both India’s domestic laws and its obligations under international law.

The Indian government denies the problem of mistreatment of Dalits and points to extensive legal protections evidencing compliance with international standards. But the numerous reports of violence and discrimination indicate that Dalits remain India’s “broken people” till now. Until the atrocities against Dalits end, the international community ought to continue to publicize the conditions of India’s disenfranchised population and encourage India to live up to the standards established in its domestic laws and international obligations.

Abstract

The cosmopolitan Babasaheb Ambedkar has an important position in the history of India. He spreader his knowledge, understanding and brilliance in each field for the deliverance of society. It is unjustified to considered him as a leader of exploited and deprived people. He always contributed to maintain equality in our society as well as in our country. In his time, he always raised his voice for the rights of women. He believed that the freedom and equality of women is necessary for the construction of strong society. This paper describes the study of struggle and hardships faced by Babasaheb Ambedkar for making different laws in constitution for the rights of women in society, the special laws for women and with help of Hindu code bill he provided equality to women.

Introduction

Symbol of knowledge Baba Saheb Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar creator of Indian constitution justified his struggle. His aim was to bring equality in whole country. He always tried to remove disparity with transcended women and labourers; and to give equal legal rights to each and every citizen of India. His aim was to give rights to all residents belonging to scheduled cast and scheduled tribe and also to women who were victimised by orthodox Hindu rigidity. He devoted his life for the upliftment of all the people who were deprived from education and basic human rights. He was motivated to fight against savarna's (brahmins) on behalf of exploited, deprived and women with the help of western education and legal study which he obtained. He worked to construct various basic rules after becoming a member of viceroy council of British government and then law minister of India. Dr. Ambedkar always worked and determined himself to provide equal rights to women by presenting different points against evil ideologies. He always encouraged deprived and women to fight against injustice. He became the messiah for women and Dalits, baba Saheb struggled for four years to make resolve Hindu code bill.

Dr. baba Saheb Ambedkar tried to much for activities of women upliftment among thoughts regarding social reformation. Babasaheb was aware that absence of education among women is responsible for untouchability; in the rules of social problems due to this condition of society was pitiable, moreover, maximum exploitation was of women if women are educated, they would bour fair culture in children. Women are affliater in society, only then society could develop. Over the time society has imposed irrational rules to keep women backwards, that drags society towards destruction. Freedom and equality of women is needed for a healthy society. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar openly oppose rigid rule of society for welfare of women there were so many contradictories and separative customs and traditions in Indian Hindu society there was disparity regarding marriage inheritance rights maintenance of women remained struggled work of to pass Hindu code bill was on the solder of Dr. Ambedkar along with construction of constitution.

Babasaheb presented Hindu code bill on 12th April, 1948 after amended by Rao committed to central law commission. He informed to assembly member about special features of the bills. Babasaheb worked of making understand the importance of bill to every minutes of cabinet by giving answers very smoothly. This bill is one of the most controversial laws introduced in the history of India. He describes to whom Hindu will believe not only that, he also put points of removing caste system in marriage. He wrote to have equal right to women as man in this bill. He asked to have equal right in property to women as man, adoption right, divorce and inter cast marriage system. Babasaheb had to face oppose while presiding of the bill, argued actively and informed that they do not want any additional rights for Hindu but they are talking about the rights that Hindu women do not obtain. The conservative elites did not allow the bill to pass. Babasaheb was very worried regarding this bill. Babasaheb said "I am more interested in passing this bill than in drafting the Indian constitution." He thought to leave post of law minister. He wrote his resignation letter and sent it to prime minister which was very first in the Indian history for women by a politician. Hindu code bill was then passed in various parts. The law was made by passing the four bills as below

- The Hindu marriage act, 1955
- The Hindu Succession Act, 1956
- Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956
- Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956

The Hindu marriage act, 1955

This Act fix's (a) minimum age for marriage as 18 years for girls and 21 year for the boys. The salient feature of this Act is that it makes monogamy as Universal. The Hindu marriage Act, 1955 and special marriage Act, 1954 were amended in 1976 to provide for the right of a girl to repudiate before attaining maturity. marrying as child whether the marriage has been consummated are not, cruelty and desertion were added as grounds for divorce and mutual consent were recognized. (Halli & mullal, 2016)

Hindu Succession Act, 1956

In 1961, the Government of India passed the Dowry Prohibition Act, making the dowry demands in wedding arrangements illegal. However, many cases of dowry-related domestic violence, suicides and murders have been reported. In the 1980s, numerous such cases were reported. In 1985, the Dowry Prohibition (maintenance of lists of presents to the bride and bride groom) rules were frame. According to these rules, a signed list of presents given at the time of the marriage to the bride and the bride groom should be maintained. The list should contain a brief description of each present, its approximate value, the name of the who has given the present and his/her relationship to the person. However, such rules are hardly enforced.

A 1997 report claimed that at least 5,000 women die each year because of dowry deaths, and at least a dozen die each day in 'kitchen fires' thought to be intentional. The term for this is bride burning and is criticized within India itself. Amongst the urban educated. Such dowry abuse has reduced dramatically.

The Maternity Benefit Act, 1961

The Government is authorised to fix the maximum load that they may be lifted by women and at open crèches also. (Halli & mullal, 2016)

The Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act,1971

In 1971 India liberalize its abortion low by enacted the above said Act, which permitting abortion number of conditions.

- ❖ The termination of pregnancy involves a risk of life of a pregnant woman or a risk of grave injury to her physical or mental health.
- ❖ The termination of pregnancy is not an offence if there exists a substantial risk that, if the child were born, it would suffer some physical or mental abnormalities so as to be seriously handicapped.
- ❖ The termination of a pregnancy would not be an offence if the pregnancy is caused by rape.
- ❖ The termination of pregnancy is not an offence of the pregnancy is result of failure of any device or method used by the married couple for the purpose of limiting the number of children.

Hence the Act permits termination of an unwanted pregnancy of a married woman on the ground that a contraceptive device failed. The provides very mere punishment for the contravention of the provisions of the Act, which may extend to one thousand rupees only.

The Child Marriage Restraint Act, 1976

Earlier, child marriages were highly prevalent in India. The young girls would live with their parents till they reached puberty. In the past, the child widows were condemned to a life of great agony, shaving heads, living in isolation, and shunned by the society, although child marriage was outlawed in 1860, it is still a common practice in some underdeveloped areas of the country and ban on widow remarriages became part of social life in India. (Nelasco, 2010)

The child marriage restraint act provides minimum age for marriage for girls to 18 years and boys to 21 years. The offences under this act made cognizable.

Methodology

The present study “Dr. B.R. Ambedkar measure contribution on women legislation” was used historical method the main aim of research paper is to describe contribution of Dr. Ambedkar’s struggle for women rights and in constructing lows regarding women. Reference literature is used as a secondary source for collection of data in which various research paper, research articles, books and lectures given by baba Saheb in parliament and at various meetings.

Abstract

It is amazing to know that Babasaheb Ambedkar has alone did a majority of the work, sometimes it is heard that babasaheb alone has drafted the constitution, rather single handed. However, it is true that a man of his stature and his caliber and also of his acquaintance with India's past and present socio-economic and political conditions and circumstances, living as messiah of masses during those days and potentially capable to grasp the future India.

Based on this on his overall experience Dr. Ambedkar was made a chairman of drafting committee. This opportunity he utilized to the fullest extent to give a inclusive constitution having the cumulative aspirations of backward class people. Whatever he has done is all based on justice, liberty, equality and fraternity applying and uniting the people of India without regard for caste, color, religion, sex etc. If you read the constitution, you feel the language and experience undergone by him. Constitution is the reflection of his suffering and experience. Following description is the evidence to the title of the paper.

Key words : Justice, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, Aspirations, Constitution, Inclusive.

Introduction :

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar's popularity as a national leader, a great jurist, famed constitutional expert, and parliamentarian was fully recognized when he was elected to the constituent Assembly. He was appointed on the drafting committee on 29 August 1947 and was subsequently elected as its chairman. Dr. Ambedkar and his team took, in all, 141 days to draw up the provisional constitution. But, Dr. Ambedkar worked single-handedly. Being an economist, legal luminary and, sociologist, Dr. Ambedkar knew very well that the constitution does not mean a mere document but a social and economic resolve based on the aspirations, grievances, and needs of millions.

Preamble of Constitution:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar drafted an inspiring preamble to the constitution upholding justice, social, economic and political, liberty, equality and fraternity. He declared "I say that this preamble embodies what is the desire of every member of the House that this Constitution should have its root, its authority, its sovereignty, from the people. That it has. It is Dr. Ambedkar's preamble not only because of the processes by which it came to be, but also because of its conceptual content—it is Dr. Ambedkar's preamble both procedurally and substantively declares that

We, the people of India, having solemnly resolved to constitute India into a Sovereign Socialist Secular Democratic Republic and to secure to all citizens:

Justice, social, economic and political; Liberty of Thought, expression, belief, faith and worship; Equality of status and of opportunity; And to promote among them all Fraternity assuring the dignity of the individual and the unity and integrity of the Nation.

In our constituent assembly this twenty-sixth day of November, 1949, do Hereby adopt, enact and give to ourselves this constitution.

As depicted in the preamble, India has inherited cohesiveness, after India became Independent. In all spheres of India's existence. The principle of 'Vasudev Kutumbakam'.

Parliamentary System:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a strong supporter and advocate of parliamentary form of government right from the inception of the Government of India Act of 1935. As an ardent lover of democracy, Babasaheb exerted his influence to evolve a parliamentary form of constitution for republican India. He resolutely believed that the parliamentary system of government alone can usher in an egalitarian and equitable society through the application of principles of social democracy. Dr. Ambedkar's social democracy comprises politicians, political parties with high standards of political morality, honesty and integrity and highly responsible opposition party or parties committed to the cause of downtrodden oppressed Classes. The preamble of the Indian Constitution embodies the principles of parliamentary democracy.

Federalism :

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar endorsed the federal form of government. Commenting on the unique nature of the federation proposed in the draft constitution, he explained that the federal form of government is necessitated to suit the exigencies of the Indian situation. He said, "The draft Constitution is federal constitution in as much as it establishes what may be called Dual Polity. This Dual Polity under the proposed Constitution will consist of the union at the centre and the states at the perimeter, each endowed with sovereign powers to be exercised in the domain assigned to them respectively by the Constitution. The draft constitution can be both unitary as well as federal according to the requirements of time and circumstances. In normal times, it is framed to work as a federal system but in times of war it is so designed as to make it work as though it was a unitary system".

Strong Centre:

The Indian federalism was contrived with a strong Centre; Federalism with a strong Centre was inevitable as the framers of the Indian constitution were aware that there were economic disparities as several areas of India were economically as well as industrially far behind in comparison to others. The nation was committed to a socio economic revolution not only secure the basic needs of the common man and economic unity of the country but also to bring about a fundamental change in the structure of Indian society in accordance with the egalitarian principles. With this consideration in mind the Constitution makers devised the Indian federation with a strong Union.

Ambedkar On the Formation of Linguistic States in India:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was one of the greatest patriots and nationalist this century has ever produced. He strongly advocated the cause of the linguistic, States. At the same time he was keenly interested in preserving the unity of the country. He did not want linguistic states to become independent emotionalists endangering the unity of India. According to Ambedkar, linguistic states mean one of the two things; It means people speaking one language must be brought under the jurisdiction of one State. He was opposed to the creation of big linguistic states as it would result in a tyranny of a communal majority. Being in favour of Linguistic states Ambedkar gave more preference to the size of the states than Language. This is evident from his proposal to divide one language states like UP, Bihar and Madhya Pradesh into smaller states. He also recommended the division of Maharashtra into four Marathi, speaking states.

National Integration:

In the draft Constitution Dr. Ambedkar under unique perspective for India, proposed single citizenship, a single judiciary and uniformity in fundamental Laws to keep India as integrated Indian society which was badly divided into caste, regions, religions, languages, traditions and cultures. For all this, a strong Centre was indispensable to maintain territorial integrity and administrative unity. The country may be divided into different states for the convenience of administration but the whole country is one integral whole, its people a single people living under a single domain derived from a single source. Dr. Ambedkar did a great service, with a magnificent nationalistic zeal, to the nation by proposing the institution of a unified judicial system and common All India Services with a great foresightedness to strengthen national unity and integrity.

Fundamental Rights :

The Part III of the Indian Constitution guarantees the fundamental rights to the citizens against the state. Ambedkar's role was equally crucial in introducing other fundamental rights whereby Constitution provides for equal justice, freedom and dignity to all Indian citizens regardless of caste, creed or religion. Some of the fundamental rights contained in Articles 15(2), 17, 23, and 24 are also enforceable against individuals for they are very significant rights concerning the prohibition of discrimination on grounds of religion, race, caste, sex or place of birth etc. The document prepared by Ambedkar provided constitutional guarantees and protections for a wide range of civil liberties for individual citizens, including freedom of religion, the abolition of untouchability and decimating all forms of discrimination. Ambedkar was essentially more instrumental in incorporating Article 17 which provides for the 'Abolition of Untouchability' whereby "Untouchability" is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden. A disability arising out of "Untouchability" shall be a punishable offence in due process of law. The text prepared by Ambedkar provided constitutional guarantees and protections for a wide range of civil liberties for individual citizens, including freedom of religion, the abolition of untouchability and the abolition of all forms of discrimination.

Protection of Fundamental Rights:

Though he made a magnificent contribution in sculpturing the Constitution of India, his efforts in framing the Article 32 in the Constitution which guarantees a citizen the fundamental right to move the Supreme Court directly for enforcement of his or her fundamental rights is a noteworthy one. The rationale behind this was to secure speedy and inexpensive justice to orders or writs in the nature of habeas corpus, mandamus, certioraris etc. or any other appropriate remedy, as the case may be, for the enforcement of fundamental rights guaranteed by Constitution. Dr. Ambedkar regarded this provision as "the very soul of the Constitution and the very heart of it".

Women Rights :

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar championed the cause of women's rights throughout his life. He discussed a number of problems of Indian women and sought for solutions. Ambedkar's major concern for women's status has been reflected in the Hindu Code Bill. As the chairman of the drafting committee he tried for adequate inclusion of women's rights in the constitution of India. By considering women's equality both in formal and substantial senses he considered special provisions for women's equality both in formal and sustainable senses he included special provisions for women besides general provisions, as to men, in the constitution.

Considering the guidelines, recommendations, suggestions and statutes given by Dr.Ambedkar, the Government of India and other State Governments have implemented large number of schemes for the empowerment of women in India. For example- The Hindu Marriage Act of 1955; The Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act of 1956; The Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act of 1956; The Hindu Succession Act of 1956; the Hindu Women Right to Property Act of 1973; The Dowry Prohibition Act of 1961; The Maternity Benefit Act, 1961; The Equal Remuneration Act of 1976. The Medical termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971. The Prohibition of Child Marriage Act, 2006. The Sexual Harassment of Women at Work Place (Prevention, Protection and) Act, 2013.

Education :

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar attached a huge importance to education. He believes that education is essential to moralize and socialize the individuals, especially the backward classes to have a feeling of self-esteem. For Ambedkar, education facilities should essentially be extended to those that are illiterate and backward, and to those who want to denigrate the roots of caste system in order to realize the pulp of democracy at the ground level. Article 46 further, emphasizes his vision which directs the state to take steps to promote the education of the weaker sections—especially of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes. The credit also goes to Ambedkar for the illiteracy programmes and free education up to matriculation guaranteed by the different state governments. The Right to Education ‘under Article 21 A has become intrinsic to Constitution which earlier, was the part of directive principles as Article 45.

Reservation:

The most glorious and genuine contribution of Ambedkar is mirrored in the positive or protective discrimination scheme means the reservation policy of the government envisaged under some provisions of Part III and Part IV dealing with the constitutional mandate to mitigate and ameliorate the condition of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes and the other backward classes. And provisions like Article 17 envisaging prohibition of untouchability, and the Article 30 mandating the protection of minorities are some of the exemplary accomplishments of Dr.B.R. Ambedkar. Articles 15(4) and 16(4) of Part III and Part XI, and Schedule V and VI are earmarked for the upliftment of the Scheduled Castes and Schedule Tribes and hence the substantially significant contribution of Ambedkar for the development of untouchables.

Directive Principles Of State Policy:

Directive Principles Of state Policy are embedded in Part IV of the Indian Constitution starting from article 36 to 51. Dr. Ambedkar played a crucial role in laying down the Directive Principles Of state Policy; he defines them as ‘novel features’ of the constitution. The Directive Principles Of state Policy, and Fundamental Rights, embellishing philosophy of the constitution and thus are the soul of the Constitution. The phrase ‘Directive Principles Of state Policy’ denotes the ideals to be considered when forming the policies and statutes for governance. These are the guidelines instructions for while framing forming the laws and legislatures. These principles command the state that state shall endeavor to promote the welfare of the people by securing the just Social order. The particular aim of Directive Principles of State Policy is to make India A Welfare State by introducing socialism in the economic sphere, to provide social security and better standards of sanitation to accelerate the states duty towards women, children and the obligations towards the backward and tribal classes.

Conclusion :

As Rajendra Prasad the, first and most humanist president of India, after independence truly observed that, the constitution would have been impossible, if Ambedkar was not there and also Krishnamachary felt in the same way that the entire credit for drafting and submitting the constitution goes to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar. It is impossible to imagine India as a nation without Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar. The above depiction of his struggle and grappling with the constitution denotes that the entire constitution is being evolved by himself. What is most important is the fact that the vision of India he had and the way in which he has delineated, his vision of India is marvelous, and perhaps, there is hardly no constitution in the world as rich as the India's ones in its content and spirit. India is nothing but a complex phenomenon with lots of disgusting factor, a country with substantial socio-economic hostile disparities, in hospitable or cohesive living. A country seemingly rich in its ethos but nevertheless, a nation of contradiction. The very meaning of nation, which means, India as a nation is fundamentally evolved by B.R. Ambedkar with his perfect vision of India produced with hospitality for harmonious coexistence.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Contribution towards Women Empowerment

Dr. Rajshree R. Kapoor

Abstract

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was a great intellectual on international repute, with knowledge of various subjects and fields. He was a true academician and a true citizen to India who utilized and applied all his degrees, knowledge, experience and wisdom for the development of the nation. He considered education as the powerful tool in making changes in the society and a weapon to free the Indian Society of gender inequality.

He asserted that: "We shall see better days soon and our progress will be greatly accelerated if male education is persuaded side by side with female education..."

Key words : Education, gender equality, women empowerment

This paper attempts to focus Dr. Babasaheb's perception for gender equality and his contribution for women empowerment. He genuinely made efforts in the field of women's empowerment and advocated for the same. He possessed the belief of women as a strong gender and their role in the process of modification. He very rightly stated that:

"The progress of a community is measured by degree of progress which women had achieved. Let every girl who marries stand by her husband, claim to be her husband's friend and equal, and refuse to be his slave. I am sure if you follow this advice you will bring honour and glory to yourselves..."

Acknowledgeable incidents have represented our society as a custom bound society, where women have been socially, economically, physically and sexually exploited from times age-old. Social authorization have always given women a secondary position. They have been sufferers of violence and mistreatment by the male dominated society.

Ambedka's various efforts for abolishing gender bias began with his association in 1920 and started brutal propaganda in contradiction of the Hindu Social-Order and started a journal 'Mook Nayak' in 1920 and 'Bhishkrut Bharat' in 1927 for this purpose. Through these concerns he focussed on the gender equality and need for education and opened the various problems of the depressed women.

In January 1923 a women's association was started in Bombay with Mrs. Ramabai Ambedkar, as its president. To face distress along with their men women also started their organization named as Samata Sainik Dal. In the round table meeting many women were present for the committee meeting. At numerous places suppressed classes women's meeting were held and they commenced to present their demands in assertively. The inspiration of Ambedkar empowered women to speak out confidently their state of mind.

He advised to adequate inclusion of women's rights in the Indian Constitution Dr. Ambedkar fought for the Hindu code Bill for three years which was the most noted contribution in the upliftment of women, It granted women equal rights as their male counterparts to inherit the property of their parents & equal status in marriage. It allowed rights to property, order of succession to property, marriage, separation, guardianship to women. (irrespective of caste & religion). It was the greatest ever social reform in India. It was a first stage towards the recognition & liberation of Indian women.

Women's empowerment & gender equality was also brought about by Babasaheb's contribution towards.

- Women Labours Welfare Fund.
- Maternity Benefit for Women Labour Bill.
- Revision of Scale Pay for Employees.
- Restoration of Ban of Women Working Underground in Mines.
- Provident Fund Act.
- Women Labour Protection Act.
- No marriage before the Age of 18 Years.
- Restoration of Ban on Women Working Underground in Mines.
- Divorce Act.
- A Mother can charge guardian of minor by her will.
- Maintenance allowance from husband on getting legally separation.
- Widow can adopt a child.
- Leave benefits to piece workers.
- Right over parental property.
- Equal pay for equal work irrespectively Sex.

The above provisions acts and rights to be incorporated for transformation in the society were very well crusaded, but Babasaheb was not completely successful to pass the full Hindu Code Bill. But at present Indian women holding top positions in almost all spheres of like Medical Engineer, Army, Air force, Navy, Administration, Police, Politics, etc. are testimony of the consistent perseverance and dedication of Babasaheb Ambedkar to lay down the foundation for equality for the women in India.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's struggles and efforts even after tremendous radical obstacles in the society, made him known as instituting Father of Modern India, as he was the first in India. Who enunciated for the 'Universal Adult Franchise' before the South Borough Commission and further before the Simon Commission, for every Indian over all distinction of gender, caste, class, literacy and religion to receive the Right to Vote. Hence every January 25th when we observe 'National Voters Day' in our country as we revive our Constitutional Rights. Article 326 i.e. Right to vote we must never forget, Babasaheb who ardently favoured for our rights (women) and provided us this dignity.

Thus Babasaheb's thoughts are significant for social reconstruction that ardently supports women empowerment. Awareness, Information and education are forceful instrument to lead women on the way to empowerment.

Very rightly stated by Dr. Ambedkar:-

"Education is something which ought to be brought within the reach of everyone. The policy therefore ought to make higher education as cheaper to the lower classes as it can possibly be made..."

Thus Dr. Ambedkar modest approach towards women equality was to give women a first place as a Human being before her in a gender. A Big Salute to the golden personality whose left his indelible foot prints on the sands of India.

“I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress which women have achieved.”

B.R.Ambedkar

Abstract

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, the determined fighter and a deep scholar, has made significant efforts to lead the society on the path of Liberty, Equality and Fraternity. He was the first Indian to break down the barriers and obstacles that were in the way of advancement of women in India. He laid down a concrete foundation and undertook sincere efforts to codify the common Civil Code for Hindus and other sections of the Indian society. This article is an attempt to highlight Dr. Ambedkar's views on the problems faced by women in pre- and post-independent India and their relevancy in present day India. Ambedkar created awareness among poor, illiterate women and inspired them to fight against unjust and unsocial practices such as, child marriage, and systems such as, Devadasi and Sati practice. Ambedkar tried to implement an adequate inclusion of women's right in the political vocabulary and constitution of India. He insisted on the Hindu Code bill suggesting fundamental improvements and amendments in assembly. He also insisted and evoked members of the parliamentary to help pass the bill in the parliament. Eventually, he resigned for the same. While Ambedkar's slogan "educate, organize and agitate" helped women to mobilize in the freedom movement, even after seventy years of independence, the society had failed to grant women their due rights – this premise is highlighted thorough the article.

Introduction

“Empowering the women is equal to empowering a society”

Women play a significant role in the development of our society from their birth till the end of life. However, even after their massive contributions to daily life and society, women in India have somehow not been getting the importance they deserve, and this is a crucial issue, not only for in our country but also, globally. It is worthwhile to note that the circumstances have been gradually changing for women and some now have the platform to show that they are capable of making their own way towards success. “Several instances depicted in religious texts (e.g., Vedas, Upanishads, Smritis, epics like Ramayana and Mahabharata and other Dharmasastras) that in ancient India, especially in Rigvedic period, women enjoyed equal status with men. They had an honorable place in the society. In Vedic times, women were not treated as inferior or subordinate but equal to men in all matters of life and they were given education and had a voice in the selection of their husband.” However, this position that women enjoyed in the Vedic period deteriorated in the post-Vedic period over the Puranic and Smriti periods. The period between 11th to 18th centuries witnessed further weakening in the position of women due to the impact of Muslim culture. In this period, female infanticide, child Marriage, the purdah system, Sati and slavery were some of the many social evils affecting the position of women. The revival of the practice of Sati, the prohibition of remarriage, the spread of purdah and the greater prevalence of polygamy made her position execrable. While in ancient India, women enjoyed a high position, this gradually degenerated into women being treated merely as objects of pleasure meant to serve a certain purpose. They lost their individual identity and basic human's right.

Women before Independence

The conditions of women in the society as witnessed before independence shows that in the Rig-Vedic period women enjoyed an extraordinary status and had the opportunity to attain high intellectual standards. At that time, systems and practices such as, Sati, child marriage and early marriage did not exist. “The Manusmriti opposed widow remarriage, education of girls, encouraging child marriages, sati, and forced widowhood. But the scene was something different in later-Vedic period and they faced discrimination in every social aspect, sati was started and the position of women started worsening. Women were subject to face many restrictions.”

Ambedkar was one such reformer; he was not only the father of the Indian Constitution but also a revered freedom fighter, political leader, philosopher, thinker, economist, editor, revivalist of Buddhism and the first Indian to break down the barriers that were in the way of advancement of women in India. “He clearly stated that women should be given all round development more importantly social education, their wellbeing and socio-cultural rights.” Ambedkar emphasized that every section of Indian women should be given their due share and that it was mandatory to maintain and protect the dignity and modesty of women. He believed in movements led by women, that women from all walks of life played a significant role in social reform, and that they play a crucial and active role to eradicate issues of social abuse. He insisted that every married woman must participate in her husband’s activities as a friend, show the courage to deny the life of a slave, and assert the principle of equality. His approach in this regard has been more pragmatic; “he initiated to raise the status of women through legal measures such as, the Hindu Code Bill, which placed women at par with men in matters of property, adoption and marriage, bill for maternity leave for working women, and the principles of gender equality enshrined in the Indian Constitution.” He believed that the empowerment of women is a multi-faceted, multi-dimensional and multi-layered concept.

Ambedkar was a votary of women’s emancipation – he was the first leader of the Dalits who not only wrote on various issues that affected them but also, waged a series of protests with a view to establish a just and fair society based on the principles of liberty, equality and fraternity. His efforts for the upliftment of women in the Indian society were a part of his major project of establishing such a just and fair society. Ambedkar made social reforms divisible into two parts, “one, the reforms of the Hindu family, and the other, the reorganization and reconstruction of the Hindu society. The problems of sati, widow remarriage, child marriage etc. relate to the social reforms of the Hindu family.” The abolition of caste system and untouchability, changes in the laws of marriage, adoption and succession are some social reforms in the larger sense of the reorganization and reconstruction of the Hindu society. He strongly believed that the Varna system had not only subjugated untouchables but also women. He showed that “chaturvarna, claimed to be based on 'worth' instead of 'birth', cannot explain the status and position of women as well as the system of endogamy; that a system based upon worth, cannot justify the permanent denial of education and religious rights to women.” He strove to uphold equal rights for men and women. “His consistency on universal adult franchise, contrary to the Congress ambivalence, testifies to the roots of his democratic consciousness.”

Ambedkar respected the “personal dignity of women without belittling their roles as mothers and wives and gave women along with men an equal task of achievement of freedom.” His ideas are remarkably similar to those voiced by the women’s liberation movements all over the world. Ambedkar’s views on women’s oppression, social democracy, caste and Hindu social order and philosophy, are significant to modern Indian feminist thinking. He propagated equality in family and society, dignity of women's personality, the opening of wider opportunities for her self-development and the refusal to be regarded as sex symbols. As the Drafting Committee Chairman of Constituent Assembly, he advocated for several measures to free women from the age-old subordination imposed by the Hindu Social law. "I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress which women have achieved", he said. Such were his values, "envisioning progress and equality, at a time when the country was undergoing a cultural transformation and social reorganization, and a change in its overall political order and system." As the first Law Minister of Independent India and Chairman of the Constitution Drafting Committee of Constituent Assembly, Ambedkar left no stone unturned in ensuring that his values and vision found space in the constitutional framework of the nation.

Ambedkar included Articles 14, 15 and 16, which deal with the right to equality, in the Constitution, to put men and women on equal footing. He tried to raise the status of women through legal measures and one of them was the Hindu Code Bill. "The Hindu Code Bill was introduced in Parliament on April 11, 1947, which intended to place women at par with men in matters of property, adoption and marriage." Ambedkar, in his spirited defense of the Bill, said that "the ideals enshrined in it are derived from the constitution based on liberty, equality and fraternity." He pointed out that "the original Indian society was not based on caste and women's oppression, that women had equal share in property with men, and that they were deprived of property rights after the emergence of caste system at a subsequent stage." He also observed that "the sacramental marriage does not satisfy the ideas of liberty or equality and described sacramental marriages as polygamy for men and perpetual slavery for the women because under no circumstances within that system women got liberty from her husband, however bad he may be, however undesirable he may be."

Constitutional provisions on women empowerment:

Ambedkar's vision of freedom and equality for women has been firmly established in the constitution of independent India. "The main principle of Gender Equality is enshrined in the Indian Constitution in its Preamble, Fundamental Rights, Fundamental Duties and Directive Principles. The Constitution not only grants equality to women, but also empowers the state to adopt measures of positive discrimination in favor of women." "The "Fundamental Rights" chapter in the Indian Constitution guarantees various rights – the rights of special importance to women are the Rights to Equality in Article 14 and the Prohibition against Discrimination in Article 15. Article 14 mandates that "the state shall not deny to any person equality before the law or the equal protection of the laws within the territory of India," Article 15(1) prohibits discrimination against any citizen of the state "on grounds only of religion, race, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them." Article 15(3) also allows for special provision for women and children by clarifying that "Nothing in this Article shall prevent the state from making any special provision for women and children". Article 16(1) mandates equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office under the state. Article 16(2) clarifies that "no citizen shall, on grounds only of religion, race, caste, sex, descent, place of birth, residence or any of them, be ineligible for, or discriminated against in respect of any employment or office under the State." These fundamental Rights in Chapter III of the Constitution are obviously enforceable in a court of law. "Chapter IV of the Constitution of India contains principles of law known as the "Directive Principles of State Policy", which, though not enforceable, are supposed to be fundamental in the governance of the country. It is also supposed to be the duty of the state to apply these principles in making laws. These principles direct the state, in Article 39(a), to ensure that all citizens, men and women equally, have the right to an adequate means of livelihood. In Article 39(d), the state is directed to ensure that there is equal pay for equal work for both men and women.”“The Equal Remuneration Act passed by the Indian Parliament in 1975 does provide that men and women will be paid equally for doing the same work or work of a similar nature. This Act also states that there will be no discrimination against women at the time of recruitment or later at the time of promotion.”

“Within the framework of a democratic polity, our laws, development policies, plans and programmes have aimed at women's advancement in different spheres. From the Fifth Five Year Plan (1974-78) onward there has been a marked shift in the approach to women's issues from welfare to development.”“The National Commission for Women was set up by an Act of Parliament in 1990 to safeguard the rights and legal entitlements of women. The 73rd and 74th amendments (1993) to the Constitution of India have provided with 33% reservation of seats in the local bodies of Panchayats and Municipalities for women, laying a strong foundation for their participation in decision-making at the local levels.”

Dr. Ambedkar believed in providing good education to women. He said, “We shall see better days soon and our progress will be greatly accelerated if male education is pursued side by side with female education.” Education was conceived by Ambedkar not only in terms of cultures of learning and teaching, but also dissenting against that which is learnt and taught by dominant cultural practices. He considered “teachers as well as students as modern truth seekers and agents of social transformation.” It is, indeed, in this context that Ambedkar believed that men could play a critical role in social renovation of a society.

Conclusion

This article gives deeper and analytical insights into the thoughts, ideas, and efforts of Babasaheb and showcases an appreciation of the ideological basis of his political, economic and social justice movements towards empowerment of the women in Indian Society. Ambedkar witnessed women being the victims of the oppressive, caste-based and rigid hierarchical social systems and believed that socio-cultural forces. In his works, “The Riddle of the Woman”, “The Woman and the Counter Revolution” (1987), “The Rise and Fall of Hindu Women” (1950), “Castes in India: Their Mechanism, Genesis and Development” (1979), and through the issues of journals, Mooknayak (1920) and Bahiskrit Bharat (1927), Ambedkar has tried to demonstrate how the gender relations and differences are constructed by Hindu Brahmanical order. Ambedkar’s idea of India was one that would have social inclusivity and equality at its very foundation. It is the prime and most imperative responsibility of every citizen to not fail him. “This would, in all certainty, ensure in the coming days, liberty, equality, dignity and fraternity for all”, as was the vision of Dr. Ambedkar.

This article enlightens the feminist views of Dr. Ambedkar and Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie. Their geographical places and cultural implications vary, but the profuse ideas of woman empowerment leads them to the powerful generation. Both are believed to avoid gender roles which segregate women from the society. The Nigerian writer Adichie whose visions make societal changes just like that of an ideal observer Ambedkar who bangs his voice for marginalized group. Coming from the indigenous Igbo world, the woman writer Adichie exposes her cultural barriers through her writing. Dr. Ambedkar the legendary leader of Dalit group in India put across his efforts to frame the rules for gender equality and especially introduces so many rights in the constitution for women's welfare. To conclude, both insisted on women's education.

I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress that women have achieved.
- B. R. Ambedkar

Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar (Babasaheb Ambedkar) was an Indian jurist, economist, politician, writer, and social reformer. He was inspired by the Dalit Buddhist movement and spoke against social discrimination towards the untouchables (Dalits). He was India's first Minister of Law and Justice and was called the Chief architect of the Constitution of India. And so, he was awarded posthumously Bharat Ratna, India's highest civilian award in the year 1990. He was a real champion who had supported women's empowerment during the period of pre-independent India. He contributed to the foundation of modern India's Constitution rights on women empowerment and gender equality. At that time, India was undergoing a social reformation, cultural transformation, and reorganization of the political system. Being the Chairman of the Constitution Drafting Committee, he applied his envisions and values in a constitutional framework.

One of his relevant causes of the Hindu Code Bill recreated the role of women in India. His concern for the status of women was reflected in this Bill. The prominent notion of the Bill was to regenerate the vision of gender equality and justice for women and at the same time it marked to erase the orthodox rules of the society. Through that Bill, women were granted the right regarding all property, because Ambedkar valued the idea of gender equality and proposed his future vision on women empowerment. He stated that, "Son also would get a share as equal to girl's share in mother's property, even in Stridhana (defined in Hindu Law as wealth received by women as gifts from relations) too" (Sinha).

He created the law for marriage, which has been the rule for restitution of the conjugal rights and the judicial separation. As per the Dayabhaga rule Sacramental (ritualistic) marriage was the only acceptable practice, wherein there was no space existed for a non-theist. According to the Hindu Code Bill the type of marriage is based on both civil and non-civil. Particularly the civil marriage increased the highest personal freedom with acceptable proceedings for divorce. Perhaps, this type of Ambedkar's philosophy towards women's dignity develops his ideology among people who had a great civic sense and social responsibility. So he raised his voice for the oppressed group of people of India. There he showed unbiased opinions and mindset towards the downtrodden society. He came from the Mahar (Dalit) group, and tried to represent his people and their less privileged life.

Furthermore, he prohibited polygamy and prescribed monogamy. The important features of Hindu Code Bill was to expose his passion for the values of liberty, equality, dignity, and fraternity. He challenges the foundation of patriarchal rules to reform and ensures the equality of women, which envelops the empowerment of women. For that, his Bill was enacted in a diluted format in four separate laws, the Hindu Marriage Act 1955, the Hindu Succession Act 1956, the Hindu Adoption and Maintenance Act 1956, and the Hindu Minority and the Guardianship Act 1956.

Dr. Ambedkar's initiative ideas on women's empowerment paved the way for several subsequent pro-women Acts, such as The Child Marriage Restraint Act 1929, Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956, Dowry Prohibition Act 1966, The Maternity Benefit Act, 1961, The Equal Remuneration Act, 1976, the Family Courts Act 1984, the Sati Prevention Act, 1987, The National Commission for Women Act, 1990, Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005, among others.

Ambedkar expected women to participate in politics and he was the first activist who sown the seeds for the rights of working women. He dreamed the rights for women were universal and got an idea from civil liberties movements in the west. To promote the vision of Ambedkar one could endorse his principles and behave with social responsibility. He insists as follows, "It is education that is the right weapon to cut social slavery and it is the education that will enlighten the downtrodden masses to come up and gain social status, economic betterment, and political freedom" (Journals of India). Through his Bahishkrit Hitkarni Sabha (1923) he spread education among the marginalized people for improving their financial status. So he gave the slogan: Educate-Agitate-Organize.

Ambedkar, as the emancipator of oppressed people (Dalits) and his revolutionary aspects, arouses the thought of equality and liberty. His main idea in life was to reconstruct the society along with reformed democratic ideas. Throughout his life, he has presented his views for the empowerment of women. According to him, religion, caste, class, and patriarchy cruelly crushed women under its rules. He strongly supported women's education and adhered to his idea of equal voting rights for men and women to Simon Commission. He was the first person who introduced the Act of maternity benefits for women (factory workers) in the year 1929. He brought the following Acts for Women,

- ❖ Mines Maternity Benefit Act
- ❖ Women Labour Welfare Fund
- ❖ Women and Child Labour Protection Act
- ❖ Maternity benefit for women labour
- ❖ Restoration of Ban on Employment of women on Underground Work in coal mines
- ❖ Equal pay for equal work irrespective of gender.

Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie is one of the renowned authors of Nigeria. Her work is vastly read around the world and has been translated into many languages. Her famous novels are Purple Hibiscus, Half of a Yellow Sun and Americanah. She dealt with the themes like psychological trauma, racism, sexism, and a civil war in Nigeria. As an African woman, her path was filled with struggle and a deep sense of cultural boundaries. Through her writing, she exposes the clear ways of temperament on feminism.

She questions the authority of male-centered society and evokes vividly the painful nurture of women in the Patriarchal world. As a feminist activist, she delivered her first TED Talk in 2009, was titled 'The Danger of A Single Story' it was viewed nearly 15 million times. Her second TED talk, We Should All Be Feminists (2012) stimulate the idea of feminist ideals and how society imposed the gender disparity on the woman. It was published as a book in 2015.

In this book, Adichie explains how misogyny is deep-rooted in society and also advises her friend on how to bring up daughters and sons with responsibility. This book is very much practical and presents the realistic views for those who confuse feminism with gender equality. The author insists that both are to be treated as equal individuals from the beginning itself. And so she touches the feminist aspects with plenty of well-articulated ideas. Especially Adichie stated that religion is not a woman-friendly institution, it justifies the subjugation of women under men and it's the woman who is considered as the secondary creature.

As a 21st century feminist writer, she expertise in discussing the issues like colonialism, racism, identity crisis, and reformist feminism. The reformist feminism criticizes the systematic conventions of gender discrimination against women. The patriarchal power structure of Igbo society regulates every aspect of a woman with masculine power. In her nonfiction We Should All Be Feminist Adichie stated, We teach girls shame. Close your legs. Cover yourself. We make them feel as though by being born female, they are already guilty of something. And so girls grow up to be woman who cannot say they have desire. Who silence themselves. Who cannot say what they truly think. Who have turned pretense into an art form .

The critical concepts of Ambedkar are rendered in the writings of Chimamanda Ngozi Adichie also. As a feminist activist, she has relocated the place of women in society. She is adhering to the African culture and considerate to expose the emotions of her people. And so, she seems to exemplify the crucial patriarchal and societal rules that crushed the role of women. In her TED conference talk 'We Should All Be Feminist' considered the flyer of feminist ideals and how it might be rendered. Though she is a Nigerian woman her ideas are stocked with Indian society also. The corrupted male domination at the political and economic level abused the freedom of women. Her boldness in writing represented the exact scenario of Nigerian Women and how they are affected by the gender disparity.

Adichie's work Dear Ijeawele, or a Feminist Manifesto in Fifteen Suggestions was written as an epistolary form, which contained her suggestions on how one could raise her baby girl as a feminist. She motivates her friend to raise her daughter as a woman of freewill. She suggests avoiding gender roles and never discourages her career. Through her revolutionary thoughts, she inspires the women around the world. According to her, feminism is a part of human rights. However, she stresses the problems of gender inequality that lead to the subjugation of women. The sophisticated views of Adichie has inspired women, who are the continuous victims of the hegemonic masculinity.

In this book, Adichie explains how misogyny is deep-rooted in society and also advises her friend on how to bring up daughters and sons with responsibility. This book is very practical and realistic views for those who confuse feminism with gender equality. The author insists both feminism and gender equality that are treated as equal individuals from the beginning itself. And so she touches the feminist aspects with plenty of well-articulated ideas.

Adichie's aggressive questions on society portray the systemic rules of gender bias. It seems to develop the feeling of inferiority among women. In her book Dear Ijeawele: A feminist manifesto in fifteen suggestions states that,

- ❖ Do not stress the idea of 'gender roles' to women.
- ❖ Induce her thoughts to question on the sex selective biology.
- ❖ They are being more conscious about their education, health, and the value of identity.
- ❖ Never speak of marriage as an achievement.
- ❖ Do not teach the idea of woman to be oppressed.
- ❖ Equality of sharing household duties should be followed in relations and parents have an equal responsibility in child-rearing.

To conclude Ambedkar and Adichie stressed their views on the welfare of women. Ambedkar the truthful pro-feminist insisted on his reproductive and reconstructed ideas for women's liberation. Feminist activist Adichie, who was compressed by culture implicated Nigerian society, raised her voice for the empowerment of women in the present scenario. To attain the goals for the emancipation of women, one should avoid narrow-minded views of the patriarchal society. Through proper education, women can attain their heights. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru once said, "To awaken the people, it is the woman who must be awakened ; once she is on the move, the family moves, the village moves, the nation moves"(Tribune). It is worthy to note that woman is the superpower, who tackles all the problems around her. She reciprocates the ideal role and regenerates her history. She is mentally stronger to absorb all the barriers and leads her family to the brightest way. She is a wonderful creator of positive vibes and boosts up to shine in the world.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar : Life and Values

Asst. Prof. Seva Sadan's College of Education,
Ulhasnagar-3

Abstract:

life of Dr. Ambedkar is full of Struggle. Revisiting his life , will learn many values of life like equality, peace, Self-respect, Integration, democracy etc. Being Teacher Educator, these values should be developed among pupil teacher. This paper focuses on different values imbued from Dr. Ambedkar's life.

Key words : Self respect, democracy, Equqlity, National integration

Introduction

Being Teacher Educator I was thinking which values, thoughts, aims, goals of life should I teach to Pupil teacher so that light of Babasaheb Ambedkar thinking can enlighten future teachers. After referring his autobiography, following values based on his ideology should be taught to future teachers.

1. Self-Respect

Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar was born on April 14, 1891 in an "untouchable" Hindu family. He saw problems faced by his community. He decided his community will get equal importance in society. When he got opportunity to frame constitution, he reflected that no one is inferior or superior in front of law. Every Indian is respected irrespective of caste. Teacher should realize children the sad outcomes of human foolishness, mutual jealousies and hatred

2. National unity and integration

Man is social animal he has to participate in social, political and other activities. If all individuals will get equal rights as given in Constitution framed by Dr. Ambedkar it will bind the people together and harmonious society will be formed. He contemplated an ideal society based on liberty, equality, fraternity and social justice. All Indians will get equal opportunities for developing their potentialities, ideas, efforts.

Teacher should make children aware of India's role in national cooperation and development in world.

Teacher should encourage students to participation in national games, sports and competitions which helps in mutual understanding of people from different states.

3. Equality

Shudras suffered a lot due to belief that they are born from the feet of Lord Brahma. In society lower class remain suppressed, they find difficult to fulfill their basic needs of life. Its duty of teacher to raise confidence and communication skill of children coming from depressed class. Dr. Ambedkar observed "It is the infection of imitation that caught all these sub-divisions on their onward march of differentiation and has turned them into castes."

Sardar Patel passed resolution "Untouchability in any form is abolished and the imposition of any disability on that account shall be an offense. Ambedkar agreed with Gandhi and signed the Poona Pact, whereby a number of seats were reserved for the untouchables, which gave the Dalits a place in the general electoral list. Teacher should Emphasize objective analysis, critical judgment, sound reasoning and broad outlook.

4. Democracy

Democracy is important instrument to bring equality and national integration among people. Dr. Ambedkar says "Democracy is not merely a form of Government, it is primarily a mode of associated living, of conjoint communicated experience. It is essentially an attitude of respect and reverence towards fellowmen”. A traditional class structure is threat to Democracy. Teachers should have democratic outlook, all students in classroom should get equal opportunities for classroom curricular activities. She should teach children to keep respect for each religions. Teacher should develop democratic citizenship through actual participation in the working of the school and community.

5. Rights of Women

Dr. Ambedkar realised that condition of women is just like weaker section of society. They should get equal rights as man. He introduced Hindu Code Bill through which women can inheritance property like man. Nowadays property is equally divided among siblings, women are getting equal share. If woman can't give birth to child they can adopt children, this right is based on thoughts of Dr. Ambedkar. Other rights like Right to Divorce, Right to remarry, maternity leave are also framed to improve status of women. Teachers should conduct role play, dramas in class related inheritance of property, children should realise equal right of girls in property. Women suffered a lot after death of Husband, Indian society were not allowing to remarry, broad outlook of Dr. Ambedkar changed mindset of society. Teachers should teach such concepts through organising co-curricular activities.

6. Rights for labourer:

During British period labourers were working for 12 to 14 hours in a day. Being Labour minister, he reduced working hours between 8 to 12 hours. Teachers if they are in position of Administration, they should not force employers to work more than 12 hours to work. The fundamental rights are defined as basic human freedoms which every Indian citizen has the right to enjoy for a proper and harmonious development of personality. These rights universally apply to all citizens, irrespective of race, place of birth, religion, caste, creed, color or gender.

7. Peace

Dr. Ambedkar tried to reduce the gap between lower and upper caste through different policies in constitution. Peace in Indian society can be brought by giving equal status in front of Law. Modern civilization is the product of the cumulative and productive efforts of many people's through the ages. Make the students not only nationally conscious but also alert them of internal organizations like the UNO, UNESCO, UNICEF, WHO etc. in promoting human welfare, peace and harmony.

Teacher should arrange Film shows on – World Wars to show the futility of wars, human rights, peace education, other masterpieces from across the world. Teacher should acquaint the child with the life and work of great leaders of the world who advocated 'peace'- Samrat Ashok, Mahatma Gandhi, Nelson Mandela, Martin Luther King. Opens a broader outlook and a new vision of life. Teacher should develop appreciation of the feelings and emotions and aspirations of the other people. Shows the interdependence and mutual nourishment of different languages and culture.

Conclusion:

A society can only claim to be an ideal if it is based on the fundamental principles of Liberty, equality, fraternity and justice in social, economic and political field. Dr. Ambedkar found that traditional Hindu Laws was not only discriminatory on the basis of caste, but it also treated women on different footing. With a view to bring this traditional law in line with modern thinking, basing on rational principles. He brought three acts known as Hindu Marriage Act, Hindu succession act and Guardianship act.

Abstract:

In this paper it is an attempt to draw an outline of Dr.B.R.Ambedkar's thoughts on Education. Present education system in India has different aims and objectives in regard to our needs and few of these are incompetent for individual and social growth. Education should play a role in man's individual and social life both. Dr.Ambedkar's thoughts on Education enlightens us with clear understanding of nature of society and its important components . To understand his thought on education one should know about his philosophy of education and social change. It is our need to understand his thoughts on Education and its implications to every aspect of our lives.

Key Words: Education, Backward, Thoughts, Agitate Organize, Dalit, civilization

1.Introduction:

“The backward classes have come to realize that after all education is the greatest material benefit for which they can fight. We may forego material benefits, we may forego material benefits of civilization, but we cannot forego our right and opportunities to reap the benefit of the highest education to the fullest extent. That the importance of this question from the point of view of the backward classes who have just realized that without education their existence is not safe.” [1] -

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a great scholar and an eminent Educationist. He carried out his studies in India and abroad. In the early twentieth century, when most of the Scheduled Castes people not received hardly any education, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar received the best possible education and obtained an array of degrees from reputed universities abroad. As a scholar, he participated in seminars and presented papers, wrote articles for journals and authored several books. He started his career as a teacher and was also principal in the Government Law College, Bombay for some time. But he left the job in order to devote himself fully to the service of the nation and the welfare of the downtrodden sections. His contribution to the advancement of education in the country is multifarious. Besides being a teacher and Principal, he was a great spokesman of education and founder and builder of educational institutions of national repute. Above all, like the Buddha, he was a great teacher and educator of the masses.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, the frontier of Dalit's emphasizes on the need of education. He compares education with the milk of tigress and adds that one who will drink it; won't seat calm. Ambedkar in one of his thoughtssays, “If you want to develop the society then you need to spread up the education. Education eradicates the bias of people which results on to minimize the exploitation, domination, of those people who try to take the benefit of the so called illiterate people. If the people get knowledge through education then they can face the problems created by the dominators. Education reforms opinions, it tries to remove the walls built among the people. The biggest gift that is given by the education is that it creates self confidence among us which is considered as the first stage of our development. Ambedkar in one of his speeches addresses that, “The people don't sustain in the struggle of life until they get educated. Since that they get caught in the clutches of social problems such as insult, suppression and desecration. So it is the duty of the existing government to accelerate by providing education. In the days of Ambedkar the educational condition of untouchables was very critical. He was of the opinion that, "The untouchables were deliberately being kept away by Brahmans and other castes. It was just because they drive the education system. They just tried to behave with untouchables as inferior." It resulted to take an effective action against government. Further he tries to make changes in education system after the worse experience with untouchables.

According to Ambedkar, "Education is a weapon of creation of mental development, weapon of eradication of social slavery of economic development of political freedom." While emphasizing on the need of education he puts forth the demand of law of compulsory education. He knew that the problem of primary education is the problem of nation. He in the conference of Mahabaleshwar held on May 31, 1929 addressed that "The problem of the spread of primary education is the most dominating one. In the present days these countries who bear the maximum Dalit illiterates don't sustain in the competition of life. The spread of primary education is the base of national development. It will take more time if the spread of primary education is dependent on the interest of common people. So it needs to implement a compulsory Act of primary education."

2. Ambedkar and Education:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar did not visualize education simply as a means for the development of a child's personality or as a source of earning livelihood. Rather, he considered education as the most powerful agent for bringing about desired changes in society and a prerequisite for organized effort for launching any social movement in the modern times. For him, education was an instrument to liberate the dalits from illiteracy, ignorance and superstitions and thus enable them to fight against all forms of injustice, exploitation and oppression.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar gave the highest priority to education in his struggle for the liberation of the dalits from the age-old oppressive character of the caste-ridden Indian Society. For he believed that it is only education through which various kinds of disabilities of the dalits could be overcome and their shackles of social slavery thrown away. Education provides strength and opportunity to them to fight against poverty, disease, and backwardness. Keeping in view the crucial role of education in social emancipation of the dalits, Dr. Ambedkar gave the following message to his brethren: "Educate, Organize and Agitate". This is evident from his speech on the Bombay University Act Amendment Bill in the Bombay Legislative Council on 5 October 1927: "We may forgo material benefits of civilization; but we cannot or go our right and opportunity to reap the benefits of the highest education to the fullest extent... Backward Classes ... have just realized that without education their existence is not safe".

Education has an immense impact on the human society. One can safely assume that a person is not in the proper sense until he is educated. It trains the human mind to think and takes the right decision. In other words, man becomes a rational animal when he is educated. By the way of education only the knowledge and information received and spread throughout the world. An uneducated person cannot read, write and he is very close to all knowledge and wisdom like a window. In contrast, an educated man lives in a room with all its windows open towards outside world. Simply getting education does not mean to acquire the knowledge and getting academic designation. Education must get through by the way of free mind and free thinking.

3.Dr.B.R.Ambedkar's Views on Education

According to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar to change the society of its backwardness it is very necessary to spread education. Education eradicates the bias of people which results on to minimize the exploitation, domination, of those people who try to take the benefit of the so called illiterate people: "If the people get knowledge through education then they can face the problems created by the people who dominate them. Education reforms opinions, it tries to remove the walls built among the people. The biggest gift that is given by the education is that it creates self confidence among us which is considered as the first stage of our development." Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar furthermore explains that the work without knowledge is blind and futile. He was of the opinion that when people do work without education it is just like to waste human power. He sometimes asserts if a person leading is illiterate he will definitely carry us towards darkness just like that it is the position of our leaders. For him if a leader is not educated and does not encourage the spread of education then he can drag the whole society towards deterioration. Thus what Ambedkar wants to say is that education is the vital element for the development of society and human beings. Ambedkar was much farsighted and he talked not only about the primary education but also the higher education. For him the spread of primary education to higher education begets the versatile leaders who carry us towards the betterment. While comparing life with competition, Ambedkar in one of his speeches addresses that: "The people don't sustain in the struggle of life until they get educated. Since that they get caught in the clutches of social problems such as insult, suppression and desecration. So it is the duty of the existing government to accelerate by providing education.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar considered education to be essential for all men and women irrespective of their social and economic status. All men and women must get at least the minimum education so that they may know how to read and write. The primary education caters to the minimum essential need of educating the masses. According to Dr. Ambedkar: INDIAN JOURNAL OF APPLIED RESEARCH X 635 "The object of primary education is to see that every child that enters the portals of a primary school does leave it only at a stage when it becomes literate throughout the rest of his life. But if we take the statistics, we find that out of every hundred children that enter a primary school only eighteen reach the fourth standard, the rest of them, that is to say, eighty-two out of every one hundred replace into the state of illiteracy. He said that the Government should spend sufficient amount of money so that "every child who enters a primary school reaches the fourth standard."

4. Specific Educational thoughts of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar

1. Student should pursue their studies very sincerely. You have done a good thing that you came to see me before leaving Delhi. I do not want victory at the cost of my students. You should return the ticket and do not come to Bombay for canvassing. You are conducting research for Ph.D. in Agriculture, which is very important subject. I wish, you should concentrate on your research. For your information, I tell you that, we have made good provisions in constitution for encouraging agricultural developments.
2. We must now entirely give up the idea that parents give birth – janma – to the child and not destiny – karma. They can mould the destiny of the children and if we but follow this principle, be sure that we shall soon see better days and our progress will be greatly accelerated if male education is persuaded side by side with the female education the fruits of which you can very well see verified in your own daughter. Let your mission therefore be to educate and preach the idea of education to those at least who are near to and in close contact with you.

3. Education is something, which ought to be brought within the reach of everyone. The policy of the department therefore, ought to be to make higher education as cheap to the lower classes as it can possible be made.

The present education does not yield required results mainly because it is divorced from the real social content and social goals. We as the citizens of the republic are constitutionally committed to democracy, social justice, equality of opportunity, secularism and above all to a welfare state. Educational policy and educational programmes should not merely equip an individual to adjust with society to its customs and conventions, but it should enable him to bring desirable changes in the society. Every educational institute from secondary school to University College should be developed to become an agency of change; it is the dream of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar.

5. Conclusion:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar wanted the people to cultivate the values of freedom and equality among themselves; it is possible only through education. He regarded education as a means to reach the doors of light and perception to remove the regions of darkness and ignorance. Ambedkar emphasized on secular education for social emancipation. The basic theme of his philosophy of education is: inculcating the values of liberty, equality, fraternity, justice and moral character among the boys and girls of all shades. By the way of his educational philosophy, I shall view that by experiencing full freedom of education without the barriers of any caste, creed and race; it is the best way for the enlightenment of human beings from ignorance. Moreover it can be said that under the obligation of Dr. Ambedkar India is going to become a world power through intellectual human resources which are brought only through education. Not only this but also the decisions taken by University Grants Commission about university and research in it shall be undoubtedly the products of Ambedkar's thoughts in this era.

Abstract:

Bharat Ratna Dr Bhimarao Ambedkar was the first doctoral degree holder in economics among Indians. He has great contribution in economics. He has his great contribution in agriculture and land reforms in India. He was the first economist in India who scientifically analyzed the problems of agriculture in India which resulted in large scale poverty. The Ambedkar's thought on agriculture is found in his essay 'Small Holdings In India and Their Remedies' written in 1980 where he pointed out the reasons for poverty in India and suggested radical remedies in agricultural sector for eradication of poverty in India.

Keywords: Agriculture, land reforms and poverty.

Introduction:

Bharat Ratna Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was one of the greatest personalities who made dynamic changes in the society. He had fully devoted his life for improvement in the condition of downtrodden people in India. He was the first Indian to be awarded a Ph.D degree in economics and has extensively worked on the problems of Indian Economy. Dr Ambedkar analysed various problems based on economic dimension. He published three books in the field of economics dealing with the public finance and monetary economics, "The problem of the rupee-Its Origin and it's solution", "The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India", and "administration and Finance of the East Indian"

Methodology:

This paper is based on secondary data in which research papers and articles are used.

Objective:

The objectives of this paper are

1. To study the thoughts of Dr B.R. Ambedkar on the problems of Indian Agriculture.
2. To study the measures suggested by him for the improvement of agriculture to alleviate poverty.

Ambedkar's thought on the agricultural problems in India:

India is livelihood for a majority of the population and can never be ignored. It must be developed to remove the poverty of a country like India. But India stands far behind in case of agricultural growth and has gone through little structural transformation. Dr. Ambedkar was the first economist who scientifically analyzed the problems of agriculture in India which resulted in large scale poverty.

Ambedkar's thought on agriculture is found in his essay "Small holding in India and their remedies" published in 1918. In his essay Dr. Ambedkar pointed out the reasons for the poverty in India and suggested remedial measures in agricultural sector for eradication of poverty in India. His deep-seated views on agriculture are also found in his essay “State and Minorities. “

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was the first Indian economist to examine the problem of sub-division and fragmentation of agricultural land holdings and formulate a very scientific definition of an economic holding. According to him Indian agriculture suffers from small and scattered holding. So, not only the consolidation of holding but also the enlargement of the size of holding must be done. He also said that mere size of land is empty of all economic connotations. Consequently, it cannot be the language of economic science to say that a large holding is economic while a small holding is uneconomic. It is the right or wrong proportion of other factors of production to a unit of land that renders the latter economic and uneconomic. He pointed out that a large agricultural population with the lowest proportion of land in actual cultivation means that a large part of the agricultural population is superfluous and idle. Even if the lands are consolidated and enlarged and cultivated through capitalist enterprise, it will not solve the problem as it will not only aggravate the evils by adding to our stock of idle labor.

Nationalization of land and collective farming:

After observing the unequal holding and persistence of tenants, by 1947, Ambedkar came out with radical solution of nationalization of land and collective farming. He felt neither consolidation of holdings nor tenancy legislation contributes for improving agricultural productivity. Moreover, these measures cannot help in solving the persistent problems of landless laborers and small farmers. He suggested nationalization of entire agricultural land with collective farming as the solution for the ills of agrarian conditions. It should be the state’s obligation to supply the capital necessary for agriculture as well industry. Ambedkar’s scheme suggested that agriculture should be the state industry.

Separate villages:

Ambedkar proposed the establishment of a settlement commission that would provide separate villages for the Scheduled Castes. This demand was voiced by Ambedkar as early as 1926. In demanding separate settlements for the Dalit’s, Ambedkar noted that while the Hindus lived in the village, the Dalit’s were forced to live in ghettos outside the village. Further, he argued that the village system of India was such that the Dalit’s, mostly landless laborers, were completely dependent on the Hindus for employment on land that the latter owned and controlled. Their wages were depressed for Hindus to profit and they had “no way of earning a living which is open to the Untouchables so long as they live in a Ghetto as a dependent part of the Hindu village”. Ambedkar called this a relationship of “economic dependence” and went on to analyze its social and cultural implications and many inhuman practices Dalit’s had to undergo.

Abolition of the Khoti system:

On September 17, 1937 Dr. Ambedkar introduced in the Bombay Legislative Council a bill seeking the abolition of the Khoti system. The Khoti system is related to minor land tenures in the Bombay Presidency. It prevailed in some parts of Ratnagiri District and also in some parts of Kobala (now Raigad) and Thane district. The Khoti tenure differed from the ordinary Rytwori in as much as in the latter the occupants of the land is directly responsible to the govt for the payment of revenue while in the former the Govt employed the services of the khot for the purposes of the collection of revenue. The khot was called a superior holder while the tenant was called as inferior holder. The khoti system thus to some extent resembled Zamindari system prevailing under the permanent settlement act.

Under the Khoti System the Khot was obliged to collect revenue from the tenants and to pay a certain part of it to the Govt. once such payment was made the khot enjoyed unrestricted freedom to do whatever he liked to the tenants. The Khots generally misused the freedom and subjected the tenants to all kinds of exaction. The result was that the tenants were reduced to the state of object poverty. This agitated the tenants. They demanded the abolition of the unjust system of Khoti. The system disturbed the peace and tranquility in the presidency and therefore, Dr. Ambedkar held it was imperative to abolish it. Thus by introducing the bill to abolish the Khoti system Dr. Ambedkar sought to put an end to the exploitation of the actual tillers of the land and establish a direct relationship between them and the Govt. In the bill he also made the provision of paying reasonable compensation to the Khots. Dr. Ambedkar 's bill on the abolition of the Khoti system thus proved to be a fore under to the Land Reform Legislation in the post –independence India.

Measures suggested by Ambedkar to eradicate agricultural problem thereby poverty:

1. Consolidation of agricultural and economic holding of land and co-operative farming.
2. To make agriculture profitable govt must treat it as state industry. Govt should invest lot of capital in agricultural seeds, fertilizers, labor and, modern technology should be provided by govt.
3. To eradicate problem of agriculture rapid industrialization is the soundest remedy for agricultural problem in India. Agriculture should be the state industry. Industry should divert surplus labor from agriculture to industry to reduce the pressure of land.
4. Recommended establishment of separate commission for separate settlement for landless poor labor.

Conclusion:

Ambedkar was a strong advocate of land reforms and of a prominent role for the state in economic development. He recognized the inequalities in an unfettered capitalist economy. His views on land holding and land revenue system are applicable in at present days. The govt. must be adopted co-operative agriculture to increase the size of holding and ultimately increase in productivity.

Ambedkar And Indian Nationalism-An Over View

Abstract

Ambedkar, the principal architect of our Constitution, in his numerous writings reflected on nationalism and gave valuable insights. He argued very passionately for adequate representation of the untouchables in the legislature, executive and public service. Nationalism was used as a cover to negate such demands. In fact, he categorically wrote that nationalism became the core plank to take a stand against the struggling humanity within the country and thereby creating fertile conditions for the upsurge of rank communalism. Indeed, what he wrote before Independence has become a grim reality today. The communal fascist forces have not only secured state power at the Centre but also control and command the state apparatus and their functions at the national level to serve their sinister design. It is instructive to note that Ambedkar very persuasively, prophetically and incisively wrote that the governing class in India always raised the cry of 'nationalism/Bharat mata is in danger' whenever the exploited classes demanded justice and fair and equal treatment and affirmative action for representation in the legislature, executive and public service. He also pointed out that the governing class was aware that class ideology, class interests, class issues and class conflicts would spell disaster for its rule and therefore always sidetracked the issues and interests of the exploited masses by playing upon the sentiment of nationalism and national unity. He described it as a misuse of nationalism. It is tragic that what Ambedkar wrote much before our Independence is now becoming a grim reality in contemporary India. Under the present dispensation at the Centre and several States, the article represents the views of the Dr. B.R. Ambedkar's views of nationalism and its interpretation in the current form.

Keywords: Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, Nationalism, National Integration, Universal Vision, Secularism, Social Justice and Socialism, Exploited Masses, Social and Economic Realm.

Introduction:

Ambedkar rightly observed, "Nationality is a social feeling. It is a feeling of a corporate sentiment of oneness which makes those who are charged with it feel that they are kith and kin. This national feeling is a double-edged feeling. It is at once a feeling of fellowship of one's own kith and kin and an anti-fellowship feeling for those who are not one's own kith and kin. It is a feeling of 'consciousness of kind' which on the one hand binds together those who have it so strongly that it overrides all difference arising out of economic conflicts or social gradations and, on the other, severs them from those who are not of their kind. It is a longing not to belong to any other group. This is the essence of what is called a nationality and national feeling.

Ambedkar was a philosopher who not only interpreted the society and the world during his time but also struggled to change them, fighting as a foot soldier. Having a universal vision, he shaped and steered struggles in which was forged his belief in secularism, social justice and socialism. Ambedkar also analysed nationalism in the context of the demand of the Indian commercial community/class that sought to replace Europeans in the field of trade and commerce. They wanted to do so using the trope of nationalism. They also wanted lower exchange rates and higher profits in foreign trade by taking recourse to nationalism. Ambedkar critically observed such profit-seeking orientation of the commercial class and disapproved of their predatory economic pursuits under the garb of nationalism.

Ambedkar's Views of Nation Building

A prominent thinker and social reformer, is widely lauded as an emancipator of the untouchables. He was also keenly interested in reshaping India for which he set his aim at the annihilation of caste which he regarded as essential for making India a nation in the true sense. This he held to be impossible so long as a large number of its citizenry remain ostracised as untouchables. Sometimes, the words 'nation' and 'state' tend to be combined in the expression 'nation-state'. But the two have different connotations: State is a politically organised institution having monopoly of power over the inhabitants within a given territory. It is not necessary that every person under a state feels that he belongs to a nation. 'Nation' represents a spirit of homogeneity towards fellow inhabitants sharing a common culture, ethnicity, race, religion and language or any one of these. This community may be an 'imagined community' or 'abstract community' or 'self-defined group'.

Ambedkar's conception of nation-building implied pursuit of a development policy which must be wholly inclusive. For the uplift of the oppressed sections of society, there should be legal rights and constitutional safeguards. The lowest sections of people faced discrimination in access to socio-economic and educational opportunities which were monopolized mainly by the 'entrenched castes'. Therefore, specific opportunities must be assured to the oppressed castes. Ambedkar was keen to secure equal rights for all which he called 'citizenship rights'. Ambedkar had in mind his own mechanism for ensuring equal rights for the unprivileged, without any condescension from the higher castes. As the first law minister of Independent India, he initiated the Hindu Code Bill which was so much to raise women's position in Hindu Law, in respect of marriage, inheritance and property. Ambedkar held that social solidarity among the Indians could never be secured unless equal access to income, capital assets and economic opportunities. Since India was in his time primarily an agrarian country, so he particularly studied the agricultural problem, though he was also, concerned about industrialisation.

Economic Prosperity

He advocated nationalization of manufacturing industry as well. He urged reform of the taxation system and argued that land revenue should be more flexible and subject to revision from time to time. Ambedkar also said that the salvation of the depressed class lay in 'higher education, higher employment and better ways of earning a living' since education and economic development are closely linked. For promotion of education of depressed classes, he established 'Depressed Class Education Society' in 1928. Apart from education, he laid emphasis on the character building. An educated man without character, to him, was no less dangerous than a beast. Ambedkar was interested in the question as to how individual opinion could lead to public action. He tried to resolve the much debated issue on individuality versus collectivity. According to him without personal participation, democracy could still be government for the people but not government by the people. He wrote: As the Government is the most important field for the exercise of individual capacities, it is in the interest of the people that no person as such should be denied the opportunity of actively participating in the process of Government. Ambedkar held that the representation system in India should be in accordance with the social division of the whole population of India. He argued that since the Indian population was divided into many religious groups—Hindus, Muslims, Christians, Jews and Parsees; and Hindus, the last divided into—touchables and untouchables, popular government must reflect the distinct interests of all these groups. So Ambedkar proposed separate electorates for separate communities. A separate electorate does not imply a separate nation or separate state, but simply follows from the principle that the people of a community should be able to choose their representatives from their own community. He advocated reservation for the representation of various religions as well as Hindu untouchables in legislature, executive and public service. In his opinion this was the only way to solve the communal problem in India. Ambedkar saw tolerance of religious plurality as essential for the foundation of prospective Indian nation, as, according to him, 'the process of creating a nation is linked to a thorough critique of the Brahmanic aspects of Indian tradition and a recognition of non-Brahman contributions, such as those of Buddhism, as a basis for religious plurality'.

His views of Emancipation

He talked about freedom of India from social evils like inequality and untouchability. This can be seen as a 'subaltern narrative' of Indian nationalism which looked at upliftment of downtrodden, deprived and marginalised sections that did not have any participation in the public life of the colonial India. Dr Ambedkar became the voice of these 60 million deprived and untouchable sections of the society. Without emancipation of this segment, Indian freedom struggle was deemed incomplete. The Indian national struggle in the first half of the 20th century was not merely a struggle to wrest political power from foreign rule but also a struggle to lay the foundation of a modern India by purging the society of outmoded social institutions, beliefs and attitudes. Ambedkar's struggle constituted a part of this internal struggle, one of the divergent and sometimes conflicting currents, all of which helped to secure 'freedom' from external and internal oppression and enslavement. Without Ambedkar's opposition to mainstream nationalism, the process of internal consolidation of the nation would not have been carried out sufficiently enough to strengthen and broaden the social base of Indian nationalism.

Ambedkar was not against the idea of nationalism but against the Congress's version of it, which entailed freedom of India from British colonialism but not from Brahmanical imperialism under which millions of Scheduled Castes had been yoked for hundreds of years. It was Ambedkar's political challenge which compelled the Congress to appreciate the national significance of the problem of castes and to adopt measures which significantly contributed towards strengthening the social base of Indian nationalism. Indian nationalism in its initial stages, by the very nature of its historical development, was an upper class (upper castes) phenomenon, reflecting the interests and aspirations of its members. Naturally when nationalists spoke in terms of national interest they certainly meant their own (class) interests. The evocation of 'nation' was a necessary ritual to ensure the much needed popular support for an essentially partisan cause. This sectarian approach to nationalism could be seen in the writings of none other than Pt. Nehru in his seminal work Discovery of India, "That mixture of religion and philosophy, history and tradition, custom and social structure, which in its wide fold included almost every aspect of the life of India, and which might be called Brahminism or Hinduism, became the symbol of nationalism. It was indeed a national religion."

Conclusion:

It was in the backdrop of this escapism of the Congress brand of nationalism that an alternative subaltern nationalism was born through Ambedkar. Ambedkar took up this question from the 'social below' and brought it to a political high by linking the question of caste with that of democracy and nationalism. Such an effort to prioritise society over polity and then linking them together was unprecedented in India before Ambedkar. Gandhi can be said to have made such an effort but his approach was obscure and primitive. There is no doubt that Ambedkar was vehemently opposed to unjust social stratification in India, but to say that he was against the nation is wrong. He was definitely against the Congress version of Nationalism. Ambedkar was neither an anti-national nor just a leader of the Scheduled Castes. He was a national leader who understood the problems of the most exploited communities and tried to bring them into the main stream. He expanded the social base of Indian nationalism which helped first to attain freedom and later to put the country on path of progress. Today, when all thought converges around inclusive politics, Ambedkar has become more relevant than ever.

Socio-Economic vision of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar in Indian Economy

Department of Economics

Email - janshal.rekha@gmail.com

Introduction:

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was among the most outstanding intellectuals of India in the 20th century in the best sense of the world. India has a rich history of social and Economic thinkers who have helped to establish the foundations of modern India. Ambedkar was the first Indian to pursue a doctorate in economics abroad. He argued that industrialisation and agricultural growth could enhance the Indian economy. He stressed investment in agriculture as the primary industry of India. Ambedkar's vision helped the government to achieve its food security goal. Moreover, Ambedkar advocated national economic and social development, stressing education, public hygiene, community health, residential facilities as the basic amenities. He also discussed through his research for the problem of the Rupee: Its Origin and Solution (1923) as well as gold standard in modified form and opposed gold-exchange standard favoured by Keynes, "Indian Currency and Finance (1909)". He favoured the stoppage of all further coinage of the rupee and the minting of a gold coin, which he believed would fix currency rates and prices.

Furthermore, He demonstrated in his research, "the Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India" and analyzed the various systems used by the British colonial government to manage finances in India. Nevertheless, his views on the finance were that governments should ensure their expenditures have "faithfulness, wisdom and economy." "Faithfulness" meaning governments should use money as nearly as possible to the original intentions of spending the money in the first place. "Wisdom" meaning it should be used as best as possible for the public good, and "economy" meaning the funds should be used so that the maximum value can be extracted from them.

In 1951, Ambedkar established the Finance Commission of India. He opposed income tax for low-income groups. He contributed in Land Revenue Tax and excise duty policies to stabilise the economy. Even, he played an important role in land reform and the state economic development. His theory of State Socialism had three points: state ownership of agricultural land, the maintenance of resources for production by the state, and a just distribution of these resources to the population. He emphasized a free economy with a stable Rupee which India has adopted recently. In view of the above, he advocated birth control to develop the Indian economy, and this has been adopted by Indian government as national policy for family planning. He emphasized equal rights for women for economic development.

As Ambedkar was proficient economist, and was working as a professional economist until 1921, when he became a political leader. He wrote three scholarly books on economics:

- Administration and Finance of the East India Company.
- The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India.
- The Problem of the Rupee: Its Origin and Its Solution.

That is why, a renowned historian, Ramchandra Guha has recognized Dr. Ambedkar as "as a great scholar, institution builder and economic theorist."

Research objective:

- To study the economical thoughts of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar for Indian economy and relevance of these thoughts in current scenario.
- To analyse Dr. Ambedkar's versatile role in social economics.

Research Methodology:

This paper is based on the socio-economic vision of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's in India economy with the help of secondary data collection. The secondary data is gathered from various published Journals, articles, published speeches, Books, Internet (websites) and research papers.

Socio-Economic Vision of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar:

Dr. Ambedkar was a great social reformer and an eminent Economist. Dr. Ambedkar studied many subjects. Wrote on them even while running social movement. In This paper discuss about the vision of Bharat Ratna awardee Dr. B.R. Ambedkar in the field of socio - economics. The major contribution of Babasaheb in the sub fields of economics like public finance, agricultural economics, problem of caste system in economic development, idea about new water and power policy are the few which is discussed in this paper. These remarkable contributions by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar are discussed under the following heads:

1. Problem of Rupee: Gold Standard versus Gold Exchange Standard
2. Contributions in Public Finance
3. Contribution in Agriculture Economics

1. Problem of Rupee: Gold Standard versus Gold Exchange Standard:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's thoughts has a great impact on current Indian currency system. Under British rule when India Govt. was struggling with falling value of Indian Rupee, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar In 1923 wrote 'The problem of Rupee, its origin and solution. He argued that the gold exchange standard does not have stability. The developing countries like India cannot afford gold exchange standards, and besides this, it also increases the risk of inflation and price rise. He proved with statistics data and reasons how the Indian Rupee has lost its value and hence the purchasing power of Rupee is falling. He suggested that govt. deficit should be regulated and money should have a circular flow. He also suggested more attention should be given on price stability than exchange rate stability. The Reserve Bank of India (RBI), was based on the ideas that Ambedkar presented to the Hilton Young Commission.

2. Contributions in Public Finance

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar wrote a book on "The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India". In this book he has discussed about the origin, development and mechanism of provincial finance. He has also mentioned about the provincial finance under government of India act 1919. The period which he has covered in this book is from 1833 to 1921. Babasaheb has talked about the problem with the centralization of government finance in India from 1833 to 1871. He showed that in this period the fiscal system was defective with destructive taxes and the expenditure done by the government was unproductive. Ultimately, in 1871, it was decided that provincial government should prepare its own revenue and expenditure budget. There onwards from 1871 to 1876 provincial finance was introduced in the form of a budget. Under this Diarchy system financial responsibilities were divided among the provincial government and the centre. Ambedkar analysed that this kind of scheme led to high taxation which was more dangerous. Period from 1877 to 1881 was considered as the second phase of provincial finance. In this period the provincial government used to produce the budget based on the assigned revenue. In the third phase of the provincial finance the budget was based on the shared revenue. According to Babasaheb earlier style of budgeting had a very little room for the expansion of revenue, but this new style of budgeting based on shared revenue does not possess this kind of drawback. The revenue collected by either imperial government or provinces was shared among them. This scheme lasted for 38 years and after that in 1921 major fiscal reform was introduced.

3. Contributions in Agricultural Economics

Dr. Ambedkar has great contribution in agriculture and land reforms in India. He mentioned that holdings of lands by few people is an acute problem of Indian agriculture which has various disadvantages, like difficulties in cultivation and utilization and resources, increasing cost, low productivity, inadequate income and low standard of living. According to Dr. Ambedkar Productivity of agriculture is related to not only with the size of holdings of land but also with other factors such as capital, labour and other inputs. Therefore if capital, or labour etc. are not available in adequate quantity and quality, then even a large size land can become unproductive. On the other hand small size land become productive if these resources are available in plenty. With this thought the 'Land Ceiling Act' is passed after Independence. Ambedkar, in 1928, had written about bringing restrictions on moneylenders and ways to do that.

4. Strategies for Overall Economic Development of India

B R Ambedkar emphasized on the nationalization of economy. He was of the view that state should manage the economy that the production might reach the optimum level and the benefits must not be taken away by the capitalist, even benefits must be distributed equally. He stood for the progressive transformation of society, removing glaring social and economic inequalities that were due to the capitalist system. BR Ambedkar was a firm believer of socialism. According to him, "state socialism is essential; for India's industrialization. Private economy cannot do so and if it makes an attempt it would give way to economic disparities, as it can be visualized in the case of Europe. It is a warning bell for India" Dr. Ambedkar believed that the strategy for India's Economic development should be based on Eradication of property elimination of inequities and ending exploitation of masses. He emphasized exploitation has many dimensions, in fact in the India, social or religious exploitation is no less Oppressive than economic exploitation and it should be eliminated.

5. Other Contribution in the Economic Development of India

- Ambedkar has brought several labour reforms during his time. Ambedkar was Minister of Labour Ministry, he mentioned the Labour problems. Ambedkar supported trade union movement and right to strike against capitalism. He wanted participation of labourers in industrial management. He paid attention to joint council's employment exchanges and earned leave for permanent workers, welfare activities, conciliation and trade disputes. According to him industrial peace would prevail if it is based on social justice.
- Dr. Ambedkar argued that concept of human capital in India is useless if the poorer and downtrodden untouchable dalits are not recognized by other classes as human being with equal social prestige and religious basis. It is therefore impossible to use this human capital in the economic development of India
- Dr. Ambedkar was a President of Policy Committee on Irrigation and Electric Power. He was also closely associated with "official Committee" in the Labour Department. The main task of the Committee was to formulate the water and power policy. Dr. Ambedkar had influenced the nature of water and power policy and strategy for their planned development. Damodar Valley Project, Hirakud River Project, Sone River like all big projects construction made regarding to Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's recommendation. Dr. Ambedkar suggested solution about the Inter-State Water disputes and conflicts.

- Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar thought that fast development of India is impossible without Industrialization. According to him creating large scale employment produces essential goods for mass consumption. It utilizes raw materials, reduces foreign dependence and increasing security to labour, ultimately leads to the overall economic development of the country. The private sector industries cannot make big industries for want of large-scale investments. So, government should come forward to start large scale industries. The smaller industries should be kept in private sector. The insurance and transport companies should be nationalized. Rights to strike should be given to labourers. After the independence the industrial policy of the Indian government is in keeping with Dr. Ambedkar's expectations.
- According to Ambedkar, the caste system in India was a major obstacle to economic growth and development. In his book "Annihilation of Castes" presented a strong critique of the caste system in India and its rationalizations and demonstrated logical flows therein. He stated that, what was implicit in the caste system was not merely the division of labour but also a division of labourers. And this division of labourers was not based on natural aptitudes rather on the dogma of predestination. Supporting the views of Ambedkar, the scholars like Nesfield states that it is not the occupation which is responsible for the castes but it is the caste system which was the basis of assigning occupations.
- Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's contribution to economic development and progress of women is significant. According to him, participation of women in the economic development is impossible without developing their social status and equality. But due to bad economic conditions of women in India, India's economic progress is hampered. So, it is important to improve the economic condition of women and give those equal rights and freedom of occupation.

Conclusion:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar is known more for being the architect of the Constitution, but basically, he was the most educated economist of the country. Ambedkar's thoughts of economics have made a significant impact on the social movement. He was mainly an economist and this is evident through various economic provisions made in our Constitution. Ambedkar's writings and speeches were clear in their economic thought. Ambedkar's thought has far-reaching consequences on the Indian Economy. They were way ahead of his times. He was a highly proficient economist but his contributions in the economics were not recognised in the main stream economics. The reason behind this was that Babasaheb stopped practicing economics after India got independence and devoted most of his time in politics and law. Therefore he was more popular as a political leader rather than an economist. But whatever he has contributed to the field of economics is remarkable. He had contributed not only thoughts but also fought for upliftment of exploited. His economic thoughts have been useful to Indian economy and can be used as positive solution for current economic problems in India.

Women as Marginalized in Politics: Retrospection of Anomaly in Constitution

Abstract:

The writings of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar reveal his in-depth study which reflects the ground realities and the root causes of the oppressed. His fight for the empowerment of women and in the need for their advancement in socio, economic and developmental aspects can be seen as an attempt to bring forth the status of equality in all respects. However, an absence of attempt to promote women into politics, lack of reservation of equal number of seats for women in politics, and the non-existent concern for the inclusion of equal number of women to frame the constitution itself, can be viewed as an anomaly. It can also be considered as treating women as inferior and can be argued and debated on, as only the oppressed can express the pain of being ignored and alienated, and having women then, as the members of the constituent assembly might have definitely made a difference to the way the constitution was written. Women's Reservation Bill, 2008, (108th Amendment) was still not passed indicating the existent male dominated society. Had there been upsurges written about women participation in politics in the Constitution similar to the Caste Annihilation and reservations for lower caste sections of the society written by Ambedkar, marginalization of women in politics would have been avoided or would have been less. The battle continues, and the feminists' voice is hardly audible and cared for. Drawing attention to the Anomaly in Constitution and the marginalization of women in politics, this paper focuses on how women can be politically empowered and helping the cause of passing the women's reservation bill

Key words: Ambedkar., Woman ,constitution and Reservation.

Introduction:

Women in India have been discouraged to be a part of the political system over the years. The reasons being the assignment of the marginalized duties like home making, baby sitting, child bearing and groom caring. Women were always treated and viewed to serve as a slave in several aspects, but the same never reflected in the political system of India as women were never considered as eligible or fit to be politicians. To empower women into politics and in politics is still seen as a distant dream. Women participation in politics and in equal number alongside men would have been a reality today had Ambedkar included 'equal share of responsibility for women in politics' in the Constitution. Ambedkar's concern for women was evident through his introduction of the Hindu Code Bill, which focused on women gaining the rights of equal citizens and having the right to property. Though Singariya, M. R. (2014) stated very clearly about Ambedkar's thoughts on emancipation of women being expressed with the same allegiance as he has expressed on the Purdah system of the muslim women, and though Chattragadda. M. (2019) talks about Ambedkar's fight for 'right to education to women', the fact that women are not equal in number to that of men in politics in India till date remains and hence, Ambedkar, the father of the Constitution of India is found to be at fault for overlooking the need for the participation of women in politics resulting in the requirement of empowering women into and in politics. There is a definite amount of work that Ambedkar had done in liberating women from oppressions, but the subjugation of women only into subordinate or menial jobs is still existent, and this could have well been avoided had Ambedkar treated and considered it as equal in importance as 'Annihilation of Caste', in the Constitution of India. The first twenty years of change would have had a huge lift to the empowerment of women, not only in politics, but in every stream that women would have taken up, and India would have been a different nation today. Women's Reservation Bill, 2008, still not being accepted seems to be a political gambit in the male dominated political system of India. This being the case, the suppression and oppression of women continues and the empowerment of women and India will remain forbid.

Objectives:

- To bring in equality by helping the Women Reservation Bill, 2008 be passed to fight for equal representation of women in Indian Political system
- To help the cause of marginalized women in the society
- To support women to be equally competent in Politics
- To have the Constitution amended by including the point of equal share of positions in politics in India.
- To fight for the cause of Women rights in political aspects which Ambedkar did in several other aspects of Women Rights.

Review of Literature:

There is no doubt about the fact that Ambedkar remains as a hero to the entire nation for all his intellectual works. There is also no doubt that he faced a great deal of criticism in the process of trying to abolish the practices of untouchability and the hardships of the subaltern. But, much of the criticism does not stand today because of the developments that took place in India because of his writings and acts. One writing on Empowerment of women into and in politics would have made a huge difference to the women in India and India as a nation.

Though there is no mention of Ambedkar in her writings, Rao, N (2017) states that the right to property would help women to have identities like men in several ways – as a producer, a provider, a protector, and bearer of community, clan and kin identity; the ideology on which Ambedkar wrote on right to property for women. The state of women in India continues to be the way it was during the Pre-Independence period as women are still dependent and their right to inherit property is rarely visible. The Santal women are perfect examples of struggling tribes inheriting hardly any land in a male dominated society. Even after 'Right to Property for Women' is drafted in the constitution, the women are meted with a fate less wanted by them. This makes us understand the fate of women, when left out, ignored or alienated from politics.

With most women not having property of their own and are rarely getting any support from their families, their ability to invest in politics is lost. Apart from the money power, they also lack the muscle to carry on crimes unlike the records of some of the male politicians who have shaped both the demand and context for criminality. This is evident from Vaishnav, M (2017) who reveals the facts that one-third of the members of the Parliament were facing ongoing criminal prosecution indicating that Politics is meant for people with criminal record or for the economically stronger sections of the society.

In the records of Kumar, P (2015), Sriparna Ganguly Chaudhuri's 'Political Participation and Women's Leadership' explains how the passing of the 73rd Amendment to the Indian Constitution in 1992, known as the 'greatest social experiment' reserving seats for rural woman in Panchayats to improve the status and lives of women in rural communities has brought in transformations in decision making resulting in a positive change in areas where women were elected as the leaders. In spite of the under-representation of women, Sriparna Ganguly

Chaudhuri goes on to say 'elected women representatives of gram panchayats navigate the labyrinth of power, gender, caste, class, patriarchy, violence and discrimination to define a new age leadership which is both conscious and courageous. They not just deliver basic services to their electorate but alter power relations and raise critical consciousness regarding rights within their communities. The chapter argues that women do not have specific biological traits that make them better leaders; rather, their own subordination provides the impetus for social change which catalyses the transformation of the social and political norms around them.'

Taking this as cue, it can be believed that Ambedkar support for empowering women into and in politics would have made a world of difference to the women in India and India as a whole.

Research Questions:

1. What could have been the impact had Ambedkar included 'the bill of equal number of women in politics' in the constitution?
2. How does the marginalization of women in politics be reduced or eliminated in India?

Importance of the Study:

Laying emphasis on women being marginalized in politics, this research paper reveals the greatness of Ambedkar's fight for the rights of women in several aspects and how the omission of equal participation of women in politics in the constitution might have changed or transformed the societies in India and India at large. Since the passing of the 73rd Amendment showed positive signs, it should have encouraged the passing of the 108th Amendment Act. In case there are any unforeseen developments occurring, there is always a chance of modifying or bringing in new amendments to rectify the failed acts. Not passing the 108th Amendment would also mean to demean women and the 73rd Amendment act.

This paper is also significant in pointing the anomaly in Ambedkar's constitution which has missed drafting about the number of equal seats alongside men in politics, as this could have empowered women in every single way, be it in decision making or in bringing the status of women on par with men, rather than being subjugated as subordinates or weaklings.

In retrospection, this study would also bring in changes in the thought power of women and help in encouraging women to take part in politics in an active manner. It also may put an end to the corrupt, criminal and rich male dominant political system and may lead to transform it into a competitive democratic political system with women having equal status, power and position alongside men.

Ambedkar's fight for 'right to education to women' along with the awareness on requisition of equal number of seats for them in politics in all positions (that could have been included in the constitution) would encourage women to step into politics, and also strengthen the passing of the Women's Reservation Bill, 2008.

Women from all walks of life, irrespective of caste, creed or religion come together as women to have their share of rights, and this paper thus helps in uniting women as one without having any differences. This would also assist in bringing further changes of eliminating any kind of caste or religious difference in India as women would be the first ones to educate their children in being united and becoming one, as they as women understand being as one under one umbrella.

Conclusion:

The prospects of women would increase manifold if there is equal representation of women in Politics. All the issues pertaining to women would be looked into from the women's perspective and would have greater chances of being solved. Women would be encouraged to take part in equal number as that of men in every aspect if there are advancements in the empowerment of women in Politics. Ambedkar's fight for equal rights to women would become a reality if there is acceptance of women into politics and if the constitution is amended passing the bills pertaining to the reservation of seats for women in politics. This would also help the cause of subsiding male dominance and women can have a voice. India would become a nation free from bias and Indian women would be given equal importance and priority as that of men across the globe.

The Relevance of B.R. Ambedkar's Ideas on Gender Equality in Present Context

B.R. Ambedkar was a great personality who dedicated himself for the cause of social justice for the downtrodden, unprivileged classes and 'untouchables' of the society. He contributed significantly for the promotion of the women in the society. He was such a personality who was able to protest against the legitimacy of the orthodox Hindu social order in order to establish the gender equalities for the women. Since ancient times, some social provisions, rules and restrictions were imposed where women were not given the right position with the rights in the society. Women were in bondage under the jurisdiction of the society. He tirelessly tried to uproot the social indiscrimination against women and did a lot for the advancement of the women. He believed that the development of the society depends on the positive equal participation of the women. He believed that the ancient laws on women were invalid and needed to be changed for the betterment of the society. This sympathetic attitude towards women drove him to make a constitutional framework in which women's rights were secured. He continuously made efforts to make awareness among the poor and illiterate women for the various evil customs and malpractices within the society. Throughout his life he struggled against the injustice, oppression, inhumanity and wanted to build up a society where the women should be respected with rights and privileges. This paper deals with the work of Ambedkar for the up gradation of the women in the society by framing many rules and acts to establish gender equality within a constitutional framework in India. It also searches the results of his efforts for the women in the present day context.

Introduction:

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar is a name which is associated with the thoughts of socio-economic development in the India. He dedicated his life for the uplift of the downtrodden and unprivileged section of the society and established the rights of Liberty, Social justice, equality for every citizen within a constitutional framework. His thought was concentrated on the development of the women in the society and made a significant contribution towards the women's Liberty, justice, equality and dignity. He broke down the barriers in the way of advancement of women in India. He is remembered for his ideological basis and realistic systemization for the political economic and social justice towards the empowerment of women in India. He was the person who dared to challenge the legitimacy of orthodox Hindu social order in which gender inequality was constituted in an organized societal setup.

Ambedkar's ideology on women:

As some other emancipators of India like Raja Ram Mohan Roy, Vidyasagar, Jyotiba Phule, B.R. Ambedkar's ideology throws light on the overall development and advancement of women. He stated that women should be given all-round empowerment more importantly education, social well being, economic equal rights. He laid stress on each and every section of women with due rights and accepted the challenge to protect the dignity and modesty of women. He understood that the bondage of the women due to the patriarchal upper caste Hinduism social laws, should be broken and reformed in order to secure better way of life of the Indian women. Aiming at this point, he created awareness among the poor and illiterate women and inspired them to fight against the bad practices in the society, social unjust and tried an adequate inclusion of women rights in Indian constitutional framework to achieve the women's economic liberation and gender equality.

Indian social system and Ambedkar:

In ancient times during Rig Vedic period in India the woman held a dignified position in the society. They were given the rights to liberty, equality, justice, and participated in every field of socio economic or cultural activities in life. This high esteem was deteriorated during later Vedic period when the Brahmanism took the charge of the society and framed rules in opposition to the women's rights which downgraded the dignified status of the women. Since then, in Hindu laws, she has been branded as below grade. The condition of women continued more or less to be the same in different phases in Indian society. Dr. Ambedkar felt this degraded position of the women and realized the need for improvement of the condition of them. He wanted to root out the basic laws of Hinduism, initiated by Manu with his Manusmriti, where women were depicted as lower graded in comparison with the men. Under this patriarchal hegemony, the woman suffered a lot in every sphere of life. Ambedkar appreciated and resolved to uplift the condition of women from this stagnant situation by reforming the Hindu social laws, where it was stated "She is under control by her father in her childhood, by husband in youth, and by son in older age."

Thoughts of Dr Ambedkar on women:

The first Prime Minister of India Jawaharlal Nehru said, ' Babasaheb Ambedkar was a symbol of revolt against all oppressive features of the Hindu society'. Ambedkar argued for extensive economic and social rights for women. His western education and deep understanding of the western philosophy helped him to develop the ideology regarding women's empowerment. In Manusmriti, the ancient Hindu code book, he saw the women as the victims of suppressive caste-based and rigid hierarchical social system. He wanted to throw out the socio cultural forces which became a barrier to establish the gender equality in the society.

In that present condition of the women, Ambedkar thought that until the status of women was improved, the progress of the nation could not be achieved. In order to do so, he planned to blow down the texts of Shastras which tied up the women with superstitions, beliefs, malpractices. He had a deep hatred on these kinds of baseless traditions and preaching of Shastras that became an obstacle towards gender equality.

Initiatives of Ambedkar on women empowerment:

Ambedkar laid down the foundation of women rights in the constitutional framework by codifying the common civil code for the Hindus. He believed that the laws of Manu have largely been responsible for moulding the attitude and perspective towards women. He attacked Manu Smriti, a major source which legitimized the denial of freedom, self-respect, right to education, property, divorce etc. to women by attributing very lofty ideal to them.

Dr Ambedkar searched the other literature like Buddhist traditions where the dignity and rights of women was held high. He believes that Buddha treated women with respect and love. He taught the women Buddha Dharma and religious philosophy where women like Vishakha, Amrapali, Gautami, Rani Mallika were treated equals. Only Hindu texts were largely responsible for the women's unfortunate fate in the society. In Manusmriti it was stated that "it is the very nature of the women to corrupt the men."

Ambedkar raised his voice against the Hindu social order and social system through his renowned journal Mook Nayak and Bahishkrit Bharat. Here, he advocated the gender equality between women and men, education for women, and women related matter. On 18th July 1927 addressing a meeting among women he stated, 'I measure the progress of community by the degree of progress which women had achieved.'

In his article 'The women and counter revolution' and 'The riddle of women', he attacked the age-old traditions which were against the women. He believed in the strength of women and their role in the process of social reforms.

Reflection of Ambedkar Thoughts:

Ambedkar legalized the women's rights and included it in the constitution. It was Ambedkar, who engraved the Preamble of Indian Constitution with the words of social, economic and political justice, freedom, equality etc.

Being the law minister and chairman of the drafting committee of the constitution of India he made attempt for adequate inclusion of women rights in political vocabulary. Many provisions were included in the constitution to protect the rights of women. Some of the articles as safeguard of women are-

- Article 14-all are equal in the eyes of law and equally protected by the law.
- Article 15 prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex.
- Article 15 (3)-it enables positive discrimination in favour of women.
- Article 16-It provides equal opportunity for all the citizens in matters relating employment or appointment to any office without any discrimination on the basis of religion, caste, creed or sex.
- Article 39 and 39D -it provides equal livelihood and equal pay for equal work.
- Article 42 -it gives the opportunity for this state to make provisions for human condition of work and maternity relief.
- Article 44 -here, the state provides uniform civil code to all the citizens throughout the Territory of India.
- Article 51 A&C-the fundamental duties to renounce practices derogatory to the dignity of women.
- Article 243 d (3), 243T(3) and 243 R (4) provides for allocation of seats in the local administration.

Among various efforts, made by Ambedkar was the Hindu code bill which is the most formidable measure of the constitution which not only put an end to a variety of marriage system but also secured the right to property for the women. It established the equality between men and women in relation to any legal matters.

Ambedkar stressed on the education for women. He thought that 'if a woman is educated, the family is educated.' He advised the women to send their children to schools because he argued 'education is as necessary for female as it is for male. If you know how to read and write there would be much progress.' He opposed to early marriage system. His ideas were reflected in 1976, when Child Marriage Restraint Act, the right of children's to free and compulsory Education Act 2009 were passed and included as fundamental rights.

Dr. Ambedkar promoted the condition of the working class women. Before it, the women were not given the equal pay. He implemented 'equal pay for equal work irrespective of the sex.'

Ambedkar also raised voice for the universal adult franchise before the Southborough Commission for all the Indian without bias in gender, caste, class etc. on which today our constitution guarantees the rights to vote for all.

Conclusion:

Dr B.R. Ambedkar was the man who contributed a lot for the empowerment of women and gender equality. He could realize the suffering of the women community. Since the introduction of the Hindu laws of Manu the woman had been out of any rights and privileges. Dr Ambedkar believed that the nation could not progress without the participation of women in every sphere of social and economic activities. This can only be achieved through granting legal rights to women under the constitutional framework. Unless and until the women are given justice, education, dignity, liberty, economic stability and equality, their condition could not be improved. The patriarchal societal structure tied them under bondage with its dominating attitude. Thus he raised his voice in favour of women rights and guarantees the legal rights to women. By doing this great job he overthrew the traditional gender indiscrimination and established the gender equality in India. He struggled throughout his life for the liberation of Indian women from the lifelong boundaries and slavery. His dream towards gender equality is realized in the present situation and his thoughts must be remembered today for social reconstruction in favour of women empowerment which is still under the patriarchal Indian societal system.

Abstract

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar and Mahatma Gandhi both of them fought against the untouchability Very differently, both of them tried their best to resolve the problems of untouchability. Mahatma Gandhi supposed that untouchability was the internal problems of Hindu Community. According to him Untouchables did not have the separate identity as like Muslims, Sikhs, and Christianity was having. Whereas, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar view was, if untouchables are the part of Hindu then untouchables must get equal rights as like Hindu peoples are enjoying. But for that orthodoxy Hindu people were not ready to accept them on an equal level. Besides that, even Mahatma Gandhi was also in fevers of varnashram system where untouchables were not granted the equal status in society. Untouchables should free from the gold chain of Hinduism. In this paper I want to study the different way of struggle of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar and Mahatma Gandhi against untouchability.

Statement of the Problem

“..... Justice is another name of liberty and also equality and fraternity”

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar

The literature available both on Gandhi and Ambedkar's contributions ' range from one extreme to another. While assessing Gandhi's style of leadership for the cause of the masses it has generally been presumed that Gandhi's approach was reformed as against Ambedkar's radical approach. The distinct label used for Gandhi's ideal and persuasive manner to convince others with truth and nonviolent means make people wonder as has been pointed out by Dennis Dalton by suggesting, "was he a 'religious genius', the embodiment of 'truth, compassion, courage and simplicity,' the 'Yudhishtira of his age?' or, was he rather 'one of history's magnificent failures?' Indeed, even one who 'far from being infallible, committed serious blunders, one after another, in ,pursuit of some utopian ideals and methods which had no basis in reality." 1 Citing the assessment of various scholars's reading on Gandhi's personality Dennis Dalton makes his own assessment of Gandhi's personality within the context of three searching questions first relates to Gandhi imbibing 'western intellectual tradition.' Second, related to the modern Indian tradition and the third perhaps more justified, valid and relevant i.e. related to Gandhian tradition or approach to the problems of contemporary India.

In Gandhi and Ambedkar we may find two distinct approaches to bring social transformation. While the Gandhian approach had an element of ethical and moral considerations, Ambedkar's approach was radical and trusted constitutional methods of providing justice to Dalits. In contemporary times both Gandhian theory of action as an ' experiment for social mobilisation in a non-violent way could be useful while Ambedkar' s radical approach also have an element of mobilising, the Dalits for social justice. Gandhian theory and action has two dimensional systems, where non-violence is considered ethical, its social and political processes could also be useful in mobilising masses. As regards untouchables or Dalits Vaikam Satyagraha of 1924- 25 in Travancore was exemplary. The Travancore state offered, Gandhi an opportunity to act publicly on behalf of untouchables and it also made Ambedkar's first public comment on Gandhian methods. Gandhi initiated campaign to remove discrimination against untouchables. Ambedkar admitted that Satyagraha at Vaikam was an important event for the untouchables. Admiring Gandhi's role, even Ambedkar wrote, "Before Mahatma Gandhi, no politician in this country maintained that it is necessary to remove social injustice here in order to do away with tension and conflict and that every Indian I should consider his sacred duty to do so

Finally, while concluding the present study it would be pertinent to mention once again that both Gandhi and Ambedkar were influenced a great deal by the depressing conditions of the poor and the Dalits and they wanted to ameliorate their depressed conditions. The emancipation of the dalits social, economic and political status was uppermost consideration for Ambedkar. He found book view understanding of caste I Varna in excluding untouchables to be the most devastating for them. It is indeed intriguing to note that while untouchables are engaged in the carrying out the most polluting work such as scavenging, carrying the night soil, removing the Caracas of the dead animals and are also exploited for each & labour they have been excluded from entering into an instructional matrix. No wonder sociologists tend to point out that there have not been any term or category used that depicts their objective conditions of social life. Needless to mention here the fact that in the local context the terms used to refer to these people carry pejorative connotation which are based on the principles of social exclusion. Just as blacks are subjected to derogatory epithets so is the case with Dalits. The impact of social exclusion on the life pattern of Dalits and their loss of cultural capital was part and parcel of phenomenological understanding for Ambedkar.

Ideological differences M.K. Gandhi and B.R. Ambedkar

Both of them wanted an Indian society based on social justice and fraternity, but differed in the manner to achieve it. According to Gandhi, if the caste based discrimination is purged from the caste system, the latter can work perfectly fine. I think this articulation lies in his advocacy of self sufficiency of Indian villages. According to him, the village should act as self sufficient units of the economy, which, he thought, was possible by the demarcation of works under the caste system. The reason for his self sufficiency of villages proposition was that the enormous population of India could not be fed through just the industries or agriculture alone. At the same time, to bring a sense of pride to the supposedly lowest rung of works, he, as an example, used to advocate cleaning of one's own latrine in homes and used to practice this himself. During an outbreak of plague in the city, he even used to clean the latrines in the homes of the so called untouchables in the affected areas. Ambedkar, on the other hand, was concerned with the complete annihilation of the caste system. According to him, untouchability would exist as long as the caste system perse. He encouraged his followers to leave their homes in villages and go to the cities. He might see it as a way to get better economic opportunities and education which, to an extent, may help in uplifting the lower castes. Gandhi being an ardent follower of satyagraha, called for the same to plead to the conscience and reason of the upper caste Hindus. He thought that the responsibility of removing untouchability should lie on the upper caste Hindus. In the pursuance of this policy, he organized numerous campaigns and fasts some of which led to many, many temples being thrown open to the supposedly lower castes. This also won him the enmity from various sections of the orthodox Hindus.

Ambedkar claimed that satyagraha was a useless tool in this respect. His argument was that pricking the conscience of the caste Hindus was impossible since they were under the ideological spell of religious sanctions to caste plus also getting material benefits from the caste order. So he sought solutions through the aid of the state. This somewhat made him a political opponent of the congress as well as Gandhi. This was seen in 1932 when the Viceroy proclaimed the communal award which provided for separate electorates for the lower castes in addition to the Muslims and Christians, Gandhi undertook a fast to abolish the separate electoral for that would have meant the acquiescence of lower castes as a different community than the caste Hindus and would have rendered their social re-integration impossible. Ambedkar, at that time was a proponent of separate electorate which suggests that he did see the upper and lower caste Hindus as distinct communities with a divergent set of interests. Gandhi also looked at the problem from the broader perspective of national unity against a foreign government and believed that the congress represent the whole population, including the lower castes while Ambedkar advocated for organizing the lower castes in separate blocs as different party so as to more effectively articulate their interests in the electoral politics. On the whole, Gandhi believed that abolition of untouchability was imperative to save Hinduism while Ambedkar saw a solution outside the boundaries of the dominant Hindu religion in the country, which is probably why he converted to Buddhism.

Ambedkar Dalit literature

Dr Ambedkar (1891-1956) is widely considered to be the father of the Constitution of India in recognition of his role as the Chair of the Drafting Committee of the Constitution of India. Ambedkar attempted to establish equality by law. However, mere equality before the Law, as Ambedkar, himself says, cannot achieve social equality and it has not been achieved yet. But the law has, to some extent, given some social security to Dalits. Many Dalits consider Ambedkar's interventions to be more important than Gandhi's endeavors for social reform. From 1920 to 1956, Ambedkar played an active role as a social and political reformer. He believed that there would be no end to the agony and humiliation of the Dalit community, if the caste system continued to exist. The exclusion of Dalits is based on birth into a particular caste; it is not by choice and it cannot be escaped until death. Ambedkar was against the caste system. He wanted to bury it, with its ugly by product of untouchability. He looked at the problem of untouchability as an aspect of caste. He argued that it was not the injustice committed by one individual against another, but is produced by the logic of caste. Three major events in the year 1920 are landmarks responsible for Dalit literary activities in Maharashtra— (1) Dr. Ambedkar became the president of a public federation of untouchables in Mangaon (Maharashtra) (2) Mook Nayak, a daily, was started by him and (3) he organized Akhil Bhartiya Bahishkrit Samaj Parishad in which people from all over India were invited to participate. These three events provided the platform to Dalit ideologues to propagate their views. The Mahad Satyagraha (1926), the first untouchable liberation movement, to drink water from the town tank, was the result of Ambedkar's organizational activities that he started in 1920s. The Mahad Satyagraha did not end in getting water, but it reflected Dalit anger towards

The Hindu scriptures and Brahminism with the public burning of the Manusmriti. By the 1930s, Ambedkar emerged as the most articulate Dalit leaders. He presented the points of view of the Depressed Classes before the Simon Commission in 1928. He was also invited to the Round Table Conference in 1930. His clash with Gandhi regarding the separate electorates to untouchables created a debate on the caste system. The events of Gandhi's fast and the Poona Pact (1932) disillusioned Ambedkar and the untouchables about the limitations of the Hindu reformism. These events opened up the radical period for Ambedkar. Without relying on Gandhi's reform measures, he began to offer the radical ways to get rid of the caste system. In 1935 at the Yeola Conference, he announced: "I solemnly assure you that I will not die a Hindu" (Keer 253). He asked his people to stop the Kalaram temple satyagraha, considering the futility of such agitations. He emphasized to create a separate community outside the Hindu fold. In 1946, Dr Ambedkar established 'The People's Education Society' and started Siddhartha College (Bombay). He emphasized the importance of education for the Dalits and because of his political and social efforts; some Dalits got a chance to access education. The educated Dalit youth established "Siddharth Sahitya Sangh" in 1950 which later on transforming itself into Maharashtra Dalit Sahitya Sangh. The above events played a major role in the cultivation of the Dalit consciousness throughout India. Magazines like Mook Nayak, Bahiskrit Bharat, Janata and Prabuddh Bharat played a significant role in encouraging Marathi Dalit Literature. In 1958- 1959 two Dalit literary meets were organized in Mumbai and the third was held in Poona in 1961

Conclusion B.R.Ambedkar mainly fought against the latter, political independence was only of secondary importance for him, social and economic freedom for the depressed classes was his first priority. Even though both Gandhi and B.R.Ambedkar identified the evil of untouchability as the foremost bane of the social order they differed in their methods and approaches for its removal. B.R.Ambedkar wanted this to be done through laws and constitutional methods. Gandhi treated it as a moral stigma to be erased out by acts of atonement. B.R.Ambedkar held that reliance on a change of heart alone is not sufficient, it moral atonement is to be re-enforced by leg-constitutional measures. Gandhi counted leg constitutional method only of very limited utility, he was for moral, and conscience related remedy for the evil. Both were reformers fired by the dire immediate need for restructuring the malaise order. B.R.Ambedkar this was of prime importance, but to be achieved by segregating themselves from the Hindu fold. Gandhi did not subscribe to the notion of dividing into majority-minority communities.

Abstract

Dr. Bhimrao Ambedkar popularly known as Baba Saheb, was the chief architect of the Indian Constitution. He is a veritable emancipator of women. He was a valiant fighter for the cause of the weaker section. He was the beacon of light for the millions of depressed, oppressed and exploited women of India. Ensuring freedom and human dignity to women in the Hindu Society is one of his greatest missions. His ever living document, the Indian Constitution brings the equality by the rule of law in this nation. This paper is a critical reflection into the thoughts of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar on the ideological basis of political, economic and social justice towards the empowerment of the women in Indian Society.

Keywords: Women empowerment, Women problems, Hindu social order, Manu Smriti, Social justice and Indian Constitution.

Introduction:

Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar is popularly known as Babasaheb Ambedkar was an Indian jurist, economist, politician and social reformer. He inspired the Dalit Buddhist movement and campaigned against social discrimination towards the untouchables. He was independent India's first Minister of Law and Justice and considered as the chief architect of the Constitution of India. He was a multifaceted personality and an intellectual revolutionary. He was a ray of hope for the downtrodden and underprivileged section of Indian society and worked tirelessly to challenge the legitimacy of orthodox Hindu social order that upheld iniquitous gender relations in an institutionalized manner (Barnwal, 2014). He acquired deep knowledge in every field of human activity and became the founder of an independent ideology. He prioritizes a society with no castes, no inequality and no superiority, but treats everyone equal (Sampath, 2015).

Women in the country are denied equal rights, discriminated and exposed to all forms of violence (Mohammed, 2013). Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar fought for economic liberation and social rights of women. He stressed the need to safeguard the dignity and to respect the modesty of women (Mohammed, 2013). He learnt the Hindu Shastras and Smritis to explore the root cause of discriminated status of women in India (Godbole, 2015). He established movements in 1920 to voice against the Hindu social order and social system through popular journal Mook Nayak in 1920 and Bahishkrit Bharat in 1927. The core contents of these journals are gender equality, women education and created awareness on the problems faced by women and other depressed class. He advocated family planning measures for women and equal opportunity and equal share with male in Indian society in Bombay Legislative Assembly (Satyajit, 2015)

Objectives:

The objective of this paper is to analyze the gender relation that was constructed under Hindu social order and problems of women in pre and post independent India and the relevance of Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar's modern democratic ideas in present and social scenario of India.

Methodology:

This is a conceptual paper that is extracted through the secondary sources of data surveyed and drawn from already available existing pieces of literature. In this paper the contributions to women empowerment by Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar is primarily emphasized.

Discussion and Findings:

The primary aim of social reformers such as Mahatma Jyotiba Phule, Rajaram Mohan Roy, Ishwar Chandra Vidyasagar and Mahatma Gandhi was to reform the Hindu Society from certain outdated customs and practices without questioning the hierarchical social order. But approaches to women empowerment by Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar was very different and he believed that society should be based on reason and not on atrocious tradition of caste system and he attempted to reconstruct Hindu society through the modern democratic ideas of liberty, equality and fraternity (Bijay, 2014). His mission was to challenge the ideological foundations of graded system of caste hierarchy that denied equality, freedom and human dignity to women in Hindu society.

The perceptions of Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar on the problems of women emphasized the women's right to education, right to property, involvement in the political process, gender equality as resemblance to the demands of global feminist ideals (Sanjeev, 2015). He believed in the collective strength of women and their role in social reform and progress of the society which can be achieved by providing the opportunity to male pursue education alongside women. With the aim of strengthening the movement and to voice his thoughts for liberation of women and promoting need for women's education, he started his own journal Mook Nayak in 1920 and Bahishkrit Bharat in 1927. The primary goal of these journals are to upgrade the social status and to motivate women to participate in social reform movements against social evils and demanded their socio-economic rights as the position of women in society was not in par with men (Mohammed, 2013). Women actively participated and started acquiring confidence to voice their issue on various platforms by engaging in satyagrahas and setting up women's association for untouchable women to spread education and awareness (Vijay, 2011).

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar was nominated as member of Bombay Legislative Council in 1927 and urged the need to recognize the dignity of women and supported the maternity benefit bill for women labourers. His greatest conviction and argument was that every mother need rest during pre-natal period and the government needs to be concerned to provide certain amount of charge with regard to maternity benefit (Kavita, 2013).

Dr.Babasaheb established Mahad Satyagrahas in 1927. In this historic march where thousands of people participated to assert their rights to take water from Chawdar tank at Mahad. The sole purpose of this movement was to liberate society from the worn out traditions and evil customs imposed ruthlessly and upheld religiously by a vast society towards the weaker and helpless constituent and to restore human rights and dignity for them (Bharati, 1992)

In the presence of more than fifty women in the conference of depressed classes held at Mahad on 25th December 1927, Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar made a bonfire of Manusmriti. By the end of the conference, he addressed more than three thousand women in a meeting which was first of its kind in modern India and urged them to dress well, live a clean life, not to feed spouse and sons if they are drunk and send the children to schools. He also informed them about the importance of education for females as it is for males.

In January 1928, the women's association was established. Ramabai, the wife of Dr.Babasaheb was its president. Along with the depressed classes conference in Nagpur in 1930, the women had their separate conference (Vijay, 2011). Kalaram temple entry satyagrahas at Nasik in 1930, five hundred women participated and most of them got arrested along with men and ill treated in jails.

As an impact of Dr.Babasaheb to empower women, Radhabai Vadale addressed a press conference and spoke boldly in 1931 as 'it is been to die a hundred times than live a life full of humiliation'. She said by sacrificing the lives to win rights. The credit for this self respect and firm determinations of women goes to Dr.Babasaheb (Singariya, 2014)

Dr.Babasaheb encouraged women as 'I measure the progress of community by the degree of progress which women had achieved. He said let every girl who marries stand by her husband, claim to be her husband's friend and equal and refuse to be his slave. He was sure upon following his advice the women will bring honor and glory to them. Credit for inculcating self respect and firm determination in women goes to Dr.Babasaheb (Vaishali, 2012). He strongly advocated family planning measures for women in Bombay Legislative Assembly. He introduced the maternity benefit bill and several other provisions in the constitution for projecting the welfare and civil rights of women in 1942 when he was a Labor Minister of Executive Council of Governor General.

All Indian Dalit Mahila Conference was held on 20th July 1942 with more than 25,000 women participants under the inspiration of Dr.Babasaheb. Many women wrote on various topics such as planning Buddhist philosophy, plays, and autobiographies and engaged in satyagrahas. A newspaper was started by Tulsabai Bansode that generated awareness among poor, illiterate women and inspired them to fight against unjust social practices such as child marriages and devadasi system (Vaishali, 2011). He also worked with professionals in brothel homes and many left their profession and joined him to lead a dignified life of honor (Sanjeev, 2015).

Whenever Dr.Babasaheb addressed conferences to women, he communicated important lessons to them in a very homely manner such as 'never wear clothes which will degrade personality and character, avoid wearing jewellery on the body everywhere, not to make hole on nose to wear 'nath'. By advocating such ideas he condemned all the bad traditions, habits and ways of life that added difficult and complex to women's life. All women irrespective of their literacy followed his teachings.

Emphasis of Dr.Babasaheb was on the reconstruction of the Hindu society on the basis of equality rather than the social reforms initiated such as Arya Samaj as their efforts were only targeting the upper strata of the society. His study of Smritis and Shastras and his experience from the response of upper castes during the temple entry movement justified on the abolition of the Hindu philosophy and society.

In manu Smriti, manu not only shows contempt for women but goes on to degrade them as slaves devoid of intellect: denies them the right of education and right to property: and forbids them from performing sacrifices. (Jitendra, 2012) protecting the welfare and civil rights of women and introduced Hindi code Bill in the parliament and highlighted the issues about women's property right. In Muslim women Purdah, the veil system, religious conversions and legal rights for Muslim women were also emphasized. In short, along with the depressed class women, his thoughts for emancipation of all the women are expressed in the constitution of India, being India's first law minister and chairman of drafting committee of the constituent assembly, Dr. Babasaheb thought it appropriates rather his duty to free women from the age old thralldom by reforming the social laws created by manu. He therefore took initiative to draft and introduce the Hindu code bill in the constituent Assembly (Sanjeev, 2015). He tried an adequate inclusion of women's right in the political arena. Dr. Babasaheb provided several provisions in the constitutions (Mahendra, 2015). He gave equal status to women on par with men by providing many provisions in the Indian constitution. He considered uprooting sexual discrimination from the society and every one should get equal opportunity in the society.

The Preamble of Indian constitution guarantees social and economic justice to women and that is because of Ambedkar contribution. In the preamble it is mentioned:

- i) Social, economic and political justice
- ii) Freedom of thought, expression, belief, faith and worship,
- iii) Equality of status and opportunity and
- iv) Fraternity assuring dignity of the individual and national unity to all the citizens of India without any discrimination of caste, creed or sex.

In Indian Constitution, there are few articles exist that help the women of Indian society to improve their position and to compete with their male counterparts. They are specified below.

- Article 14 – All are equal in the eyes of law and equally protected by the law. It means equal rights and opportunities in political, economic and social spheres.
- Article 15 prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex.
- Article 15(3) enables positive discrimination in favour of women.
- Article 16 mentions there shall be equality of opportunity for all citizens in matters relating to employment or appointment to any office without any discrimination on the basis of religion, caste, creed and sex.
- Article 24 prohibits the employment of children below the age of 14 years in factories, mines or in any other hazardous employment.
- Article 39 and 39(d) state Equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work.
As per article 41 the state shall guarantee within its economic limits to all the citizens, the right to work, to education and public assistance in certain cases.
- Article 42 the state makes provision for Human conditions of work and maternity relief.
Under article 44, the state provides a uniform Civil Code to all the citizens throughout the territory of India.
- Article 46 – The state to promote with special care, the educational and economic interests of weaker section of people and to protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation.
- Article 47 – The state to raise the level of nutrition and standard of living of its people and the improvement of public health and so on.
- Article 51 (A) (C) – Fundamental duties to renounce practices, derogatory to the dignity of women.
- Article 243D (3), 243T (3) & 243R (4) provides for allocation of seats in the Panchayati Raj System.

Ambedkar not only ascertain constitutional guarantees to women but also introduced and got passed four Acts which strengthened the position of women in the society. These were incorporated in the Hindu Code Bill. These are:

- i) The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955.
- ii) The Hindu Succession Act, 1956.
- iii) The Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956.
- iv) The Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956.

Looking at the provisions of these Acts, one can easily make out that Ambedkar was a great thinker of women rights and emancipation. Provisions that have been enshrined in the Acts are as follows:

The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 was amended in 1976 made the following provisions for women:

1. The legitimization of illegitimate children (Sec.16).
2. Punishment-bigamy (Sec.26).
3. Custody of children (Sec. 26).
4. Marriageable age of females raised to 18 years.
5. Provision for alimony (Sec. 25). The Act abolishes the difference between a maiden and a widow.

The Hindu Succession Act, 1956 contains the following provisions for women:

1. A widow has a right to adopt a son or a daughter which was not there in the Hindu Law.
2. It also provided an opportunity to be independent and dispose of her property by will as she wishes and desires (Sec. 14).
3. A uniform scheme of succession to the property of a Hindu female, who dies, intestate after commencement of the Act, was made in Section 15. Previously under the uncodified law the succession to stridhan varied according to the marital status of a woman.

The Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956 specifies the following provisions under the purview of this Act:

1. The mother is empowered to change the guardian, appointed by the father and may appoint a new guardian by will.
2. The father's right to appoint a guardian for the minor by will during the life time of the minor's mother is prohibited under this Act.

The Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956 has the following provisions:

1. This Act accepts adoption of a male and a female child without any difference, whereas under the uncodified law a daughter could not be adopted.
2. This Act permits a wife to adopt a child on her own right even during her husband's life time. She had no such right prior to this enactment.
3. In the uncodified law a spinster or a widow had no right to adopt whereas this Act grants them the right to adopt.
4. Under the old Hindu Law a wife need not be consulted while adopting a child or while giving a child for adoption, whereas this Act made it essential to consult her in both the cases.
5. Section 11 lays down that, a father should adopt a daughter at least 21 years younger to him.

Conclusion:

This paper reveals that Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar is an exemplarist leader for all women irrespective of their diversities. He is a great personality who brought tremendous empowerment of women in Indian society. He advocated against the unhealthy practices in women enforced by both Hindu and Muslim religion. He fought against all kinds of discrimination against women throughout his life. In the current scenario, Indian women have progressed in various aspects of life but still social evil against women continue in every corner of India. This discrimination against women in Indian society is overlooked and it is the duty of every Indian to fulfill the dream of Dr Ambedkar for a better life of women.

Introduction:

Caste & varna system is the unique feature in Hindu religion of Indian Society. Manu Rishi divided varna in four parts - Brahmins, Kshatriya, Vaishya and Sudra. Today Dalit are belonging to Sudra Varna. The gradual rise and growth of this Dalit consciousness & movements was the significant feature during British India. In the Southern & Western part of India a strong movement for demanding of improvement in economical, social, as well as political status with the guidance of great leaders, like Dr. Ambedkar & M. C. Rajah. These have been conspicuous with the aid of using their absence in big a part of northern India. Several elements have been chargeable for the gradual improvement of Dalit attention and shortage of movement in western Uttar Pradesh. Certain traits of the caste in feudal regions, collectively with its inflexible and unchanging individual created a positive weather for emergence of a movement from Dalit's moreover; the leaders of Mahatma Gandhi, Congress at some point of the country wide movement on this area did now no longer inspire the upward push of untouchable movement.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar pleads for the Dalit within side the 2d round table convention held in 1931 in London and demanded for scheduled caste. Separate illustration, identical Socio-economic and political possibilities for the scheduled castes groups in preferred, however Mahatma Gandhi's response to Dr. Ambedkar demands. Gandhiji changed into a best political chief of India stood up towards separate illustration being accorded to them for that could lessen the range of Hindus. But the British Govt. took Mahatma Gandhi's phrases gently and in the end declared separate for scheduled castes. The top minister of England on 18 August, 1932 that he might speedy unto demise from twentieth September, 1932 if Government did now no longer revoke separate voters for the Dalit's But because the reaction changed into now no longer satisfactory. Visitor's, leaders and pals commenced to name upon Dr. Ambedkar. He got here to speak at the matter. Earnest and strenuous negotiations had been begun out. At the remaining in a cordial ecosystem the settlement changed into signed on 24 September, 1932 and its well-known in records because the "Poona Pact" on behalf of the caste Hindu, Malviya signed it. According to this pact, seats had been reserved for scheduled caste and scheduled tribes in preferred elections in each imperative and provincial legislatures. This settlement changed into unanimously typical on the assembly of the each leaders of Hindus and Dalit's on September 24, at Poona and Mahatma Gandhi and different Hindu chief changed into asked to British Government to withdraw of making separate electorates for the Scheduled caste and Scheduled tribes. Objective of the Study: The gift observe essentially is an exploratory observe that's primarily based totally at the number one in addition to secondary statistics of records for systematization, evaluation and conclusion. In the concerning Socio-monetary and Political improvement, Human rights recognition and their opinion concerning Dr. B. R. Ambedkar motion for his or her improvement and growing of Human rights. The charter of India, census of India, applicable newspaper, Journals, Books, magazines etc. have been made use as secondary statistics. The main objective of the study is:

- Impact of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar movement on the development of present Dalit.
- To find out present Socio-economic and political status of Dalit's.
- To know awareness of Human Rights of Dalit's in present time. Dr. Ambedkar struggle for Dalit's Rights.

Dr. Ambedkar followed diverse approach to defend and guard to Dalit Human rights in India. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar begins off evolved the motion in opposition to Dalit discrimination via way of means of growing public opinion thru his writings in numerous periodicals which includes Mook Nayak, Bahishkrit Bharat, and Equality for peoples, which he began out for the safety of Dalit rights. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar prepared the Dalit rally to claim their prison rights to take water from the chowder tank. The chowder tank of Mahad turned into made a public tank in 1869. In 1923 the Bombay legislative council handed a decision to the impact that the Dalit's be allowed to apply all public watering places. The Mahad municipality handed a decision on five January 1927 to impact that the municipality had no objection to permitting the Dalit's to apply the tank. Baba sahib Bhim Rao Ambedkar fought for the proper of people and peasants. In the past due 1920 and particularly within side the Thirties while he had shaped his impartial labour birthday celebration, he took up the motive of tenants (from each the Dalit Mahars and the caste Hindu Kunbis) within side the Konkan area of Maharashtra. With the help of radicals then within side the congress Socialist Party, the Independent Labour Day celebration organized a massive march of 20,000 peasants to Mumbai in 1938, the most important pre independence peasant mobilization within side the area.

In the identical year, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar joined with the communists to organize a strike Mumbai fabric people in protest in opposition to an invoice approximately to be introducing via way of means of the British authorities to curve labour strikes. Dr. Ambedkar took the lead in condemning the invoice within side the meeting and argued that the proper to strike turned into really any other call for the proper to freedom of meeting. Baba Saheb Ambedkar Movement for Dalit's Protection in British Period: Baba saheb call for safeguards and safety of Dalit's has an extended records relationship the Montague-Chelmsford reforms within side the through out of 1919 of the British period. Dr. Ambedkar was intently worried within side the war to present Scheduled caste and scheduled tribe human beings statutory guard. He turned into a delegate on the Round table Scheduled caste & scheduled tribes had been assured within side the 1949 charter of India within side the shape of reservation in diverse fields which includes legislative, employment and education etc.

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar turned into a first-rate champion of the Dalit due to the fact he succeeded in turning the depressed elegance motion right into a progressive motion for the duration of India. But nowadays has witnessed the oppressed instructions taking walks at the streets of towns and villages with self assurance and poise of direction many despicable acts of discrimination and violence in opposition to the Dalit's nonetheless occurring. States Measures for Dalit Development via way of means of Baba Sahab Ambedkar: Dr. B. R. Ambedkar turned into the primary regulation minister of independence India. He turned into appointed chairman of the drafting committee of our countrywide charter. The textual content organized via way of means of Ambedkar supplied constitutional safety for an extensive range of civil liberties for every human being, residents which include freedom of religion, the abolition of untouchability and outlawing all styles of discrimination. He had a actual visionary in the direction of the simple and essential rights of Indian residents and upliftment of scheduled caste, scheduled tribes and backward caste. He made numerous provisions within side the shape of articles in Indian charter for improvement and upliftment of depressed caste peoples.

Article 15 of the Indian charter offers essential proper to all residents in opposition to any shape of discrimination either through country or through any citizen on the premise of sex, caste, religion, age, race, language, nomenclature and vicinity of birth. Article 15(4) of the charter of India announces the “Nothing can save you the kingdom from making any unique provision for the development of any socially and educationally, politically backward castes of residents or for scheduled caste and scheduled tribes. Article 16(4.B) states that “Nothing within side the article shall save you the kingdom from thinking about any unfilled vacancies of 12 months that are reserved for being stuffed in that 12 months according with any provision for reservation made below clause (4) or clause as a separate magnificence of vacancies shall now no longer be taken into consideration collectively with the vacancies of the 12 months wherein they're being stuffed up for figuring out the ceiling of 49% reservation on general quantity of vacancies of the 12 months.” Article 17 of the charter announces that “untouchability is abolished and its exercise in any shape is forbidden. Article 332 in the charter of India states approximately the reserved seats of scheduled caste and scheduled tribes in legislative assemblies of the states. 73rd constitutional modification in article 243 announces that “Panchayati raj machine ought to have proportionate illustration of scheduled caste and scheduled tribes.

His main was to uproot the evil of deep rooted caste system, uplift the status of down trodden society, create honour amongst so called higher castes and to transform of the country from uncivilized state to civilized state. By fighting against English rulers and including articles in the constitution he tried his best to enable Dalit's and women were very grim. But today we find over all development of disadvantaged groups in country. Untouchability has reduced their socio-economic and political conditions have improved. In present Dalit's have become a powerful political force in India and enjoy greater access to education and economy than ever before time.

They are exercising their voting rights. Their political consciousness and awareness about various political activates and participation in these activities has increased very much. Due to these facts now a day the government is also making various decisions relating to their rights and privileges. Efforts are still going on to remove different discriminatory practices against Dalit's. Now votes of Dalit's have become of the major deciding factors for winning of a candidate in elections. The honours for Dalit's in forward society have also increased.

Today we do not ask the person seating besides us which caste he belongs to? Today atleast in rural and towns both Dalit's and non Dalit's enjoy the same tea stall, hotel, schools, petrol pumps and cinema hall but usually nobody bothers about knowing the caste identity of a person. This is all due to the untried and intelligent efforts of Baba Saheb Dr. Ambedkar. But in present time does not mean that the untouchability has totally abolished still it is maintained in offices, colleges, ceremonies etc. Today tragedy is that the rulers of our nation do not want the effective implementation of constitution. Dr. Ambedkar introduced caste annihilation system in India. Indian Hindu orthodoxy stood by Manu Rishi. Dr. Ambedkar stood for Dalit's and women development in India. Condition of Dalit's after Dr. Ambedkar: The condition of Dalit's movement after Baba Sahab had witnessed many ups and downs. On one side a categorical awakening among the dalits had grown beyond all levels of history and on the other it has somewhere stagnant after Dr. Ambedkar mainly due to ideological deposition of stagnation. It would be opportune to look at the post Baba Sahab Ambedkar the Dalit movement and do a stock taking of the changes within the Dalit's politics to under the phenomenon.

Gatede says ups and downs through which the Dalit politics passed through after the death of Baba Saheb can be broadly divided into three phase-rise and fall of the republication party, emergence of the Dalit's panthers and thirdly the assertion of Dalit's for political power and their consequent refusal to remain satisfied merely with education and job opportunities arising out of the policy of reservation. There is no need to underline the immense potentialities in the phenomenon of Dalit assertion in today's caste ridden polity.

There is no denying the fact that it is a step ahead in the real democratization of Indian society and the polity dominated by Brahminical values and traditions despite near six decade experiment in electoral democracy. The impressive intervention of BSP founder Manayawar K Anshiram and BSP president Miss Mayawati in the national politics underlines this third stage. It is noteworthy that while in the earlier two stages in the post Dr. Ambedkar movement the unfolding Dalit politics in Uttar Pradesh and Maharashtra guided its orientation its role has been increasingly marginalized in the third stage.

Conclusion:

After Dr. Ambedkar Dalit movement is the emergence of a new sect of Dalit elite. These Dalit elite whom Baba Sahab had opposed tooth and nail in his life time had become the Dalit leader, Bureaucrat's officers' businessman Dalit who not only take the benefits of reservations but also conveniently forget the community once they get there. It is also observed that while this sect functions throughout with the brand "Dalit" also engage in all the corrupt practices that was once the cornerstone Brahministic culture and ethics. It is interesting that Dr. Ambedkar fought for the rights of Dalit's and had a border vision, which could not be inoculated by post Ambedkar. He wanted to give his people an identity so that they get out of Varna system, but here what we see is the stimulation of the culture of Varna and caste within the Dalit communities. Conclusion: Actually Baba Saheb Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was a great human rights leader.

who I believe must be considered the greatest Indian of the millennium, was a fighter for human rights not only for the most oppressed section of Dalit's but all the Indian caste opposed groups for workers and farmers and for women. Dr. Ambedkar is India's foremost human rights activist in 20th century. He is an emancipator, scholar, extraordinary social reformer a true champion of human rights. Dr. Ambedkar provides equal rights for all citizens in Indian constitution. But the caste dissemination and untouchability somehow and others are still playing negative roles from different parts of the society.

Ambedkarism and the Empowerment of the Dalits In India – A case of Recent Issues

Abstract

This article on the empowerment of the Dalits through Ambedkar is secondary source of information which throws light on the thoughts of Ambedkar which is remembered, principally through the chief draftsman of the Indian Constitution. The article will emphasise over how Ambedkar valiantly fought for the cause of the Dalits. His strategies to achieve the goal of empowering Dalits shifted with changing contexts but the goal always remained the same: attaining equality with caste Hindus in all spheres of life. It was in pursuit of this goal that in the early 1930s he advocated a separate electorate for the Dalits. This demand was accepted by British Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald in his Communal Award of 1932, which granted Dalits 18% of the total seats in the Central legislature and 71 seats in the Provincial legislatures to be elected exclusively by Dalits. However, Ambedkar's success was short-lived because of Mahatma Gandhi's fast unto death against a separate electorate for Dalits, which he saw as a British ploy to divide Hindu society. Ambedkar gave up his demand in return for an increased number of seats reserved for Dalits but elected by the general Hindu population.

However, Ambedkar regretted his decision because he soon realised that given the disparity in the number of eligible voters between caste Hindus and Dalits as well as the huge disparity in their socio-economic status, very few of the elected Dalits would be able to genuinely represent Dalit interests. Both Gandhi and Ambedkar abhorred untouchability, but the terms they used to describe the "untouchables" demonstrated the wide gulf in their approaches to the issue. Gandhi called them "Harijan" in order to persuade caste Hindus to stop discriminating against them. For Ambedkar, this was a patronising term and he used the nomenclature Dalit both to describe the reality of oppression and to galvanise his people to challenge and change the status quo.

Keywords: Dr. Ambedkar, Dalit empowerment, Indian Constitution, attaining equality, socio-economic status, elected Dalits, untouchables Harijan, oppression challenges and changes.

Introduction:

After Independence Ambedkar made his peace with the Congress leadership believing that he could enhance Dalits' rights from within the power structure. He became Law Minister and Chairman of the Constitution Drafting Committee. He resigned from the Cabinet in 1951 when his draft of the Hindu Code Bill was stalled in Parliament because conservative Hindu members opposed it. Although he died a frustrated man, Ambedkar's devotion to the cause of Dalit empowerment has continued to galvanise Dalits until today. This Dalit awakening is represented in student activism on university campuses as well as through the emergence of Dalit-based parties. However, there are three major problems that continue to bedevil Dalit activism. First, intra-Dalit differences based on sub-castes allows forces opposed to Dalit empowerment to divide Dalits and deny them the clout that they can wield in the Indian polity. Second, interpersonal rivalry among Dalit politicians leads to the same result. Third, the inability of the Dalit leadership to stick with their non-Dalit allies, especially in times of political adversity, makes them appear as unreliable political partners. The most important lesson to learn from Ambedkar's repeated exhortations is that unless they remain united, the Dalits will be denied their due share of political power.

Current Issues:

A few months ago, a chilling report appeared in media stating that in the year 2017, 210 cases of atrocities against Dalits occurred in the urban districts of Bengaluru and 106 in its rural districts. Likewise, Kerala reported 883 cases of such crimes between June 2016 and April 2017. Other reports said that there has been a 66% growth in crimes against Dalits in the 10-year period of 2007-2017. The horror of these statistics is made vibrant when one examines concrete events. On April 12 this 2019, 200 people attacked a small group of Dalits for swimming in the Bhadra river in Karnataka. As they thrashed these people, the perpetrators screamed that the river belongs exclusively to the upper castes. Evidently, Article 15 of our Constitution is not worth the paper it is printed on. What kind of thinking underlies these brutal attacks of social violence in which innocent folk are targeted merely because they belong to a particular caste? Since most atrocities revolve around the basic issues of land, wages and entitlements, poverty and powerlessness are viewed as the cause of such violence.

But such explanations do not go deep enough because they leave out the prime mover behind such atrocities — Brahmanism. This precisely was B.R. Ambedkar's contention, who argued that without a robust movement against Brahmanism, Dalit emancipation is impossible. But then, we must ask what exactly is being opposed? What are the core features of Brahmanism?

Not against the Caste Brahmin

For a start, opposing 'Brahmanism' does not entail being 'anti-Brahmin'. To do so would imply that all Brahmins are responsible for these atrocities. In a society which is driven by caste, a person may belong to the caste of Brahmins but not adhere to the core ethic of Brahmanism. He may even have morally disassociated himself from it. The resolution to burn the Manuscript and thereby oppose Brahmanism was taken by Ambedkar jointly with G.S. Sahasrabudhe, a chitpavan Brahmin. Indeed, Ambedkar went even further. In a speech at the G.I.P. Railways Depressed Caste Workers' Conference in 1938, he claimed that "when I say that Brahmanism is an enemy that must be dealt with, I do not mean the power, privilege or interests of Brahmins as a community". On the face of it, this seems odd. For, what else could Brahmanism be except a defence of the power, privilege and interests of Brahmins as a community? In fact, this statement is not that perplexing.

Take an instance from our own history. The Rig Vedic society of 1500 BCE had a community of ritual specialists that transmitted its ritual related know-how from one generation to another. Others, the political rulers or ordinary householders, did not possess it. This group of Brahmins was granted some privilege on account of the knowledge it possessed. For satisfying the 'religious' needs of members of other communities, the group was even accorded respect not owed to others. This produced an inequality but the resulting hierarchy was fluid, contingent and reversible. This contingently generated superiority of Brahmins was not systemic or integral to the structure of society, and therefore not necessarily demeaning to others. This sacrifice-centred Vedic Brahmanism is not to be conflated with the Brahmanism Ambedkar despised and wished to destroy. One should refuse to conflate the privilege of such ritual-performing Brahmins with Brahmanism.

An extremely traditionalist ideology

Brahmanism is a sociopolitical ideology that encodes a memory of an ideal past and a vision of society in the future, one in which Brahmins occupy the highest place not only as exclusive guardians of a higher, spiritual realm but also as sole providers of wisdom on virtually every practical issue of this world. They possess superior knowledge of what a well-ordered society is and how a good state must be run. More importantly, their superior position in society and their superior knowledge stems from birth. This makes them naturally, intrinsically superior to all other humans, so superior that they form a separate species (jati) altogether. Nothing can challenge or alter this fact. No one becomes a Brahmin, but is born so.

A person's acts may determine the position he occupies in the next life, but not in this one. Of course, this is true not only of Brahmins but of every other jati. The position of each jati is unalterably fixed at birth. The ati-shudra, the 'untouchable', is born into and therefore must occupy the lowest, most inferior rank; no action of his can alter this fact. This sociopolitical ideology makes hierarchy necessary, rigid and irreversible. The hierarchical social order, it follows, corresponds to the natural order of things. No one can exchange his position with that of another, or move up or down. Any attempt to do so is morally wrong. Dalits, according to this view, must remain in 'their place' and if they try to move up, they must be put down.

Brahmanism then is the most perfect form of conservatism, a status quoist ideology par excellence, entirely suitable to elites who wish to perpetuate their social status, power and privilege. So, there can be Brahmanical Buddhists or Jains. And those who convert to, say, Islam or Christianity may still continue to embrace this sociopolitical ideology. Many Muslims and Christians, for all practical purposes, are Brahmins or Thakurs who continue to inferiorise Muslim or Christian Dalits. Brahmanism naturalises existing power, privilege and higher status. The kings love it, the wealthy merchants and landlords are happy with it. Indeed, because it gives them power over ati-shudras, even the high-placed shudras in this system of graded inequality are willing to acquiesce to it. In short, everyone at the top finds it appealing because everyone below is required to carry out the task as dictated by his current social position and to not ask for more.

Because this ideology is fundamentally against any kind of social mobility, it restricts individual freedom; because it is totally enamoured of hierarchy, it is ineluctably inegalitarian; and because it separates one group of human beings from another, it is deeply incompatible with any idea of fraternity. No wonder Ambedkar defined Brahmanism as the negation of the spirit of liberty, equality and fraternity. This makes Brahmanism and the Indian Constitution fundamentally opposed to one another. Anyone who sincerely adheres to the core principles of the Indian Constitution is automatically anti-Brahmanical. And one committed to Brahmanism disabled from embracing the values enshrined in the Indian Constitution. The Dalit movement in India is yet to be fully formed with a sizeable consensus. It lives in various forms, sizes and shapes. It has not yet formulated a cogent programme to take in politically conservative Dalits by bringing them into the wider Indian democratic experience. Dalit scholars and politicians alike can be seen struggling to formulate a workable theory of Ambedkarism or Dalitism that would be a manifesto for common liberation. By exclusively relying on constitutionalism as a means of emancipation, this class of intellectuals argues for a utopian dream. The methods of attaining Dalit emancipation, however, remain unknown. The sooner India's oppressed realize this, the better. One cannot depend on the limited conceptions of constitutionalism for deliverance. Owing to the limited control of this institution, the Constitution has become synonymous to a grievance cell offering no immediate solutions.

Limited Accessibility

The linguistic accessibility of the Constitution and its reach to the oppressed is extremely limited. Few peasants would consider the Constitution as a written word that would guarantee them protection from the landlord's real and financial whipcord. Similarly, beggars who are living on the mercy of donors' charity would think that this dossier guarantees them equality and access to freedom. Many Dalits are repeating the state's narrative of constitutionalism as being the ultimate virtue a god-sent panacea. It does nothing more than apply a lotion to massage one's shattered ego. But when it comes to exercising the enshrined codes in the Constitution, Dalits seem to be harming their self-worth. This is because not everybody feels this document is close to their hearts as much as Dalits. Not everyone has similar expectations from the Constitution. Thus, it creates genuine gaps while considering constitutional morality as a common virtue. Hence, in such a situation of one-sided applicability, mutual cohabitation is a long shot. One has to pierce through the devious agenda of casteist rogues by injecting a radical antidote to set a tone of mutuality and respectability. Unless this is settled, no further conversation can be foreseen that will yield real results.

As much as Dalits feel empowered in a constitutionally mandated democratic republic, any hope of their issues being redressed withers away when reality comes knocking. After every gruesome atrocity or everyday humiliation they undergo at the workplace or in their shared housing, the promise of constitutionalism shatters into pieces. Dalits are often accorded second-class citizenship. At the workplace, they do not get the requisite respect and attention from their co-workers. One of the limitations of the Indian Constitution often echoed within Dalit circles is the absolute visionary absence of Dalit pride and the eruptive definition of liberation. Constitutionalism has proved to be an unreliable doctrine to influence perpetrators of casteism. The verdict delivered by the Chief Justice of India, Justice J.S. Verma, pointed out the fact that 'mere enactment of such a law or guaranteeing a right in the Constitution of India is not enough and the change needed is really in our hearts and not elsewhere. It is the willing acceptance of the society which alone is the sure guarantee of eradication of any social evil. The Justice J.S. Verma verdict expressed the inadequacies of legal provisions in the absence of society's willingness to acknowledge its prejudices. This goes in line with Ambedkar's comments on the uselessness of legislation in the face of social sanction.

Through Ambedkar

Guarding the elitism of the Constitution and selling it under Ambedkar's name has come at the cost of Dalit radicalism. Ambedkar is now centralised as a sanctimonious figurehead. And in a country like India, to worship someone is to kill any critical thoughts about the person. Various ideological and semi-social and political circles play football with Ambedkar and enjoy the show put on by Dalits around his portraits. Ambedkar's image is used to silence Dalit rage around any issue, to the benefit of the oppressor, who is more than happy to co-opt Ambedkar into their vicious programme of hatred and violence. At the time of writing, every Dalit leader in the 2019 election campaign has spoken of protecting the Constitution. They found it a more appealing idea to attract the common mass towards 'Samvidhaan', as opposed to other traditional issues at hand, such as social justice, welfare programmes, education, health, taxation and the protection of the working class. The affection of Dalits towards constitutionalism is a curious subject of inquiry. No mainstream Dalit leader has dared to critically engage with the debate around the Constitution and its encouragement of Dalit passivism.

Abstract:

This study describe about the journey of Dr. B.R Ambedkar on resolving the social injustice and how he fight for empowering the Dalit Community of India, which community is still suffering through several challenges in different rural areas of present India. Basic reason for choosing this area of study is to analysis the root of socio-political conflicts in Indian social system. Using data's are collected from the secondary sources, by reviewing different Books, Articles, Journals, Newspapers, and Government Reports etc. Result showed that, caste and communal crises in Indian socio-political scenario is rooted in great historic civilization, and people are still ruled under caste beliefs which led social injustice. At the last this study definitely reflects that some structural changes are adapted by Ambedkar to resolve caste issues, but still the active mass participation is required for proper equality and social justice.

Introduction:

Dr. Bhimrao Ramjee Ambedkar, (April 4, 1891- December 7, 1956), was the principal architect of the Indian constitution and the first law minister of independent India. Dr. Ambedkar was a great social reformer, jurists, lawyer, economist, author, polyglot orator, a scholar of comparative religion and thinker, and a political leader of modern India. Ambedkar was a valiant fighter for the social equality and fraternity. He was the chief draftsman of Indian constitution and throughout his journey he served for social justice in post-independent India. Ambedkar, had experienced several exploitation and disparity during his early life as belonging from the lower caste or as being a 'Untouchable' according to the Hindu caste system. Whole India is stratified on the basis of four major caste systems- Brahmin, Khastriya, Baishya and Shudra the lower caste of India society which is pretended as to be polluted caste and only because of this caste division the a part of Indian society was continue challenged by greater oppression and exploitation in every sphere of their life. The decade of 1920s was the most important decade for Dr. Ambedkar, from where he started his journey towards 'Dalits' (Shudra) empowerment. In the decade of 1920s, saw the emergengence of Dalit Movements as a conscious, organized force in socio-political life of modern India, especially in Maharastra from where Ambedkar belong. Regarding the conscience of Religion, Ambedkar stated that-"Religion must mainly be a matter of principles only. It cannot be a matter of rules. The moment it degenerates into rules, it ceases to be a religion, as it kills responsibility which is an essence of the true religious act." In 1923, he setup the "Bahishkrit Hitkarini Sabha" or the Outer castes Welfare Association, for uniting the lower castes to fights against exploitation. In 1924, Ambedkar organized a small conference of depressed class and it reflects the awakening of Shudras for empowerment.

On Dalit Empowerment: Different Social Approaches-

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar started the journey for social justice as a Dalit leader or for Dalit upliftment. Most of his programs were focused on untouchables of Indian society. His fight is not only against the higher caste hindu laws but for making India as a purely secular state, where everyone will have equal opportunity for development. Changes were started from 1923, with “Bahishkrit Hitkarini Sabha”, through uniting the Dalit by organizing a small conference under his leadership. In the decade of 1920s, Ambedkar had published different journals and expressed his opinion towards the Higher Caste dominated Indian society and encouraged the Shudras for their equality. Some his major published works are- “Mooknayaka”(the silent leader), “Bahishkrit Bharat”(1927), “Samatha”(1929) and “Janata”(1930). In 1927, Ambedkar launched a full-fledge social movement for Dalit rights; where he demand open public drinking water sources to all with Dalit rights to enter in Temples. He was against the Hindu upper caste laws, and criticized the great Hindu Religious book “Manuscript”. Therefore; in 25th December, 1927 socially he had burn the Manuscript, and started the Shudra’s movement for equal social status by uniting whole Mahar Community (Dalit) from a small town Kolaba district. This movement is popularly known as “Mahad Styagraha” of 1927, the first landmark event by Ambedkar for Dalit awakening. He stood for complete reorganization and reconstruction of the Hindu society on the principle of equality and justice.

Defining the Untouchables-

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was very conscious with Dalit development. He devoted his whole life to fight for the Caste annihilation. Since the era of British colonization, there was another one freedom fighter of India who fought continues for national freedom known as M.K. Gandhi. However; Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was against the M.K Gandhi’s views on Dalit or his definition of Dalit. Gandhi called Dalit as “Harijan” (Child of God), who must be protected and serve by the High caste Hindu’s. But, Dr Babasaheb completely disagrees with the term “Harijan”, because calling Dalit as child of God, it pretended that Dalit are Weaker, and they need the sympathy from upper caste. Therefore; Dr Babasaheb totally opposed using the term “Harijan” and prefer calling themselves as “Dalit” which reflects the oppression of higher Caste Hindus on Lower caste and it will more encourage them to challenges the social status-quo. Although, Gandhi and Ambedkar were struggling for same purpose, but their perspectives are not same. In 1932, September under the leadership of Gandhi an “All India Anti-Untouchability League” (Harijan Sevak Sangh) was formed, but as this organization did not include the leader of depressed class on its governing body Dr Babasaheb Bedkar was not impressed by this activity of Congress. According to Ambedkar, outcaste is a by-product of caste system, there will be outcaste as long as there are caste systems and it will only destruct the social structure. But, on the other hand Gandhiji said “Untouchability is the product not of the caste system, but of the distinction of high and low that has crept into Hinduism and is corroding it”. While Gandhiji want to end up Untouchability, Ambedkar want to end the Caste system. In political scenario parallel to Gandhiji, Ambedkar formed “Samata Sainik Dal” (Social Equality Army).

Separate Electorate-

Ambedkar was a personality who makes the nation to standup on its own dynamic rules. He was very crucial to making the future laws for independent India. In 1936, Ambedkar had been elected as Member of Legislative Assembly from Bombay Legislative Assembly. In 1947, he was elected as the first law minister of independent India and given a huge role in the first constitutional assemblies of India, as a Chairman of Constitutional Drafting Committee. He want to establish India as a “Parliamentary Democratic” nation-state, believing on Democratic laws he stated that “Democracy is another name of Equality”. For, giving justice to the Dalit, Ambedkar once demand for separate electorate for Dalit. In early 1930s, under the Simon Commission, there was total three Round Table Conferences were organized to discussed about the Provincial autonomy for India. Ambedkar participate in all there round table conferences and asked the British Government for equal representation of all communities of India. His demand was accepted by the British Prime Minister Ramay MacDonald in his “Communal Award” of 1932. Where, Dalit were granted 18% of the total seats in the central legislature and 71 seats in provincial legislature to be elected exclusively by Dalits. But, Gandhiji bitterly opposed this “Communal Award” as it was going to be divested the India unity, therefore he protested against the law through fast unto death. As this Ambedkar cooperated with Gandhi’s view but he replace this law by signing “Poona Pact” where he demand larger seats must be reserved for Dalit in election process. However; at last Ambedkar regret for this decision as he saw huge disparities in between the High caste Hindus and Dalits on the basis of socio-economic status-quo.

Ally with Muslim League-

In the 2nd half of 1930s, when India was struggling against British colonization and want to implement the provincial autonomy Ambedkar also was finding several paths to protect the present and future of Dalit community. The recent pre-independent scenario of India was very complicated, even at last communal disturbances led India to divide in between two nations. Once Ambedkar thought about to make ally with the Muslim League, a group also in path to secure own community from larger Hindu dominated social structure. Ambedkar thought, making allies with Muslim League will make Dalit strong enough and supportive to fight against the Hindu High Caste oppression. This alliance will change the caste Hindu political clout in India and led will to emerge balanced socio-political scenario. However; at last he becomes to realize that this is a false illusion to making alliance with Muslim League. Since March 1940, at “Lahor Resolution” Muslim League demands for separate Muslims majority state (Pakistan). Then Ambedkar realized that, the socio-political scenario of nation is going to totally divested. If Pakistan formed for Muslim then Dalit will become more oppressive and discriminate in the hands of Hindu High caste political leaders as there will be no other communities to compete with them. Or if Pakistan not become separated then they will demands more reservation and dominion status this will also marginalized the Dalit rights. Therefore; during the periods of making of constitution Ambedkar become more focused on secular laws as equally for all.

Hindu Code Bill-

The post-independent scenario of India was very threatened because of it being socio-culturally diverse state. The question of unity and integrity is challenged by intra-communal conflicts and oppression. Therefore to protect the individuals from persecutions and discriminations by their own community this law is absolutely essential to have uniform civil code. This bill includes laws related to civil matters like-Marriage, Divorce, Inheritance etc. This Bill introduces for the first time in the parliament since 1947 by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, but it was rejected as citing reason that it is not an urgent Bill and can be introduced in latter at more suitable time. In 1951, again Ambedkar introduced this Bill; again Bill faced massive oppositions from both inside and outside of the parliament. Within the parliament some conservative Hindu leaders are ready to change the traditional laws regarding women subordinations and in outside the higher caste Hindu women’s protested against the Bill as Ambedkar interfering in their traditional laws. Showing this kind of imbalanced in political scenario of the state Ambedkar resigned from the parliament.

Conclusion and Discussion-

In the darkest period of India’s socio-political system, Ambedkar was seen to adopt the path for legal and rational development. As chairmen of constitutional Drafting community of India, his fundamental objective is to mobilize the nation towards Universal Dignity, Fraternity and Equity. The eminent personality that Ambedkar admire most are- the lord Buddha, Kabir and Jyotiba Phule from whom he inspire for social fraternity. From the beginning, Ambedkar has given his all effort to secure the Untouchables and implement the social equality and justice. There are several movements are organizes under his leadership for Dalit rights, some of them are- “Mahad Chawadar Tank Satyagraha”, “Kalaram Mandir Andolan”, Manusmriti Dahan Andolan” etc. By making the constitution of India he has reflected the most essential ideological path to the country to fulfill its needs. He want established India on the basis of five major pillars, are-Freedom, Equality, Fraternity, Republic and Secular ideologies.

Rather than these all ideological foundation, still we have to see that Dalit are continue to be challenged by several social factors, basically it is because of their own intra-communal rivalries in modern age.

The major Dalit decline causes are-

1. Intra-Dalit Conflicts, lack of unity among their own community and conflicts in between the sub-caste become primary cause of Dalit Decline.
2. Interpersonal Rivalries, conflicts among the Dalit leaders for power and prestige, which will definitely restrict some of the Dalit to arise in socio-political sphere.
3. Inability in Dalit Leadership, one of the most effective causes of Dalit oppression in present social system is lack of good leadership quality among the Dalit leaders. They are only to rush for power and position; link with non-Dalit allies and finding opportunities for fulfill the self-interest is become the major objectives of Dalit leaders today.

Therefore, it can concluded that only praying in front of Ambedkar statue is not mean to be following the Ambedkar’s ideologies also. It is the moral duty of the political leaders to follow the constitutional philosophy and implement the all legal mechanisms of the constitution then only we could think about justice and fraternity. Once Ambedkar said, the document of laws or constitution, it could be best of the document but in the hands of bad man it could be worst of the document. Now it is depend on civil society, to make a balanced and peaceful nationwide, there must needed to be follow the laws and give rational efforts and co-cooperativeness. According to the Ambedkar’s path, most essentially we needed – the good source of Economy; land for farmers, employment opportunity for Dalit, equal Dignity to all, social equity and justice. At last; when Ambedkar was not happy for Pakistan as separate state from India, as it will create more exploitative situation on Dalit, then how today’s Dalit political leaders could thought about to form “Hindu Rashtra”! Need of the hour is to find more reliable path and to fulfill the interest of the citizens rather than isolating the state on the name of communal development.

Abstract

The Indian Constitution is synonymous with a great philosopher, economist, jurist, leader of the Dalit community and a social reformer - Bheemrao Ramji Ambedkar. He was respectfully known as Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, the brain behind the democratic and secular fabric of India. He dedicated his life in eradicating social evils like untouchability and discrimination in the caste system. Dr. Ambedkar was a staunch supporter of human rights and a champion of women's rights. His concept of human rights is well expressed in the form of Fundamental Rights in our Constitution. The Chief Architect of the Indian Constitution metamorphosed India into a country where every citizen could comprehend the meaning of freedom. The Preamble of Indian Constitution assures Justice, Liberty, Equality and Fraternity. Dr. Ambedkar was honoured with the highest civilian award, 'Bharat Ratna'. We pay tribute to him on his 130th birth anniversary.

Key words: Constitution, Architect, Democratic, Fundamental Rights, Preamble

The Constitution of India is one of the largest and unique constitutions of the world. It is the result of a deliberate effort made by the Constituent Assembly. The task of preparing a new constitution for free India was the real challenge for the constituent assembly. In the process of making of the constitution, it faced many challenges in the socio economic and political arena. The socio-economic situations are the striking realities under the prevailing conditions. The new constitution has not only provided for governmental powers, rights and liberties of the people but also brought tremendous change in social life. The credit for bringing this change goes to a great philosopher, jurist, economist, social reformer and a leader of Dalit community Dr. B.R. Ambedkar. He was appointed as a Chairman of the Drafting Committee of the Constituent Assembly to draft a new constitution. He served as a first Law Minister of India.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was born in an untouchable family. He suffered a lot of social economic discrimination due to the prevalent caste system. His life was a saga of great struggle. He fought against injustice and humiliation with great courage and confidence. He worked tirelessly for the welfare of the oppressed class. His vision was to secure social justice to the downtrodden. Providing justice in its various forms, social, economic and political which are reflected in the Preamble of the Indian Constitution are meted out through his efforts by protecting the rights of most disadvantaged sections of the society. He is called the 'Messiah' of the downtrodden, who fought against evil practices such as untouchability and social discrimination. Ambedkar believed that the caste system was a hindrance for the country's economic development and shoddier than slavery. He considered caste system as great enemy of social harmony. He wanted to establish a social order based on human rights and dignity. He became victorious in securing these rights for the oppressed class. To uplift the Depressed Class, he advocated a policy of reservation to Scheduled Caste, Scheduled Tribe and other backward classes.

After obtaining Doctoral degree from London, he returned to India. He started his career as a lawyer in Mumbai in 1923. For the first time he started an association for the welfare of Depressed Class called "Bahishkrit Hitakarini Sabha" with the intention of uplifting the downtrodden both educationally and economically. In 1935, he started his own political party called Independent Labour Party. As a leader of untouchables, he represented them in the second and third round table conference. He started All India Untouchability league (Harijan Sewak Sangh). In the year 1952, he got elected to Rajya Sabha.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar is a staunch supporter of human rights and his concept of human rights is well expressed in the form of Fundamental Rights. Part III of the constitution protects the civil liberties of citizens by abolishing untouchability (Article 17), prohibiting discrimination made on the grounds of race, religion, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them, (Article 15), protecting the interest of Minorities (Article 30). The most important feature of Fundamental Rights is that these are justiciable. These rights are constitutionally protected. Article 32 of the Indian Constitution providing for Right to Constitutional Remedies guarantees judicial protection to Fundamental Rights. On this ground, Dr. Ambedkar called these rights as the very heart and soul of the constitution. It is these protections which makes the rights more real and meaningful.

Dr Ambedkar advocated about classless and secular society. He felt economic reforms will not happen without the social reform. He supported in favour of democratic political structure for India. He believed, the revolutionary changes in socio-economic life can be brought only with democratic system of government. He felt "political democracy cannot last unless there lies at the base of social democracy". Social democracy recognises individual liberty, equality and fraternity. Separating social democracy from political democracy will definitely defeat the purpose of democracy. In the Indian society there is absence of economic and social equality. In the social field the Indian society has given special treatment to some, degrading others. In the economic field there are some who have immense wealth, where as some others are in extreme poverty.

He advocated about secular state, a state which treats all religions equally and grants religious freedom to all (Article 25). Ambedkar was in support of strong Central Government with flexible federal policy. He believed that interest of the Minorities could be safeguarded only by the strong Central Government. He advocated that as India is a caste ridden society, the people of the lower caste are always subject to ill treatment and injustice from upper caste. He believed that casteism would be more powerful at the local level. Government may be influenced by the higher caste and fail to protect the interest of the weaker sections. Whereas the government at the central level may be less influenced by caste politics. For this reason, Ambedkar was strongly supporting a strong Central Government. Ambedkar was an ardent supporter of Minorities. He viewed that Democracy is not only a mere majority rule, the interest of the caste communal minorities will also have to be protected.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar supported state socialism, but could not incorporate the idea into the constitution as it was opposed in the Assembly. Later it was incorporated to the constitution after the 42nd Amendment. Ambedkar was the first Indian to pursue Doctoral degree in Economics. As a student and Professor of Economics, Dr. Ambedkar contributed a lot to Indian Economics in the form of dissertations and articles. He supported industrialisation and agricultural growth. He was a leader of peasant class. The Finance commission of India which was established in 1951 to bridge the financial imbalances between state and centre is the brain child of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar.

Dr Ambedkar was a leader of labour class in its true sense. He fought for workers' right to strike and social security benefits. Credit of holding Tripartite Labour Conference goes to Dr. B.R. Ambedkar. He introduced various legislative measures to protect the interest of the labour class. He was instrumental in bringing industrial peace and harmony. Ambedkar emphasised on economic rights such as better standard of living, right to work, living wage etc. to protect against economic exploitations. But these economic rights are not incorporated in the list of Fundamental Rights, they are included in the Directive Principles of State Policy.

Dr. Ambedkar was in favour of creating a separate electorate to empower the depressed class politically. He opined that the political equality could be achieved by having a separate electorate but however his idea was not materialized as the constituent assembly did not favour it. The Hindu Code bill introduced by him in the parliament which favoured gender equality in the law of inheritance and marriage was not approved by the Parliament.

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was a champion of women's rights. Women who are considered as second grade citizens and the suppressed section of the society were not treated equally on par with men. They were denied of some of their rights. Ambedkar being the proponent of women's rights fought for their emancipation. He believed the only way to emancipate from oppression is to educate, organise, agitate and to have faith in themselves. Women must try themselves to abolish slavery. He recognised the dignity of women by supporting the Maternity Bill. As per this bill it is the right of the mother to take rest during pre-natal period.

Dr Ambedkar advocated about the adoption of Uniform Civil Code with the intention of reforming Indian society. Ambedkar opposed the incorporation of article 370, which granted special status to the state of Jammu and Kashmir. He said, "giving consent to the above proposal is against the interest of Indian state. As the Law Minister, I will never do so." However, the provision was incorporated in the constitution.

Dr. Ambedkar was a strong supporter of constitutional government. He defended the inclusion of all administration details in the Indian Constitution. He said Constitution is a supreme law of the land which has to be followed by everyone. He significantly contributed to establish state of India. Dr. Ambedkar converted himself to Buddhism in the year 1956. He was conferred with India's highest civilian award 'Bharath Ratna' posthumously in 1990. He has become an icon of social justice and equality. He became popular not only in India but also at the international level. In 2015 Koyasan University at Wakayama, Japan erected a statue of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar. The library of Western Sydney University, Australia is named after him. Constitution Day is celebrated in India on November 26th every year to commemorate the adoption of the Constitution of India. Dr. Ambedkar is the real architect of Indian Constitution in its true sense.

The writer of Indian Constitution, social reformer, politician, economist, supporter of Buddha religion Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar was born on 14th April, 1891 in the family of 'Mahar' in Madhyapradesh. He fought against social discrimination untouchability till death. He was posthumously awarded by 'Bharatratna'. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar, the first person as a 'Dalit bakti' was approved for higher education in college in India. He was elected as the 'Best Indian' through a programme organised by History T.V – 18 in 2012. Indian Constitution is the highest law to the republic of India. The constitution determines the outline of fundamental and political ideology through the formation of Government, activity, fundamental right and directive principles for the management of the country and the duty of citizens. As per Indian Constitution, India is a sovereign, socialist, secular, democratic and republic country. Proper justice, equality and independence are ascertained for the people of this country; to awaken brotherlyhood amongst the citizens, they are inspired for the safety and security of this country and for its national integrity. The Constitution of India came into force in 26th January, 1950.

English word 'Gender' means in bengali 'Lingo'. The word 'Gender' was first applied by Ann Oakley in his book 'Sex, Gender and society'. In modern era the word 'Gender' not only indicates the characteristic and physical differences of male and female but also reveals the creation of society and culture which is specially observed in developing literature. The word 'Gender' is nothing but a social and cultural perception compiled with psychological characteristics. 'Gender' is formed by bifurcating male and female in every aspect, such as, in the field of culture, philosophy, literature, art, fine-art or even in simple thought of our life.

Whereas, 'Equality' means equal right for all in every field. It may be in the field of earning money or in the field of earning fame. The word 'Equality' claims for ----- all are same in the eyes of law, equal opportunity for every citizen and the demolition of economic disparity or not to provide any extra advantage to any person or any group..

'Gender' discrimination is found almost all the countries in the world ----- obviously to that of different extent. Social and cultural stereotypical pattern, some wrong beliefs, preconceived notions and ect are liable for gender discrimination. The rules and regulations not being equal relating to gender equality, some problems often arise. The differential attitude towards female in the society of India is in vogue from many decades. In the era of Hrik Veda, the lady in Hindu religion was highly esteemed but the position of hindu lady started declining after this era. The dignity of woman is not assessed in 'Manu Sanghita'. Later, the customs that polygamy, child marriage, satidaha pratha, and above all creating obstacles in women education were the inhuman activities of patriarchal society in Hindu religion. It is believed by a few sociologist that a social binding was required to save the women of Hindu religion from the clutches of muslim invaders that can not be considered as a gender discrimination towards women.

Rather, it can be said the society is never kind and compassionate to the need of women. Though an endeavour is on process to remove the gender discrimination for years. In every moment, almost each person is becoming the pray of deprevation in the social, economic, political and cultural aspects of life. Deprivation has given birth to inequality and that has spread in the society. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar fought his wole life without compromising with anybody to form a society based on justice by removing inequality and discrimination. He wanted to set up such a society that would be based on independence, equality and amity and where inequality that raises depending on religion, cast and creed, gender, power, property and esteem will be abolished. Dr. B. R. Ambedkar has emphasised in his book “Annihilation of Cast” that religion and its books i.e scriptures are solely liable for grooming the conception of castism and untouchability in the society.

As a main founder of Indian Costitution, the deep and self relized thought of Dr. B.R. Ambedkar is vividly reflected in the texture of Indian Constitution. His main object wast to form a balanced socity depending on independence, equality, amity and above all by reforming the Hindu society. There will be no discrimination in respect of religion, cast, gender etc because Preface, Fundamental Rights, Fundamental Duties, and Directive Principles have been referred in Indian Constitution in order to wipe out the discrimination. In the Constitution of India at first seven fundamental rights are pronounced for the manifestation of the entity of citizens. At present, The right to property is not a fundamental right, so that, the right to equality or another rights are not unlimited. The citizens of Indian avail of all the facilities by maintaining rules and regulations of this country. All citizens enjoy social, political, economical and legal rights irrespective of all religions, casts and creeds, men and women; All are equal in the eyes of law and protected by law. In any public place irrespective of all male and female get equal opportunity in gaing a job or entering into a place. Dr. Ambedkar wanted to bring some changes in the field of the right to women and their dignity. “The Rise and Fall of Hindu Women” written by Dr. Ambedkar bears a vivid description of the plight and degradation of the then women of Hindu religion and for that Hindu scriptures were solely liable. In ‘Manusmriti, the women of ‘Manu’ society were deprived of independence, education, property and etc. Having changed the Hindu law, Dr. Ambedkar raised ‘Hindu Code Bill’ to save the right and respect of the women. The object of this bill was to change the society with the help of law. It was the first approved bill for the right to marriage, divorce, alimony, legal heirs, adoption and property of women. The first and formost social reformative measure of Dr. Ambedkar was ‘Hindu Code Bill’. The then President, Dr. Rajendra Prosad stated that the bill having been passed from Member of Parliament, he would not grant it. Sarojini Naidu threatend for strike for the withdrawal of the ‘Hindu Code Bill’. Dr. Ambedkar could not pass the bill in spite of trying his level best. Our society is not free from the discrimination of socio-economy, gender and casteism.

The main object of democracy is to wipe out the discrimination. In the election manifesto of USA regarding independence, it was said that “All men are equal” which directs the abolition of discrimination. In the Constitution of India, Article No. - 14 to 18 provides the right to equality and fundamental rights. Article No. – 14 of the Constitution of India provides for equality before the law or equal protection of the law within the territory of India. This portion is recorded from ‘Rule of law’, the theory of Briten. Equal protection to everyone by the law is recorded from ‘Due Process of Law’, the theory of UK. It’s meaning is that law is equal to all in a specific circumstances but it does not happen in reality. When the President or the Governor remains in the own post, he/she does not give answer to the Court for exercising his/her power or for the execution of his/ her duty.

As per Article No. – 15 of the Constitution of India, the Government will not exhibit any kind of discriminative attitude in entering into shop, restaurant, hotel or a place of entertainment irrespective of all the citizens of all religions, casts and creeds, men and women. No citizen can be deprived of from using the fully or partly government aided well, bathing ghat or road. If the Government takes any steps for the welfare of women and children or for the backward class of the society, it cannot be deemed fit to be a discrimination ----- this two are exceptional. It is referred in the Article No. – 16 of the Constitution of India that in the field of Government job irrespective of all religions, casts and creeds, male and female will have the equal right. Besides Government job, the Government will not create any discrimination in terms of salary, promotion, leave and pension. Dr. Ambedkar dreamt a society which would be free from untouchability. The law of untouchability (crime) comes into force in 1955. In the Article No. – 17 of the Constitution of India, it is referred that to express untouchability is a punishable offence. As per Article No. – 15 (iii) of the Constitution of India, the Government is empowered to make any proviso/clause (law) for the development and welfare of women. Dr. Ambedkar amended the law for the working lady of mine to give them maternity facilities. The women first attain the opportunity of right to education through various social movements in 18th and 19th century. But the Constitution of India has provided the equal right to the male and female. The discriminative conduct is strictly prohibited along with giving opportunity to all in the field of Government job or providing equal justice to all in the field of law.

Depending on the constitutional system, Dr. Ambedkar raised various laws in different sessions of Parliament and Legislative Assembly for the protection, development and flourishing of women. In spite of that the women are still now deprived of the right, safety or security and justice. Under the supervision of Dr. Phulrenu Guha, of the department of Education and Social Welfare, there formed a committee of which main object was to examine and assess the social status, education and employment of the women subject to constitutional, legal and administrative system. In spite of that right to equality, right to equal justice provided by the Constitution of India could not be gained to establish the equality of gender. The law being passed for the women commission or women being the Prime Minister or the Chief Minister or an ambassador, the opposite picture is seen too in our country. Deprivation, violence, torture upon women in the society depicts the gender discrimination in place of right, equality, and justice. Daughter-feticide, divorce for female baby, rape or woman killing are the headlines of daily news. The position of women in India, above all, is a matter of concern. But there is a ray of hope that women are now becoming conscious about their problems.

The object of the department of social justice and empowerment is to build such a society where all women will be safe and will live in the society with dignity. The President approved the bill regarding the right to transgender being passed in the Parliament on 5th December, 2019. Having driven out discrimination, the transgender will be able to make themselves as productive members of the society. A letter of agreement was signed between Dr. Ambedkar International Centre and Dalit Indian Chamber of Commerce to strengthen the scheduled caste and scheduled tribe. The aim of the agenda of Dr. Ambedkar was to build social unity through intercast marriage. It is our duty to make the youth of our society understand about the thought of Dr. Ambedkar. A great awareness is required to establish gender equality successfully. It is time to provide the utmost safety and security to the women and to drive out the discrimination from all fields.

Abstract

Humanism is a philosophical way of thinking that emphasizes the value and agency of human beings. It is a set of ethics and ideas about how people should live and act, perhaps the term has fluctuated according to the successive intellectual movements. According to Dr. Ambedkar, "one should always cherish some ambition to do something in the world. Alone rise who strive" (The positive philosophy on Humanism). Creative humans use intellect which enriches human thought, knowledge, and wealth which thereby contribute to the development of society and country. The constitution of India under Article 51A(h) encourages the citizen of India to have a sense of Humanism and a spirit of inquiry and reform. The Constitution of our country of which Dr. Ambedkar was the chairman of the drafting committee, has embedded several values and ideals which are directly or indirectly based on Humanism. Indian Constitution contains such core constitutional values that constitute its spirit and ideas which is expressed in various articles. The purpose of this study is to explore and elaborate the work done by Dr. Ambedkar in connection to humanism by the way of legal provisions. The said purpose will be achieved by studying and interpreting various provisions of the constitution of India as well as provisions from other statutes and international law in the context of humanism. After going through various provisions, we will conclude that how humanism was incorporated in the society by the legislature and is even applicable today, it not only changed the thinking of the contemporary society but in today's context too. Humanism needs to be deeply rooted in the minds of the human being. Hence, understanding the value of Humanism through different perspectives is essential and worth observing for the existence of human society as an entity.

Introduction

“Cultivation of mind should be the ultimate aim of human existence.”

The above quote is said by Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, through this quote we can say that the cultivation of humanism in a young mind is important for the development of a society where human beings including other creatures on earth can not only coexist together but also will achieve sustainable development. Dr. Ambedkar can be truly called an architect of the constitution. He changed the history of 3000 years in 30 years. In the then-contemporary society, he not only worked towards the eradication of untouchability, abolition of child labour, woman empowerment, human rights but through the constitution in part III fundamental rights and part IV Directive principles of state policy he tried to sow a seed of humanism in the legislation itself, which aimed at eradicating “all injustice and tyranny” and ushering in social democracy and social equality.

Dr. Ambedkar has a vision of modern India where a society where all individuals are enjoying equal rights and equal opportunity to develop themselves and all individuals will stand on equal footing in society.

Humanism is a philosophical way of thinking that emphasizes the value and agency of human beings. It is a set of ethics and ideas about how people should live and act, perhaps the term has fluctuated according to the successive intellectual movements. According to Dr. Ambedkar, "one should always cherish some ambition to do something in the world. Alone rise who strive" (The positive philosophy on Humanism). Creative humans use intellect which enriches human thought, knowledge, and wealth which thereby contribute to the development of society and country; whereas possessive people do not believe in the use of human intellect for creative purpose as they lack Humanism.

The constitution of India under Article 51A(h) encourages the citizen of India to have a sense of Humanism and a spirit of inquiry and reform. The Constitution of our country of which Doctor Ambedkar was the chairman of the drafting committee, has embedded several values and ideals which are directly or indirectly based on Humanism. Different communities of people who share certain beliefs may not agree on all issues, but the Indian Constitution contains such core constitutional values that constitute its spirit and ideal which are expressed in various articles and provisions. Hence, understanding the value of Humanism is very essential and worth observing for the existence of human society as an entity.

The pursuit of Humanism Through Rationalism

We have already mentioned that rationalism is one of the important aspects of Ambedkar's humanism. Rationalism is the very essence and foundation of humanism. Just vision is the outcome of reason and a rational society is composed of good and rational human beings. Thus, rationalism implies belief in reason and equality emphasizes the importance of reason. The word 'Rationalism' is derived from the Latin word 'Ratio' which means reason. Necessity and universality are the objectives of any rational enterprise. We witness a philosophical doctrine based on reason where reason is identified with rationalism. Thus, rationalism is a philosophical doctrine that the world is knowable to reason and only to reason. As a philosophical tradition of the 18th and 19th centuries, Rationalism asserts that "reason is the basis of vital knowledge of reality revealing as a source of genuine knowledge." Ambedkar gives importance to reason in his humanism because he realizes that reason alone stands against prejudices in the name of the god or super sensible entities. Reason or one's rationality alone can stand against mysticisms and unscientific philosophical and social prejudices.

Socialism as an Important Aspect of Humanism

The term 'Socialization' is derived from the 'Socius' which means society. Ambedkar visualized a kind of society where the principle of one man one value had been adopted in all walks of life, such as, political, economic, and social. According to Ambedkar, the ideal of one man's value is to be achieved by impeding or by religious, economic, and social exploitation of man by man. The absence of exploitation in any form is the essence of socialism. Ambedkar was a firm admirer of socialism. Socialism is an important dimension of Ambedkar's humanism. According to Ambedkar, socialism does not only embrace economic equality but also ensures social and political equality¹.

Humanism and Collectivism

Collectivism is the important mark of Ambedkar's humanism. In this regard, Ambedkar voiced in favour of political rights for the untouchables at the round table conference. Mahatma Gandhi did not like this scheme and as a symbol of protest, Gandhi went on fast unto death at Poona. However, Ambedkar won the battle because as a protest the depressed class people were given 148 seats as reserved seats. As a pathfinder, Ambedkar also initiated a few political decisions which eventually helped the untouchables at great length. He included the rights against exploitation of man by man, he emancipated not only the untouchables from the fetters of slavery but also the women, the children, and the helpless people from the scourge of evil systems such as Devadasi, forced labour, employment of a child below the age of 14 years and so on.

Humanism- International perspective

International humanist and Ethical Union (IHEU) founded in Amsterdam in 1952, an umbrella organization made up of more than 80 countries championing secularism, human rights, and equality motivated by human values. It campaigns globally on human rights issues with an emphasis on defending the freedom of thought and expression and the rights of a vulnerable minority in many parts of the world. The aim of humanist international is to build support and represent the Global humanist movement defending human rights and promoting humanist values worldwide. Recurring themes of IHEU managed International women's rights, sexual and reproductive health, laws against blasphemy and Apostasy, discrimination, and slavery.

Humanism and Constitution of India

Humanism is a many-sided and multi fold phenomenon which embraces the varieties of political ideology as well as conservative, liberal or social worldviews standing up for it. According to Doctor Ambedkar, one of the important dimensions of his radical humanism was that he wanted to give all citizens the right to equality in religious, economic, and political matters so that they may get the opportunity to emancipate their values. He was the founder of scientific and social Humanism. Ambedkar attempted to establish a society based on liberty, equality, and fraternity; and the provisions of the same have been embedded in Articles 14 and 15 of the Indian Constitution which was intimately associated with his concept of Humanism. Ambedkar asserted that " man was the centre of his action", according to him whatever religion a man follows he should be the captain of his soul, and he should master his faith along with self-help and self-respect. Article 25 and 26 of the Indian Constitution provide us the liberty to Profession, propagate and manage all religious affairs, but the objective of Ambedkar's Humanism was to uplift the well-being of the depressed and downtrodden classes. His perception of humanism was based on getting rid of the social disabilities of untouchables. Untouchability was a sin according to him and he believed that upliftment of the untouchables is the upliftment of the nation; hence Article 17 is firmly dedicated for untouchables, as it sweeps out untouchability from our nation and develops a humanistic approach in the minds of Indian nationals. He searched out that all the castes are interested and interdependence is a continuous phenomenon because the interest of everyone is being fulfilled within the system. He never thought that a caste system is a form of division of labour; based on a rational observation Article 23 and 24 of Indian Constitution provides a humanistic urge and lessons of equality to realize the Indian society the value of Humanism².

Woman and Humanism

The emancipation of women was another important dimension of Ambedkar's Humanism, he paid special attention to the overall development of women's status in India. At that time " All India Depressed class women's conference" was held in Nagpur, on the 20th of July 1942. Ambedkar emphasized that there would not be the progress of a nation without the progress of the women. He indirectly emphasized the development of women which was one of the important aspects of Humanism.

Democracy and Humanism

The concept of democracy is another important dimension of Ambedkar's Humanism. Under the umbrella of democracy, Dr Ambedkar advocates the proposal of one man one vote not only in political life but also in social and economic life. According to him true humanism would be reflected and restored when political democracy is to be accompanied by social democracy.

Humanism and human rights:

These two concepts are entwined with each other and in the true sense of the term, they are two sides of the same coin. As a Samaritan of downtrodden people, he believed that the establishment of a Democratic society in India would be possible only when untouchables and weaker sections would be allowed to enjoy human rights. Article 15 is of Revolt against slavery and untouchability or can be set that a constitutional remedy has been introduced for radical and revolutionary changes through constitutional means.

COVID 19 Situation and Humanism

Currently, we are facing a pandemic, this is a situation where all the countries of the world are Worsley affected some underdeveloped countries have Collapsed economically during such phase India has believed in the philosophy of "Vasudeva Kutumbakam" which means the entire world is one family, India has extended help to 150 countries all over the world, it not only supplied medical help but also supplied free vaccine to other countries, this act sets an example before the world that humanism is most important for the survival of human being on this planet.

Conclusion

The relevance of Ambedkar's Humanism so far, we have outlined and examined Ambedkar's humanism from various perspectives. We are now in a position to assess the relevance of his humanism in our times. It is true to say that over time everything has changed. Except for eternity nothing is permanent. Everything is momentary, impermanent, and relative and over the time takes different shapes and colours. However, when we envisage the relevance of Ambedkar's humanism, we see a difference. Even after 60 years, no one can deny the relevance of Ambedkar's humanism. Humanism is an umbrella term, that cannot lose its foothold in the course of history.

We can conclude that Dr. Ambedkar had farsightedness, the provision enacted in the constitution and still effectively applicable today and had the vision to convert India into a country where it is an ideal example of a sovereign country for the entire world, of which evidence we have seen during the recent pandemic where India had helped many countries to cope up which the situation and many countries are looking towards India as a superpower.

Introduction:

An eminent jurist and the chief architect of the Constitution of India, Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, persistently fought for the rights of downtrodden people of the Indian society. As a social reformer, he strongly condemned the caste and caste system in Indian society; he challenged the authenticity of Hindu social order which donate untouchability and inequality in India. In this context, the present paper is an attempt to exhibit B.R. Ambedkar's relevance in the society as the main critique of caste and its theoretical implications. Further, the research recognizes the interlink age between social justice and social reforms and will also analyse the contemporary relevance of B.R. Ambedkar's vision on social reforms and social justice. He wishes to establish a just society through the Indian Constitution itself, through this he had ensured certain provisions for the weaker sections of the society. Ambedkar's just society is based on the principle of Justice - Social, Economic and Political, liberty, equality and fraternity where each individual not only have the access to the wealth , assets, privileges of life but he also has the right to live with dignity within the society. He further gave emphasis on the fact that political democracy cannot be established in true sense without Social and Economic Democracy. Some of his important works regarding social includes, 'The Annihilation of caste', 'Castes in India', 'essays on untouchables and untouchability', 'Manu and the Shudras', 'Mr. Gandhi and the emancipation of untouchables', 'the untouchables and the paxbritannica', 'The untouchables who were they and why they became', untouchables or the children of India', 'which is worse', 'who were the shudras etc. These works of Mr. Ambedkar contains the practical aspect of Indian society by criticizing the operations of caste. He actually concerned about the upliftment of so called Dalits.

Ambedkar's idea of social justice was based on our indigenous historical, social and cultural roots. Indian Constitution is founded on the concept of social justice, and Constitutional makers were well known to the use the various principles of justice; which could fulfill the expectations of whole population. Social justice denotes the equal treatment of all citizens without any social distinction based on caste, colour, race, religion, sex and so on. Social Justice can be considered as a fundamental right as it is the comprehensive form to remove social imbalances by different groups or sections in the social structure or individuals by means of which alone the welfare state could be established.

Caste in India:

Caste system is the base of Hinduism in particular. As a unique system caste is evolved and practiced India. it has more similarities with western concept Racism where people are discriminated on the basis of their skin colour. Similarly caste system discriminates the citizens on the basis of their birth, where the citizens have no choice. There is no choice or option of change on ones caste, as it is defined by their ascribed status. On the basis of caste there are lot of restrictions such as, inter dining, inter marriage etc. Caste is a formal, rigid and well defined system.

Principal features of caste system in India:

1. Segmental Division of Society: The society is divided into various small social groups called castes.
2. Hierarchy: At the top of this hierarchy is the Brahmin caste and at the bottom is the untouchable caste. In between are the intermediate castes, the relative positions of which are not always clear.
3. Endogamy: The members of a caste or sub-caste should marry within their own caste or sub-caste. The violation of the rule of endogamy would mean ostracism and loss of caste.
4. Hereditary status and occupation: caste restricts its members to practice other jobs than their hereditary orientation
5. Restriction on Food and Drink: Usually a caste would not accept cooked food from any other caste that stands lower than itself in the social scale, due to the notion of getting polluted.
6. A Particular Name: Every caste has a particular name though which we can identify it. Sometimes, an occupation is also associated with a particular caste.
7. The Concept of Purity and Pollution: The higher castes claimed to have ritual, spiritual and racial purity which they maintained by keeping the lower castes away through the notion of pollution.
8. Jati Panchayat: These are openly enforced by the community through a governing body or board called Jati Panchayat.

According to Ambedkar the major discriminatory features of caste system are;

- | | |
|----------------------|--|
| 1. Hierarchy | 2. Lack of social efficiency |
| 3. Social immobility | 4. Responsible for disruptive tendencies |
| 5. Excommunication | 6. Endogamy |
| | 7. Anti social spirit |

According to Ambedkar, caste is religion and religion is anything but an institution. It may be institutionalized by it is not the same as the institution in which it is embedded. Religion is an influence or force suffused through the life of each individual molding his character determining his actions and reaction, his likes and dislikes. These likes and dislikes, action and reactions are not institution, which can be lopped off. They are forces and influences, which can be dealt with by controlling them or counteraction them.

Theories on caste can be summarized into the following:

1. Traditional Theory: According to this theory, the caste system is of divine origin and explains caste system is an extension of the Varna system, where the 4 varnas originated from the body of God Brahma. At the top of the hierarchy were the Brahmins came from Brahma's head. In the second tier Kshatriyas, came from his arms; third tier Vaishyas, or the traders, were created from his thighs. At the bottom were the Shudras, who came from Brahma's feet. The mouth signifies its use for preaching, learning etc, the arms – protections, thighs – to cultivate or business, feet – helps the whole body, so the duty of the Shudras is to serve all the others.

Ambedkar's view of Hindu religion is that, Hindu law is made by upper caste, out caste or panchamas had nothing more than to obey, respect and live in it. Lower castes have no rights against the upper caste. There is no equal right or justice to the lower castes. By his thoughts, Ambedkar pointed out that, Hindu law is against the equal rights among all communities. Traditional Theory on Caste establishes untouchable community as slaves. His two well known works ,Who Were the Shudras? (1947) and The Untouchables (1948), has for the first time analyzed in detail the 'Shudras' and 'untouchables' which created a mix in. Ambedkar advocated human dignity, liberty, equality, and fraternity through the legal provision.

2. Racial Theory: Varna is the older form of caste system in India which means colour, and the origin of stratification in Chaturvarnya is closely associated with Varna, Brahmins, Kashtriyas, Vaishyas and Shudras.

Varna system is mainly based on division of labour and occupation it was prevalent during Vedic period. Brahmin Kshathriya and Vaisya are frequently mentioned in the Rig Veda as they were represented priests, warrior and Vaisya is comprised common people and the name of Sudra occurs only once in the Rig Veda as they were represented manual labourers.

According to Ambedkar, Caste is a social group having two characteristics such as, membership is restricted to those who are born of members and includes all persons born into it and the members are forbidden by inevitable social law to marry outside the group. Prohibition of intermarriage among mutually exclusive groups itself ensures membership of one group is confined to only who are born in it. Ambedkar claims that "the superposition of endogamy on exogamy means the creation of caste. Restrictions on marriage will consequently result in a recurrent problem of disparity attaching itself to the lack of concurrence among the marriageable units at any point of time. It is "the infection of imitation" that caught all these sub-divisions on their onward march of differentiation and has turned them into castes".

3. Political Theory: According to this theory, the caste system is a clever device invented by the Brahmins in order to place themselves on the highest ladder of social hierarchy. Dr. Ghurye states, "Caste is a Brahminic child of Indo-Aryan culture cradled in the land of the Ganges and then transferred to other parts of India". The Brahmins even added the concept of spiritual merit of the king, through the priest or purohit in order to get the support of the ruler of the land.

Dr. Ambedkar in his grand scheme of reconstruction of Indian society explained the rights of representation as democratic rights. Ambedkar argued that all sections of the society including women should get rights of representation spheres of education, employment, agriculture, industry, bureaucracy and governance of this country. Branding that the Brahmanical society is based all kinds of privileges such as keeping education, rule and economy and relegate the Bahujans to service, Ambedkar wanted to usher in Democratic society based on the Culture of Representations. His memoranda to the Southborough Committee, Montague-Chelmsford committee, Muddiman Committee and his arguments in Round Table Conferences are based on the rights of representation as democratic rights.

4. Occupational Theory: Caste hierarchy is based on the occupation. The professions followed by Brahmin's were treated as superior and Sudra's were considered as dirty. According to Newfield, "Function and function alone is responsible for the origin of caste structure in India." With functional differentiation there came in occupational differentiation and numerous sub-castes such as Lohar (blacksmith), Chamar (tanner), Teli (oil-pressers).

According to Ambedkar, "Caste system is not merely division of labour but also a division of labourers. Civilized society undoubtedly needs division of labour based on specialization but the Varna system of division of labour is not based on any kind of specialization. In uncivilized society division of labour is accompanied by this unnatural division of labourers into water tight compartments." he suggests that in order to fully understand the ideological state apparatus of caste, one must delve into the religious bearing which it carries forth in Hindu society. In order to break apart the caste system with the effect of a complete annihilation, we must cease at the religious significance of caste, denude the socio-political reverence attached to it, thereby realizing a reconstitution of the production relations which determine the bearing of caste in Hindu society.

5. Evolution Theory: According to this theory, the caste system did not come into existence all of a sudden or at a particular date. It is the result of a long process of social evolution.

- Hereditary occupations;
- The desire of the Brahmins to keep themselves pure;
- The lack of rigid unitary control of the state;
- The unwillingness of rulers to enforce a uniform standard of law and custom;
- The 'Karma' and 'Dharma' doctrines also explain the origin of caste system;
- Ideas of exclusive family, ancestor worship, and the sacramental meal;
- Clash of antagonistic cultures particularly of the patriarchal and the matriarchal systems;
- Clash of races, colour prejudices and conquest;

- Deliberate economic and administrative policies followed by various conquerors;
- Geographical isolation of the Indian peninsula;
- Foreign invasions;
- Rural social structure.

Dr. B.R Ambedkar put forward his ideas on social justice and equality is based on modern concept of democracy. He made his contributions to criticize Hindu order of caste.

Conclusion:

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Nation of Social Justice Injustice is everywhere not only western countries and India also. At present one of the contemporary issues is that injustice and caste discrimination. As his perspective of social justice is based on social democracy which consists of three concept of justice namely liberty, equality and fraternity he addressed in constituent assembly that ,the third thing we must do is not to be content with mere political democracy. Political democracy cannot last unless there lies at the base of it social democracy that means a way of life, which recognizes liberty, equality and fraternity as the principles of life. His concept of liberty is a fundamentalism among political and philosophy thought. According to Ambedkar, liberty has divided into two categories namely Civil Liberty and Political Liberty. Ambedkar's notions of civil liberty deals with three basic opinions are; Liberty of movement, Liberty of speech and Liberty of action. Civil liberties are often formally guaranteed in Indian constitution but ignored in practice which came from Bill of Rights. Civil right is often used to refer to one or more of these liberties or indirectly to the obligation of government to protect dalits from violations of one or more of their civil liberties. India is the land of caste complexities. Ambedkar is the one and only Indian democratic thinker and leader opposed, criticized and made his teaching and preaching on social justice to oppose caste as a whole.

Introduction

Humans as the Homo Sapience evolved on this planet about 150,000 years before present. Some of the oldest Civilizations known in the history have been dated 10,000 Years old. Human Being is a social animal. Social animal has a tendency to govern and to be Society itself. There are two fundamental Types of human nature. Creative and Possessive. Creative human use human intellect for creative endeavors which enriches human thought knowledge and wealth thereby Contribute to the development of human heritage for the posterity.

Possessive people, on the other hand do not believe in the use of human intellect for creative purpose. Rather they believe in appropriation. Amassing and even us usurpation the product of the labor of the creative people. This types of people possess a strong urge to become the governing class by all means in order to achieve this aims. Lesser the degree of civilization in the Society, greater is the probability of succeeding this type of people in becoming the governing class. However in a more civilized society the creative people can offer resistance to possessive people and try to safeguard their interests. This is a continuous process in the human Society. Kari Mark has scientifically analyzed this Conflict by applying the principles of dialectical materialism to the sphere of social phenomenon and described it as the historical materialism. Slavery, apartheid gender bias and Caste system are the abominable creative people. These are man-made evils created by man for the exploitation of man. Those who have raised their voices against these evils and given a relentless fight against the prevailing Social order of these times in order to free the Creative peoples from the sockless imposed on them have become immortal personalities in the human history. Some of these great persons are better known as founders of religions. Gautam Buddha, Jesus Christ, and Guru Nanak. Some have become famous as saints as Kaberji, Ravidasjee and Tukaram. Some have become source of inspiration and guidance to the under privileged classes as Kratiba Jotiba Phoolay and Pariyar Ramaswamy Naicker and some are revered even more than gods as Bharatratna Dr. Bhimrao Ramjee Ambedkar.

Gautam Buddha, Jesus Christ, Guru Nanak, Ksbeer, Ravidas, Tukarama, Kravtiba Jotirao Phoolay, Periyar and Dr. Babasahab Ambedkar they all belong to the great Class of exalted Homo Sapience called as Humanists.

Objective:

1. To study the importance of Buddhism for development of Humanities.
2. To study the Humanistic approach of Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar for reconstructs the society.

Methodology

This present study, which is based on secondary data covering journals, articles, report and e- resources. etc

Dr Ambedkar's Perception on Humanity and Buddhism

Dr. Ambedkar will be remembered for all time to come as the architect of the Indian Constitution, Specially for the fundamental Rights and Directive Principles chapters which aim at eradicating "all injustice and tyranny and ushering in Social Democracy and Social equality. Our political rulers have failed Ambedkar and his vision. It is now for human rights groups and grassroots activists to make social democracy and equality a way of life in the absence of which political democracy will always stand on a shaky foundation. "To translate into action the cherished dream of Dr. Ambedkar in an honest manner requires strong commitment, honest approach and effective implementation of the Constitutional mandates up holding the ethos of secularism and eschewing Ulterior Considerations, narrow party politics deep rooted prejudices based On historical events and the so called religious bigotry. 'As Ambedkar himself say "Man is mortal. So are ideas. An idea needs watering. Both will otherwise wither and die

The Hindu Community is set in the steel name of the cast system, in which one caste is lower than another in Social gradation involving particular privileges, rights, Inhibition and disabilities with regard to each caste. This System has Created vested interests, which depend upon maintaining the inequalities resulting from the system. He therefore, Unfiled the banner of equality." He was born in an "Untouchable" family, Carried on a relentless battle against unsociability throughout his adult life. In the last part of his life he renounced Hinduism and became a Buddhist. What were his reasons for doing so? A detailed answer to this question can be obtained by Studying his the Buddha and his Dhamma, Annihilation of Caste Philosophy of Hinduism, Riddles in Hinduism etc.

According to Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, "What is called religion by Hindus nothing but a multitude of Commands and Prohibition."? He has enumerated the evils of Hinduism in the following manner

- 1) It has deprived moral life of freedom
- 2) It has only emphasized Conformity to commands.
- 3) The Laws are unjust because they are not the same for one class as of another. Besides, the Code is treated as final.

"The Buddhist dharma is based on scientific reasoning, it seeks to achieve human freedom, Equality, liberty and fraternity, According to him. Buddha taught, 'Social freedom, Intellectual freedom. He taught equality, equality not between man and man only but between man and woman."

After a comparative study of different religions, he concluded that Buddhism was the best religion form this point of view in his article "Buddha and the future his Religion" published in 1950 in the Mahabodhi Society Journal Ambedkar has Summarized his view on religion and on Buddhism in the following manner.

- 1) The Society must have either the Sanction of law or the Sanction of morality to hold it Together without either, the society is sure to go to pieces.
- 2) Religion, if it is to survive, must be in consonance with reason, which is another name of for Science
- 3) It is not enough for religion to Comprise moral code, tents of liberty, equality and Fraternity.
- 4) Religion must not sanctify on make a virtue out of poverty.

Lokamitra expressed Dr. Ambedkar's vision and its influence upon him in these lines, I visited India in 1977 and met Sangharaleshita's Ambedkar's great vision of a society in which everyone was free to develop themselves to the fullest and all related to each other on the basis of equality and friendship, not by political means but through Buddhist practice, Devoting his life to the eradication of untouchability, he had, after a long and arduous journey realized that effective social change will come about only through changes. I wanted to be part of it, and encouraged by my teacher, Sangharakshita and his Indian disciples, decided to live in India.'

He further explained how Ambedkar's thinking works, "I have travelled extensively, especially amongst followers of Dr. Ambedkar and Dalits I have found invariably that those who are following a spiritual practice through Buddhism avoid the two common extreme reaction to caste discrimination and violence. Not only are they less likely to be inflamed, but they are also unlikely to go to the other extreme of being cowed down and intimidated. They are able take a more individual and Creative approach to their centuries old oppression.

In May 1956 a talk by Ambedkar titled "Why I like Buddhism and how it is useful to the world in its present circumstances" was broadcast from the British Broadcasting corporation London. In his talk Ambedkar said; I prefer Buddhism because it gives three principles in Combination, which no other religion does. Buddhism teaches Prajna (Understanding as against superstition and super naturalism) ,Kaurna (Love) and Samata (equality). This is what man wants for a good and happy life. Neither God no soul can save society"

He felt that the propagation of Buddhism needed a Bible. Apparently Ambedkar wrote the Buddha and his Dhamma to fulfill this need

In the west most people come to Buddhism for psychological reasons. In India it is different. Dr. Ambedkar sewer mores by his vision of a new society brought about by the practical of Buddha Dhamma. However, he died just about six weeks after the great conversion in October 1956 which had Sadly been ignored by the Buddhist world in the worlds of T.K. Tope. "Dr. Ambedkar's erudition and learning were no doubt great. The generations to come may not remember the political achievements of Dr. Ambedkar. Ambedkar the Social revolutionary, and Ambedkar the modern exponent but Ambedkar the humanist Scholar will be remembered forever.

Findings of some others study

A large number of studies have reported positive results about Buddhism and its techniques applied to counselling, psychotherapy or mental Health interventions for example Synthesizing Buddhist teachings in Psychoanalysis. (Rubin 1996,wourgtko 1991) and applying Buddhist psychology to cognitive behavioral therapy. (Compose 2002, Kumar 2002) In addition a review of the pertinent literature yields evidence supporting the effectiveness of combining Buddhist meditation and mindfulness techniques in to psychotherapy. (C F Teasdale it al 1995, Ulillicems and Kabat Zinn 2011) One of the current three major Buddhist mainstreams has decisive influences on the development of Buddhism, not only in North Asia, particularly in Japanese and Korean Buddhism (He 2008) but also in Vietnam (Nakamura 1984). Positive nonviolent strategies (vones 2008 p181) toward social justice.

Dr. Ambedkar's approach to woman's Empowerment (Jun 2016 bale) Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar the principal architect of the Indian Constitution and as an emancipator of the poor and deprived. He was not only crusader against the caste system and a valiant fighter for the cause of the downtrodden but also an elder statesman and a National Leader. Dr. Ambedkar was the decor of lights for the millions of depressed oppressed and exploited people of India. Dr. Ambedkar mission in his life was to Challenge the ideological foundation of graded system of Caste hierarchy that cleaned equality, freedom and human dignity to woman in Hindu society but his drown documents as the living documents i.e Indian Constitutions brings the equality by the rule of law in this nation (Hindu Code Bill).

No other society is fully organized, Each and every society has lots of problems, and these problems are Natural problems and man-made problems. Because of this problems society disorganized and destroyed. Dr.

B.R. Ambedkar forming the constitution for reconstructs the society for betterment of human being. He tries to destroy all negative superstition of Indian society. He is motivational leader for Humanities in 21st century, who tries to build Humanistic approach in society.

Recommendation

- 1) If we follow the real approach of Humanities our society become more develop & stable.
- 2) Future generation should be learning the basic knowledge and principle of Buddhism for their Mental Health.
- 3) Every society need peaceful environment for growth and development Buddhism create the peaceful environment through mediation.
- 4) Women condition should be improve. Each society gave respect to women. All member of society is important and therefor women's Contribution is important for development of Humanity.

Conclusion

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was truly a multi-faceted personality. A veritable emancipator of Dalits, a great national leader and patriot a great author, a great educationist, a great political philosopher, a great humanist without any parallel among his contemporaries. All these facet of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's personality has strong humanistic under pinning. It is only regrettable that the press in the past as well as the Contemporary has projected Ambedkar mainly as a great Social rebel and bitter Critic of the Hindu religion. Critics of Dr. Ambedkar have ignored his basic humanistic instincts and strong humanitarian Convictions behind his every act or speech throughout his life.

Untouchables As (The) Other: Ambedkar's Struggle For Eradication Of Untouchability

Abstract:

This paper is mainly concerned with the discrimination and exploitation faced by the depressed classes, mainly the "untouchables". It will discuss 'who are the untouchables?', 'how they fall into the category of the other?' The untouchables though they are an essential part of the society, the upper caste people generally regard them as inferior or depressed classes. They have always been treated by the upper caste people as the other. As Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was born as an untouchable, he was always aware of the humiliations and sufferings faced by the untouchables. Ambedkar always struggled for the development, liberation and upliftment of the untouchables. His main aim was to eradicate untouchability from the society.

Keywords: untouchables, other, depressed classes, Ambedkar, discrimination.

Introduction :

Indian society has designated the 'untouchables' as the other. But who is the other? Do only the untouchables fall into the category of the other? Why they have been treated as the other? The other can be defined as "one considered by members of a dominant group as alien, exotic, threatening, or inferior (as because of different racial, sexual, or cultural characteristics)" The term other not only meant the untouchables, but all kinds of depressed classes and even women. They have been treated as the Other due to the nature of the work they perform, such as making and beating drums, leather work (e.g., shoe-making), sweeping streets, scavenging, cleaning latrines, skinning carcasses and tanning etc. Such kind of work is considered to be inherently inferior and ritually polluting by the high-caste Hindus and this was the sole reason for treating them as untouchables or the other who is different from the high caste people.

Indian society was divided into four general classes, the priests (the Brahmins); the warriors (Kshatriyas); the peasant-traders (the Vaishyas); and the serfs or slaves (the Shudras). It is believed that the untouchables or outcastes were of a lower status than the Shudras. They were serving the Aryans in very dirty tasks. "Sometimes they were called "the fifth caste," but most (Brahmin) authorities rejected even that, insisting that they were outside the Aryan social order altogether! It is likely that all untouchables were later labeled as "Shudras," though in early Indian literature they are mentioned by such occupational names as the Chandalas (the carriers and the cremators of corpses), the leather workers, and the basket-makers. Special quarters were allocated to those out castes. They were not allowed to reside in the neighborhood of the Aryans; they had to dwell outside the villages of the Aryans. Also, they were to be dressed in discarded garments, eat food from broken vessels, and wear only iron ornaments."

The untouchables were regarded as the outcastes. They were given various names such as Pariahs, Panchamas, Atishudras, Avarnas, Antya- jas, Namshudras etc. The British identified them as the Depressed Classes of the society. Gandhi called them as Harijans and the Indian Constitution calls them as the Scheduled Castes. The touch, shadow or mere voices of the Dalits were enough to pollute the upper caste. There were rigorous restrictions on their food, places, human rights, dress and ornaments. They were forced to live in dirty areas on the outskirts of the villages. They were not allowed to use public wells, temples, public schools, public ceremonies etc.

“In every village the Touchables have a code which the Untouchables are required to follow. This code lays down the acts of omissions and commissions which the Touchables treat as offences. The following is the list of such offences:

1. The Untouchables must live in separate quarters away from the habitation of the Hindus. It is an offence for the Untouchables to break or evade the rule of segregation.
2. The quarters of the Untouchables must be located towards the South, since the South is the most inauspicious of the four directions. A breach of this rule shall be deemed to be an offence.
3. The Untouchable must observe the rule of distance pollution or shadow of pollution as the case may be. It is an offence to break the rule.
4. It is an offence for a member of the Untouchable community to acquire wealth, such as land or cattle.
5. It is an offence for a member of the Untouchable community to build a house with tiled roof.
6. It is an offence for a member of an Untouchable community to put on a clean dress, wear shoes, put on a watch or gold ornaments.
7. It is an offence for a member of the Untouchable community to give high sounding names to their children. Their names be such as to indicate contempt.
8. It is an offence for a member of the Untouchable community to sit on a chair in the presence of a Hindu.
9. It is an offence for a member of the Untouchable community to ride on a horse or a palanquin through the village.
10. It is an offence for a member of the Untouchable community to take a procession of Untouchables through the village.
11. It is an offence for a member of the Untouchable community not to salute a Hindu.
12. It is an offence for a member of the Untouchable community to speak a cultured language.
13. It is an offence for a member of the Untouchable community, if he happens to come into the village on a sacred day which the Hindus treat as the day of fast and at or about the time of the breaking of fast; to go about speaking, on the ground that their breath is held to foul the air and the food of the Hindus.
14. It is an offence for an Untouchable to wear the outward marks of a Touchable and pass himself as a Touchable.
15. An Untouchable must conform to the status of an inferior and he must wear the marks of his inferiority for the public to know and identify him such as— (a) having a contemptible name. (b) not wearing clean clothes. (c) not having tiled roof. (d) not wearing silver and gold ornaments. A contravention of any of these rules is an offence.”

Ambedkar as an ‘Untouchable’:

Dr.Babasaheb Ambedkar was born into a poor, low Mahar caste family on April 14, 1891, in Madhya Pradesh. Babasaheb Ambedkar had a tough childhood as his family was treated as ‘untouchable’ caste of Maher’s in Maharashtra and was subjected to socio-economic discrimination. Even in his school, he was treated as an 'untouchable.' He faced discrimination from the students and teachers. His schoolmates would neither eat or seat beside him, his teachers also did not touch his books as he came from a dalit family that was considered 'unclean' by the orthodox Hindus. Later Ambedkar became the spokesperson of the backward or depressed classes and castes in India. Ambedkar struggled for the importance of a social reform that would abolish caste discrimination and the concept of untouchability in India.

“Before the Simon Commission, in 1928, Ambedkar submitted a memorandum on behalf of his association, the Bahishkrit Hitakarini Sabha. He argued in favour of the granting of universal franchise and a quota of seats for the Untouchables rather than for separate electorates. He explained, during his speech before a delegation of the Simon Commission at Poona, that in case universal suffrage was not being granted for the Dalits, then he would campaign for separate electorates. This stand suggests that he still nurtured great hopes towards the upper castes and that he still had nationalist scruples which prevented him from severing his links with social and political mainstream. The report of the Simon Commission finally granted reserved seats to the Depressed Classes, but candidates who would take part in them would have, first of all, to get their competence endorsed by the governor of the province. This profoundly annoyed Ambedkar. Anyway, this report remained a dead letter since the main political force of the country – the Congress – had not been involved in its making. To get out of this deadlock, a Conference was held in London in 1930, and then a Second Round Table Conference in 1931. None of them bore fruits.” The Communal Award was announced on August, 1932 following the Second Round Table Conference which recognized the right to separate vote for the untouchables. Thus, they were given right to vote and 71 separate constituencies which were to be filled only by the dalit candidates. “The Poona Pact finally established a system of reserved seats, in which 148 seats (instead of 71 as put forward by the Communal Award) were granted to the Untouchables in the Legislative Council. But it excluded the principle of separate electorates: in 148 constituencies – those where the Untouchables were the most numerous - the members of the Depressed Classes (the official phrase) would designate by themselves the four Dalit Leaders who would be the candidates among whom all the voters of the constituency, mixed of all castes, would then have to elect their representative.” This scheme ruined the efforts and hopes of Amedkar as he wanted to engage the Dalits into poltical force. “Dr. Ambedkar, yet, continued to pursue an election-based strategy by creating a political party, the Independent Labour Party, in 1936. The ILP, as its name indicated, was not intended to be confined to the Untouchables. As party president, Dr. Ambedkar tried to set up himself as a leader of the “labouring masses”. This shift was largely due to his need for an electoral strategy. He had become aware of the necessity of widening his social basis. Indeed, the Untouchables appeared only as labourers in the program of the ILP, which pays a lot of attention to economic questions and to a criticism of capitalism. Ambedkar considered that the Indian labourers were victims, at the same moment of Brahminism and capitalism (Brahmanshahi and Bhandwalshahi), the two systems dominated by the same group”

Dr. Ambedkar made a strong impact on the making of the Constitution as he was appointed president of the “Drafting Committee”. Ambedkar was one of the few members of the Constituent Assembly who belonged to Drafting Committee, along with 15 Committees – including the “Minorities Committee” where the Dalits were discussed.

Constitutional Abolition of Untouchability:

Article 17 provides that: "Untouchability" is abolished and its practice in any form is forbidden. The enforcement of any disability arising out of untouchability shall be an offence punishable in accordance with law.

It is further provided in Article 15(2) that: (2) No citizen shall, on grounds only of religion, race, caste, sex, place of birth or any of them, be subject to any disability, liability, restriction or condition with regard to (a) access to shops, public restaurants, hotels and places of public entertainment; or (b) the use of wells, tanks, bathing ghats, roads and places of public resort maintained wholly or partly out of state funds or dedicated to the use of the general public.

Conclusion:

“Ambedkar correctly grasped that "there will be out-castes as long as there are castes. Nothing can emancipate the outcaste except the destruction of caste system". Economic equality is the only sure and certain means to destroy castes and outcastes. It alone makes political and social equality meaningful. Political equality by itself is an empty shell. Laski rightly reasoned that "political equality is never real unless it is accompanied by virtual economic equality".” It is true that if there is no economic equality then there always be discrimination of the upper caste on the lower caste. Economic equality eliminates privileges and advantages of the upper caste. Then, we can live in a free society, as freedom exists only in a society of equals. In an unequal society the law supports the claims of the privileged as it is based upon inequality, ideas of injustice and lack of freedom. “Equality must be factual and not formal. Formal equality of rights becomes the decorous drapery for a practical relationship of mastery and subordination. Even that apostle of individual liberty, John Stuart Mill frankly admitted that "equality ... is one of the ends of good social arrangements; and that a system of institutions which does not make the scale turn in favor of equality ... is essentially a bad government - a government for the few, to the injury of the many".” Very often we think that our law has given equal opportunities for rich and poor. Anatole France exposed it when he quipped: "majestic equality of law forbids rich and poor alike to steal bread and to sleep under the bridges.” Similarly, we cannot have equality of opportunity unless we have economic equality. But in India opportunity goes with wealth and connections, if we are rich then we will achieve each and every opportunities, but if poor then we will lack in all kinds of opportunities. Economic equality brings culture within the reach of everybody and gives him opportunity to develop in his life.

Ambedkar was always aware of the importance of economic equality. “In 1937, he pointed out that the Indian National Congress lacked courage to proclaim the ideal of social and economic equality, enabling the common man to get leisure and liberty to develop himself. In 1949, in the Constituent Assembly, Ambedkar noted that there was complete absence of two things in Indian society: equality in social life and equality in economic life. Going further, he said On 26 January 1950, we are going to enter into a life of contradictions. In politics we will have equality and in social and economic life we will have inequality. In politics we will be recognizing the principle of one man one vote and one vote one value. In our social and economic life, we shall... continue to deny the principle of one man one value.” The interpretation of Constitution has not at all abolished "inequalities" that existed before; it has created more inequalities, nothing have changed yet. Today also they have been discriminated by the upper caste people.

It is solution for positive impact on elected representatives. In his early life he scholarly contributed Indian Economy with his writings. Within middle of 20th century he devoted his life for upliftment of backward classes with constitutional efforts. He was a scholar modern economist and his thoughts background of current scenario. Now the days need to upliftment of real economical backwards to build economically powerful nation.

Key Words: Indian economy, canon, public fund, utilisation, upliftment, industrialization.

Introduction:

Bharat Ratna Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was dynamic person in Indian history. India remember him for all social, economical, political and religious efforts for upliftment of the lowest stratum of Indian society known as untouchables. He was contributed as an economist, sociologist, legal luminary, educationalist, journalist, Parliamentarian, editor, social revolutionist, height of the human rights etc. He fights for not only social but also economical equality.

He was born in British-founded town and military cantonment on 14th April 1891. This was a poor and backward family. With the help of various scholarships he become a graduate in economic and political from Bombay University in 1912 and post graduate in economics from Columbia University in 1913. He has completed his Ph.D. with the subject of Economics in London School of Economics and Political Science in 1922 and become first highly educated scholar within untouchable community in India.

Dr. Ambedkar wrote three scholarly books on economics

- Administration and Finance of the East India Company, (Columbia University, 1915).
- The Problem of the Rupee: Its Origin and Its Solution. (P S King and Son Ltd, London 1923)
- The Evolution of Provincial Finance in British India, – A Study in the Provincial Decentralization of Imperial Finance (P S King and Son Ltd, London 1925).

The first and third books represent his contribution to the field of public finance: the first one evaluating finances of the East India Company during the period, 1792 through 1858. The second book, represents a seminal contribution to the field of monetary economics. In this book Dr. Ambedkar examined the evolution of the Indian currency as a medium of exchange covering the period, 1800 to 1893 and discussed the problem of the choice of an appropriate currency system for India in the early 1920s. The third one analysing the evolution of the Centre- State financial relations in British India during the period, 1833 through 1921.

Methodology:

Researcher has used secondary data in which research papers, articles are used. Researcher has used collective observation method for current scenario.

Objective:

To study the economical thoughts of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar for Indian economy and relevance of these thoughts in current scenario.

Thoughts of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar for Indian Economy:

Dr. Ambedkar represented problem of physical and economical exploitation of rural poor through his movements. His struggle against the prevailing land tenure system called Khoti was best example of his thoughts of equilibrium.

Indian economy is mixed economy and has impact of social, political and economical changes before and after independence. Dr. Ambedkar has given new socio and political view to Indian economics. Dr. Ambedkar decided to “changeover from economics to law and politics” as he remarked in the preface of the Indian edition of The Problem of the Rupee in 1947.

He clearly told “continued devaluation of the Indian currency which while was good for Indian exports, was not good for the Indian economy. Increasing and decreasing values of gold and silver has been problematic issue to decide exchange rate.” At that time gold and silver coins are use as a currency. It troubles to fix standard of gold coin exchange with silver coin or foreign currency due to change in price of these metal. Ambedkar’s writings took all this and argued stridently for a proper gold standard with gold currency as he was highly critical of the gold exchange standard though the latter received powerful theoretical support from all the then leading authorities including John Maynard Keynes. Neither was Ambedkar a votary of deliberate lowering of the exchange rate whether planned or unplanned. He told that low exchange rate increases exports and boosts internal prices. In the current situation globalization and privatization are mostly affecting factors to economy. Govt. is supporting to increase export. This benefits the trading classes at the expense of the poorer people at home.

The main point he makes is that an alien government cannot be expected to use the funds it has to the betterment of the people. As he made it clear: “if the Executive in India did not do certain things most conducive to progress it was because by reason of its being impersonal and also by reason of its character, motives and interests it could not sympathies with the living forces operating in the Indian Society, was not charged with its wants, its pains, its cravings and its desires, was inimical to its aspirations, did not advance education, disfavored Swadeshi or snapped at anything that smacked of nationalism, it was because all these things went against its grain”. That means this is must to use the fund for betterment of people. If the Govt. could not concentrate to proper use of fund, it will be misuse of fund and slow growth rate of society. In the current scenario political clashes and corruption is increasing problem for Indian economics. If central or state government launches scheme for upliftment of poor and backward but channel of middlemen and politician deduct most of the part of provided fund.

Economy needs public finance for human beings living in society require certain things like roads, law and order, defense, disaster management, infrastructure, etc. Citizens in democratic forms of government are promised by their elected representatives to improve their welfare by judicious provision of such public goods and services, and they place their trust in the government by delegating authority to take taxation and expenditure decisions. When the citizens are thus not in a position to comprehend clearly the consequences of government action, it is so easy to mislead them by false claims. Hence it becomes all the more necessary for the government to be faithful to the original intentions. For example, if a certain sum is allotted to agriculture sector to improve its facilities without specifying the item of expenditure, a more faithful way of spending would be on Agricultural laboratories, crop loans, canals, dams, agriculture market, warehouses and other items of agriculture rather than on frivolous things such as expensive offices, air conditioned meeting hall, public places in village, etc.

Dr. Ambedkar stressed on maximum utilisation of public funds. He said that economic wisdom becomes a paramount necessity in the context of a just utilisation of public funds. But mere apparent faithfulness to the original intentions and wisdom are not sufficient in themselves for public expenditure to achieve social well-being. The importance of the third canon of public expenditure takes a special meaning here. 'Economy' in public expenditure does not simply mean a low level of public spending, but it is the intelligent use of funds so that every paise fetches the most benefit. Those in charge of public funds must strive to evaluate alternative methods of achieving the objectives and see to it that leakages do not occur. The canons emphasise that the expenditure decisions should closely relate to the specified objectives and the available resources besides ensuring economy, efficiency and effectiveness in the implementation of government decisions, schemes, projects, etc. Public funds are asset of country it is in large scale but due to corruption and political pressure it does not reach completely to the end beneficiaries.

While the determination of the aggregate level of expenditure is a matter of overall policy based on the democratic willing of the people, allocation of that total among competing demands and the manner of utilisation fall within the domain of these canons. In the present context of high fiscal deficits, a rigorous application of the Ambedkar canons can help reduce the quantum of public expenditure.

In his paper 'Small holdings in India and their remedies' published in 1918, he takes on a problem that is still haunting Indian agrarian system. As he argued, land is only one of the many factors of production and the productivity of one factor of production is dependent upon the proportion in which the other factors of production are combined. In his words: "the chief object of an efficient production consists in making every factor in the concern contribute its highest; and it can do that only when it can co-operate with its fellow of the required capacity. Thus, there is an ideal of proportions that ought to subsist among the various factors combined, though the ideal will vary with the changes in proportions". From this he proceeds to say that if agriculture "is to be treated as an economic enterprise, then, by itself, there could be no such thing as a large or small holding". He concludes that "Industrialisation of India is the soundest remedy for the agricultural problems of India". This can generate adequate surplus that will also eventually benefit the agricultural. Industries need raw material and most of it available from agricultural production. It increase demand and agriculture become surplus. Most of the population is engaged in farming in India. Hidden unemployment in agriculture and dependency of increasing population can become problem for an economy. Industrialisation a positive solution proceeded by him.

He hoped that his study of economics will lead to useful policy conclusions. Thus policy oriented welfare issues interested him more than studying the technical aspects of the discipline to demonstrate economic theorems. This however does not mean that he did not show any regard for theoretical conclusions derived by others. Indeed it is significant that his knowledge of economic theory was amazingly up-to-date. Not only was his reading of contemporary economic literature wide and deep, he applied whatever that was in the cutting edge of the discipline to concrete situations, very imaginatively. Just to give an example, in a paper he wrote in 1918, he refers to the contributions that appeared in the American Economic Review.

He said: "Society is always conservative. It does not change unless it is compelled to and that too very slowly. When change begins, there is always a struggle between the old and the new, and the new is always in danger of being eliminated in the struggle for survival unless it is supported". That was his experience in his practical life of upliftment of untouchables. He devoted his whole life for upliftment of society. He had worked to destroy the distance between high level and low level untouchable. He fought for human rights and equal use of natural resources, chance to be a part of the nation. He placed much value on democracy and individual liberty which he thought could be preserved by judicious state action. He was a 'Masiha' for all the backward casts because in many areas of Indian economic history, he was truly a pioneer and he faced all the problems that a pioneer faces as he pointed out in the preface of his The Evolution of Provincial Finance.

Conclusion:

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was intelligent economist of their time. He had contributed not only thoughts but also fought for upliftment of exploited. His economic thoughts have been useful to Indian economy and can be used as positive solution for current economic problems in India.

Abstract

If there is any person who had fought for labor rights and make them live with dignity and respect all his life, was one and the only the greatest visionary and revolutionist, Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar. There have been several international labor movements, but in India Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar was the one to secure their rights and make them stand for it. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar was one of those leaders who established Independent Labor Party (1936) with comprehensive program to meet the needs and grievances of the landless, poor tenants, agriculturists and workers. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar has a profound knowledge of labor as he introduced the majors labor welfare. Bringing down the 14 hours of working hours, Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar declared 8 working hours for laborers. Likewise, this paper will focus on such major contributions of Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar in labor's upliftment and their social rights. The paper will also discuss his visionary thoughts about laborers, both men and women laborers.

Introduction

We all know that Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar is a visionary and revolutionary personality not just to our nation but to entire world. There are many roles and designations that he had successfully accomplished and sustained his entire life hence, Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar can be given an honor of being a multi-dimensional personality. His contribution to the fields like politics, economy and society in India has been truly enormous. But the unfortunate fact that his contribution to the labor class is actually ignored or we can say couldn't get that much recognition which Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar deserves. He played a vital responsibility as an Indian and a leader of depressed classes that he came forward with the solutions to the problems of labor class in India. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar has been 'light in the dark' for the laborers as their deliberately needed someone to pull them up from the marsh and to take them away from the storm of exploitation.

Fundamentals Rights of Labor

In the year 1942, Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar ensured and secured the future of labor class by bestowing them their fundamental and essential rights. In the seventh session of Indian Labor Conference that held in New Delhi, Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar reduced the working hours of the labor in a day from 14 hours to 08 hours. The working labor class in India, today would be grateful to Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar, who framed various welfare policies for them especially to women laborers. Lessening of the working hours is one of the fundamental agendas in the first meeting of Standard Labor Committee. The agenda also includes to solve the problems of production such as settlement of disputes, absenteeism, earning of labor, health research boards, savings, dearness allowance, question of welfare and so on. The motive of the second meeting of the Standard Labor Committee was to supply essential food articles to labors, deferred bonuses to them. Social security of labors was also an agenda of the committee under the leadership of Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar. According to him, the concept of equality, liberty and fraternity of labor was that they never wanted the mere recognition of the right to vote, but they wanted to develop a very positive idea of liberty where the government should be the one by the people in name and in fact too. Liberty of labor also includes the right to equal opportunity and the duty of the State. Again, labor's fundamental rights are equality which means abolition of privileges of every kind in law, in taxation, in services, in trade and in industry.

In short the fact of abolition of all processes that will lead to inequality. By fraternity laborers mean pervading sense of human brotherhood by uniting all classes and all nations. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar realized that after independence, labor has fully recognized its importance, but there is a wrong approach and a misunderstanding of its importance to be independent. Labor thought that it had got the external independence which was incompatible to internal slavery. While independence means nothing more than that a nation which has liberty to determine its form of government and its social order without dictation from outside, labor thought that more emphasis has been placed on New India and lesser on Quit India. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar deeply felt that our country needs a lead and the question is who can give this lead? On this Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar ventured that labor is capable of giving the country the lead it needs.

Our country needs a correct leadership from other things that requires idealism and free thoughts. Both idealism and free thoughts are possible for labor from his perspective. But the middle class does not possess the liberality of the aristocracy which is necessary to welcome and nourish an ideal. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar strongly supported the fact that labor had a very distinct contribution to make in bringing about a return to the sane and safe ways of the past which Indians had been run after to outreach their political destiny. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar assured that the Indians will be united only when the laborers will lead our country. The fruits of victory will be independence and a New Social Order. For such victory, according to him all must fight for their rights then the fruits of victory will be the patrimony of all and none can deny the rights of the united India.

Addition of two more features in Labor Legislation

Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar addressed before the Joint Labor Conference in the same year (1942). There were majorly three main objects of this conference and Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar was the one who wanted to make people realize the all India importance of labor and their rights. As long as government of India has given the provincial independence to the laborers in labor legislation proved to be a threat arising out of the diversity of this country, according to Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar. If there were no central legislation, then each province might make a particular law and could dominate over the considerations of national importance of labor legislation. The vision of Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar for the welfare of laborers was by adding two more features in the legislation without abandoning the first one. So the very first objective was to promote the uniformity in labor legislation and provisions for the industrial laborers in second feature that was laying down the settlements of the industrial disputes. The third feature was the discussion of all the matters of all India importance as between employers and employees. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar has designed these features broadly for all the matters related to labor welfare and maintain the labor morale, this is what he meant by 'matter of all-India importance'.

Out of 35 reports on the labor conditions by Labor Investigation Committee appointed by the Government of India on February 12, 1944: 20 reports were placed on the table of the house in a Central Legislative Assembly on April 09 Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar as a labor member. He emphasized that the Labor Department will continue to deal with all the subjects connected with International Labor Organization, Welfare of Labor, Labor Relations & Security Measures, Re-settlement of Ex-Servicemen and women, Technical and Vocational Training Schemes, Labor Laws & Statistics and Research & Investigation under his own charge. In India, labor is mainly a provincial subject and has been responsible mainly in securing uniformity in labor legislation and adherence to such of the International Labor Office Conventions as practicable for India, as reported by Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar.

Role of Government in Labor Welfare

Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar, as a Labor Member of Government of India took a firm stand in the favor of Government when it was generalized to responsible for the unsatisfactory conditions of Labor. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar mentioned that the conditions of labor are actually governed by the industrial development of the nation and Government has had hardly any control over it. He agreed that there are labor problems in our country, but there was no dispute and no financial consequences occurred due to these problems. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar stressed upon a fact that during the wartime measures the Government had many restrictions over labor in terms of their liberty, but it had taken the responsibility of fixing the conditions on which laborers may get employed as this was not done before by the Government of India. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar had himself seen laborers taking the wasting and painful efforts by going on strike to certain advantages from their employers, but at the end of the day they had to return to their old and pity conditions.

Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar put forward his views that Government is not only a party that employ labor, but it is a State. It has the responsibility for those laborers who are in immediate employment of Government of India. He had a firm belief and aware about the fact that the Government of India maintains various classes of allowances and salaries for different classes of its own employees and the gradation of the payment either of basic wage or dearness allowance is done by none other than the leaders of labor. He rightly mentioned that about 50 to 60 percent of the people who are unemployed ought to relieve by the payment of relief and that will happen only when there will be rapid and greater industrialization in our country. Government of India, according to Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar, has not laid down the objectives for the betterment the providing social security to laborers, but it has prepared a program of action that it had appointed the fact finding Committee in order to take survey of the entire condition of workers in this country. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar had quoted that both in legislative and executive action, government have had striven to ensure fair conditions to labor.

Relevance Today

There are certainly enormous efforts taken Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar for the laborers of our nation that would influence several labor welfare organizations today. The fundamental, social and economic rights of laborers were sanctioned by Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar as the Labor Member of Government of India. This has proven to be beneficial for our Indian laborers to sustain their lives with deep respect and dignity. Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar emphasized the urgent need to bring progressive labor welfare legislation. Inspired by him, the current government has taken steps to improve the quality of life of workers. The government is working to simplify the provisions of existing central labor laws into four labor codes – labor codes on wages, on industrial relations, on social security, welfare and occupational safety and health as well as working conditions.

Conclusion

The contribution of Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar in the welfare of laborers are far more that we had ever imagined. From providing employment to the downtrodden laborers to making them the beneficiaries of social security, Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar has an influential impact on labors in India. From establishing the department of labor and further its expansion by giving the responsibilities to all the members of the department to look into all sorts of labor problems, to assuring several aspects such as health insurance for industrial workers, Maternity Benefits Act for women laborers and its amendments whenever necessary, successful in passing various Labor Welfare Fund Bills and much more for the upliftment of Indian laborers. We must feel grateful to Babasaheb Dr. Ambedkar that because he uplifted many depressed classes we are living the dignified and respectful lives today.

Abstract

Dr. Baba Saheb Ambedkar's life and kayo are similar to making kanchan from kathir. The status of women after 'Manusmriti' created by Lord Manu is not giving freedom to women, sonless woman is abandoned, loving woman is ugly, women should serve their husbands, women should not be educated, restrained ban, women should not go out of the house. Society enslaved woman. In the middle Ages, such bondage of women was stopped that it became only housework and pedigree. Dr. Ambedkar established the 'Home for the Prevention of Infanticide' to shelter and protect the illegitimate children of the widow. "I am very confident in the organization of women. I know what women can do to improve the condition of the society. They have served in overcoming many social evils," said Ambedkar, adding that progress is achieved where women are respected in the society and in the nation.

Introduction :

The contribution of both men and women is important in the development of any society. Social health is also done by working together with men and women to make the society powerful and strong by considering the customs, traditions, traditions and religious beliefs of the society. Every society has its own unique adjectives and customs and policies are based on it. Which one has to follow. - Society is formed on numerous interactions and interrelationships. There is constant interaction between different individuals in the society. As a result society remains dynamic. Equality of healthy society is achieved only through the social development of both men and women. Human development is a process of people's choice. Which is for all sections of society.

If women are kept aloof from this, the development of the society becomes unjust and disproportionate. Productivity, equality and empowerment are the four elements associated with human development. Increased male and female power, creativity and productivity are associated with an equal distribution of economic growth benefits. Providing equal opportunities to the present and future generations results in perpetuity. Both men and women should be given the right to make important and key decisions to shape their lives and to implement them effectively. Should be given.

Female Empowerment:

Is 1058 Women's Conference was held at Nairoli. The theme of this conference was "Women's Development and Advancement". The aim of the conference was to formulate a strategy on social power, control of resources and women. The Ninth Five Year Plan has been integrated with the development strategy by including women empowerment. Authority is such a word. Which is associated with the creation of numerous processes. The use of the word O has been on the rise since the 1080s. The use of the term in women's organizations and in the programs of national and international conferences conveys new hope. Now the government has adopted this term in its programs and schemes. The origin of the concept of empowerment lies in Paulo Fierre's consciousness relation ideas. This concept of deprived class consciousness has been developed by feminist thinkers and activists.

Consolidation is a non-political process. Group social work for some time is a tool to achieve this for one reason or another. Women's empowerment is an integral part of uninterrupted human development, including patriarchal societal thinking, structure, transition and transformation of institutions, gender, social inequality, rural and tribal women's rights, material matters, control of information sources, etc. The Constitution declares equal rights for men and women. But we need to think about the extent to which these rights have been achieved by women, what their real situation is.

Since 2001 has been declared as the year of women empowerment, the focus is on the status and real situation of women all over the world. Despite the realities of women's problems, exploitation and their plight, they could not be seen in public. Which has caught people's attention with this .

Dr. Ambedkar's Role in Women's Empowerment:

The goal of bringing about change in society through ideological change was achieved by Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's ideas about Shri have not spread as much as they should. The important reason is Dr. Ambedkar is portrayed only as the messiah of the Dalits. He is not only a leader of Dalits but also a well-informed politician and a talented person Was the person. His intellect touches every branch of society. In which the presentation of her feminist ideas reflects her mastery of political science, sociology and jurisprudence. She has led the way in the Mumbai Legislative Council, as the Viceroy, as the Minister of Administrative Labor, as the Chairperson of the Drafting Committee, in the Constituent Assembly, and as the first Law Minister of independent India.

Dr. According to Ambedkar, the condition of women in ancient India was not as bad as it was in the 20th century. In ancient India, women enjoyed a very high status. Mention of which we find in scriptures like RigVeda, ArthaVeda, Ramayana and Mahabharata. According to her, Indian women were at the forefront in fields like arts, arts, spirituality and heroism. This condition continued even in the time of Lord Buddha.

Manu has made laws in Manusmriti for the benefit of men and also for Brahmins and Kshatriyas regarding the status of women after Manusmriti composed by Lord Manu. Such as women not attending Brahmabhojan. Not giving women freedom, a sonless woman is abandoned. The woman who loves is ugly. Women do not have the right to serve their husbands, women do not have education, prohibition of remarriage, property or possessions. Women cannot go out of the house and perform rituals independently. The effect of the above body given by Manu was that the society enslaved the woman. Dr. According to Ambedkar, only the state or social rules of the time were observed. The reason why Manu imposed restrictions on women may be that Manu was the biggest opponent of Buddhism. Women can be controlled by a male-dominated society to prevent them from moving in the direction of Buddhism. Manu believed so. The reason behind opposing Ambedkar is that if man-made laws hinder human progress, such rules need to be changed. And such rules can be changed by an ideological revolution in society. In the 1927, Manusmriti had publicly advocated for the elimination of social inequality and equal status for women by holding Holi.

In the Middle Ages such bonds of women were discontinued that they only became housework and breeders. At the root of all this is the situation at that time. This is because during this period Indian culture was invaded by Muslim rulers and Mughal rulers who destroyed Hindu temples, intellectual monasteries and Jain temples and started spreading Islam. As a result, child marriage, curtain practice of veil, the practice of chastity, the compulsory corner for widows and education for women were considered useless. She was just made into a beauty doll. Like cattle, women began to be sold. Women also started giving gifts, so that the birth of daughters became a burden for the parents. Due to which the females were milked.

The first thought and attempt to elevate the status of women came during the British rule. The British started making social reforms along with education. So that the English-educated class began to regard the neglect and neglect of women as the root of the decline of society. During this period, awareness was raised on issues like chastity, child marriage, widow marriage by social reform organizations. Awareness came as a result of the service of social workers like Rajaram Mohanrai, Pandit Ishwar Chandra, Vidyasagar, Jyotiba Flay, Rande, Gandhiji and the ban on Kurivajo by the British government laws. E. of women by the British government. Law against sati practice in 1829th, recognition of widow marriage in 1956th. Kayo changed the discriminatory view of women by enacting a law on the management of women's property from 1860, a law legalizing interracial marriages in 1922, a ban on child marriage in 1929 and a law on Hindu women's property rights in 1937.

During this period Dr. Ambedkar's egalitarian values in Buddhism, such as allowing women to be initiated into Buddhism as monks, He was quick to spread such radical ideas that could be established as education and guru. As a result, in his discourses and articles, Ambedkar introduced the idea of women's emancipation, coming out of the hundred dirty business and engaging in social work.

Dr. Ambedkar founded "Home for the Prevention of Inside" to provide shelter and protection to the illegitimate children of widows. fought against the practice of Devdasi which had assumed a monstrous form in India in 1925. He was born in AD. As a member of the 1927 Mumbai Legislative Council, in the discussions on questions related to the 'Maternity Benefit Bill' and 'Birth Control', Stri Peuk was very useful in recognizing the dignity of women. Supporting the "Maternity Benefit Bill", she said, "In the interest of the nation, mothers must get some rest before and after childbirth." Maintaining maternal health is a major issue for the government. This law applies not only to the government but also to business owners when they employ women instead of men. He wanted the law to apply not only to the state of Mumbai but to the whole of India.

Dr. Ambedkar wanted precise measures to be taken for birth control in India. He wanted women to give birth to children in a sick state or to give birth to children frequently, and in some cases women would die. They wanted having more children should be a crime. They wanted women to have the right to have children or not.

Dr. Ambedkar establishment of organization called "Samaj Samata Sangh" from September 4, 1927. Whose main purpose was the right to equality. In society, all human beings should be treated equally without any discrimination on the basis of caste, creed or gender so that the exploitation and oppression of women by men can be eradicated.

Dr. Ambedkar appealed to the untouchables gathered at the Satyagraha on December 26, 1927 filling draw water from "Mahad Lake" and said, "I should worry about how the child born to you will get a good job ... Wear sari in the same way you wear sari, keep your clothes clean, keep your house clean ... don't eat dead cattle ... educate your children, women should have knowledge and discipline like men "Thus Ambedkar believed in women's progress and childcare He called on women to get education, stay clean, keep children away from vices, educate children and keep children away from inferiority complex. As well as untouchable women in Kamathi Pura who had to live the life of a prostitute who was instructed to give up,

Is. When a meeting was held at Damodar Thakshree Hall in Yeola on the 1936 to support the conversion of Dalits, he told women from Devdasi, Aradhi, Patraji and Jagati, "I don't care if you change your religion or not, but I want you to stay with us." If you want, you have to give up the strange life (prostitution) and get married. Marriage is a responsibility. The relationship between husband and wife in marriage should not be that of master and slave.

"Dr. Emphasizing that the progress of the nation is not possible without the advancement of women in the 'Akhil Bharatiya Dalit Mahila Parishad' held at Nagpur on the 1942, Ambedkar said, "I have great faith in women's organization. I know what women can do to improve the condition of society He removed many social evils Services provided? According to Ambedkar, progress is possible in a home where women are respected in society and in the nation.

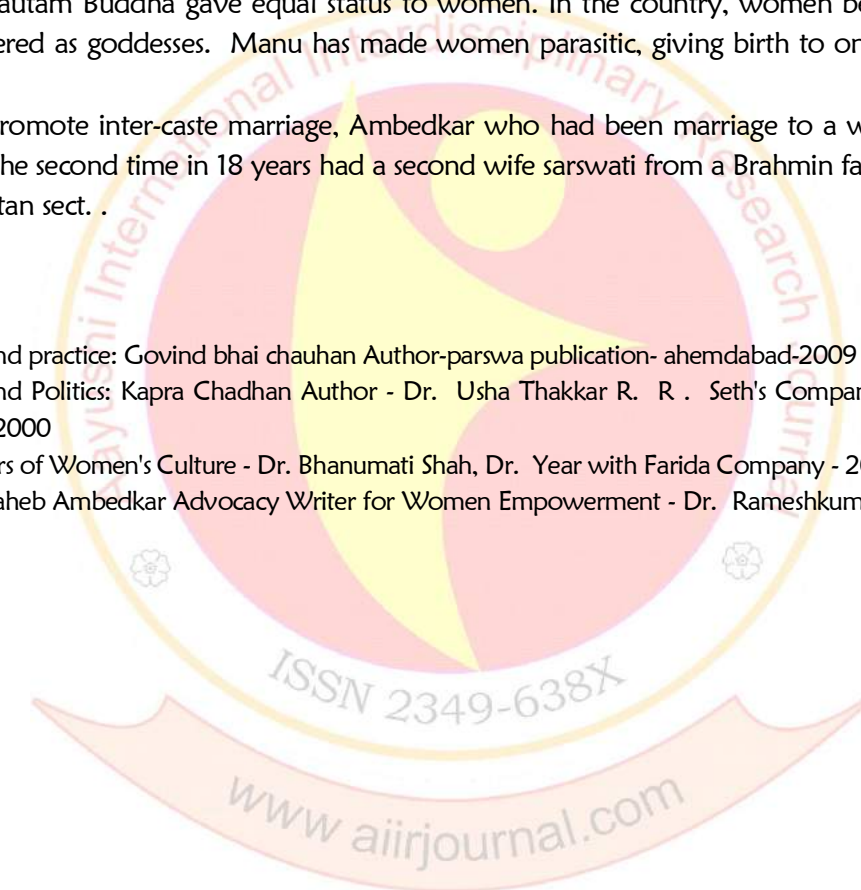

Is. In the 1945 Indian Mines (Amendment) Bill, the owners of the mines made rules for the construction and maintenance of stables for the children of the laborers working in the mines. On the 1946, the miners passed a bill to construct separate bathrooms for miners and provide lockers for men and women.

Is. In Mahabodhi, published from Calcutta in 1951, in an article entitled "The Rise and Fall of Hindu Women", Lord Gautam Buddha gave equal status to women. In the country, women before Manu were independent, revered as goddesses. Manu has made women parasitic, giving birth to only offspring, puppets of men.

Abstract

Among the galaxy of Indian thinkers, Dr. B.R Ambedkar has always been one of the brightest stars with an unparalleled constitutional knowledge as well in law. Not only did he design the Indian Constitution which is the standard constitution of the world, he also made relentless efforts to address the issues of discrimination on the basis of caste, class, race, language, geographical location towards marginalized sections reflects his indomitable will towards welfare as well as his strength of character. Non-professional social work practice in India has evolved into social work as an academic discipline as well as professional field work practice in the 85 years in India but it would not have been possible without the quintessential role that Dr. B.R Ambedkar had played. Using secondary sources of data, this paper seeks to understand the ways in which Dr. B. R Ambedkar was a great social worker and also his relevance in contemporary social work practice.

Keywords: Dr. B.R Ambedkar, Constitution, marginalized sections, social worker

Introduction:

Hailing from the untouchable Mahar family in the small town of Mhow in central India, Babasaheb Ambedkar not only graduated from Elphinstone College, Bombay but also pursued his higher education at a time when it was quite unthinkable for those belonging to such so called lower castes to be highly qualified and respected as the 'Brahminical mind' had produced a social structure based on the ideology of purity and pollution in which those who were the unprivileged polluted existed only to be oppressed and humiliated and it was believed to be legitimate and justified. Not only was he able to overcome the deep-rooted structural inequalities in Indian society during the early 1900s but Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar went on to become one of the greatest intellectual scholars championing the cause of the marginalized (Kumar, Bapuji, & Mir, 2021).

Objectives of the study:

1. To develop an understanding of the role played by Dr. B.R Ambedkar as a social worker;
2. To explore his relevance in contemporary times.

Methodology:

The paper is based on secondary sources of existing literature and descriptive analysis has been used. For the purpose of gathering adequate literature a systematic search of research articles related to the significant contributions of Dr. B.R Ambedkar was executed.

Conceptual Framework

Social Work:

Stemming from a moral responsibility to assist the most vulnerable citizens of society, the earliest origins of official social work practice in the United Kingdom and United States dates back to around the Middle Ages when church-based ministering to the weaker sections of the society evolved into the philanthropic and social justice movements of the 19th century (A Short History of Social Work: The Roots of Your Profession, 2019).

In India nonprofessional social work in the form of social welfare dates back to the ancient times when kings provided services in the form of charity to the needy and poor followed by social reform movements in the 19th century and then social work gradually evolved into a practice based profession and discipline in the late 1930s (Thomas, 2010).

The current global definition of Social Work states that “Social work is a practice-based profession and an academic discipline that promotes social change and development, social cohesion, and the empowerment and liberation of people. Principles of social justice, human rights, collective responsibility and respect for diversities are central to social work. Underpinned by theories of social work, social sciences, humanities and indigenous knowledge, social work engages people and structures to address life challenges and enhance wellbeing. The above definition may be amplified at national and/or regional levels”

In other words, Social Work is an interdisciplinary field in which professional social workers utilize primary methods of interventions such as Social Case Work, Social Group Work, Community Organization and secondary methods such as Social Action, Social Welfare Administration and Social Work Research to enable individuals, groups and communities to address challenges and to enhance their well-being (Gupta). More often than not these targets of social work intervention are representative of the vulnerable and marginalized sections of the population who are pushed to the periphery and accorded lesser importance.

Social workers also work in a variety of settings which includes the hospitals, schools, mental health clinics, correctional homes, child welfare institutes and numerous other public and private agencies (Types of Social Work, 2021). They are not only responsible for providing institutional and non-institutional services as per the guidelines of existing policies and social legislations but as a part of civil society organizations they are supposed to ensure that the policies, schemes and legislations are not violating the commitments towards universal Human Rights and other such global conventions.

Dr. B.R Ambedkar as a Social Worker:

Dr. B.R Ambedkar not only had a progressive attitude towards nation building but he believed in praxis too which is also fundamental to social work practice. From his perspectives on caste, class, race, religion and gender it becomes quite evident the state can choose to follow the spirit of equality, liberty and fraternity instead of causing or maintaining division between citizens on the basis of the abovementioned social constructs that are heavily influenced by those ideologies that are based on fear and hatred. In this context it must be mentioned that the profession of social work too believes in the constitutional values of Dr. B.R Ambedkar (Mr. Dhavaleshwar, 2017).

Sharing many of his experiences, before the Parliament and the people, he proposed for a secular state which he thought was quintessentially required for the development of the country which is the reason why he inserted secularism in the constitution of India and simultaneously made sure that the values of equality, liberty and fraternity become inseparable from the constitution. Along with these measures he also paved the way for a multitude of policies for the empowerment of the non-hegemonic and non-dominant groups that were also part of society (Mr. Dhavaleshwar, 2017).

If empowerment is considered to be the process of enabling individuals, groups and communities “to increase control over the factors and decisions that shape their lives, to increase their resources and qualities and to build capacities to gain access, partners, networks, a voice, in order to gain control” (Empowerment: What does it mean to YOU?) then in this regard, Dr. B. R Ambedkar can definitely be considered to be a social worker who worked with people for empowerment.

The knowledge of social, economic and cultural institutional practices along with knowledge of human behaviour that are required by social workers can also be traced back to his thought. He realized that the marginal communities cannot be empowered unless their standards of health and education are improved along with the economic independence of the nation. One of the core philosophical assumptions of Social Work practice is that every individual has dignity and worth. In this respect it can be said with conviction that all his relentless efforts were directed at creating mechanisms so that irrespective of class, caste and religion, one can lead a dignified social life. Just like a social worker working towards women empowerment, he fought for legal rights and issues of Muslim women, he introduced Maternity Benefit Bill, and he supported women’s movements, worked towards betterment of women involved in socially stigmatizing professions such as prostitution. He emphasized the need for education of women and adequate inclusion of women’s rights. When he advocated for family planning measures for women, he played the role of a social worker as an advocate (M.R.Singariya, 2014).

Relevance of Dr. B.R Ambedkar in Contemporary Social Work Practice:

Though Dr. B.R Ambedkar did not receive professional training in social work and did not professionally practice the primary and secondary methods as it is done today, his works are very significant to contemporary social work practice more than before. e was the architect of the Indian constitution which is the pillar of Indian social work practice. Not only did he fight against caste based prejudices and discriminations by abolishing untouchability, he also tried breaking down the barriers that acted as impediments in the progress of Indian women which includes his abolishing the patriarchal practice of Devadasi (M.R.Singariya, 2014). Today social workers working in the area of gender and caste equality are also addressing these barriers to sustainable development goals. The path he paved for social workers have only been diversifying more in recent times with the emergence of disability rights movements and LGBTQIA+ movements to mention a few. If social work claims to be interdisciplinary then Ambedkar Studies could be made to be a part of it and vice-versa. Moreover, efforts should be made to ensure that Ambedkar is read a more as a radical thinker and activist instead of just a maker of constitution and leader of Mahar community. The contribution of Dr. B. R Ambedkar to the development of social work in India is immense and social workers would forever remain indebted to him.

Abstract

The present paper is an attempt to highlight Dr. Ambedkar's view on women problems in pre and post independence India and the relevance of his ideas in present political and social scenario of India. Secondary data collected from the internet, Government documents, newspapers, published papers, books and speeches delivered by Dr. Ambedkar in Parliament, various conferences and meetings with pre and post independence India. Dr. Babasaheb spent his life for the betterment of women even involved in bad practices and professionals like prostitutions. Ambedkar created awareness among poor, illiterate women and inspired them to fight against the unjust and social practices like child marriages and devdasi system. He tried an adequate inclusion of women's right in the political vocabulary and constitution of India. He insisted on Hindu Code bill suggesting the basic improvements and amendments in assembly. He also insisted and evoked all the parliament members to help to pass the bill in parliament. Eventually, he resigned for the same. Thus his deep concern and feelings for all round development of women is expressed from his each sentence and word.

Keywords: - Women empowerment, Hindu code bill, Downtrodden Samtha Sainkdal, Women Welfare etc.

Statement of the Problem

We must stand on our own feet and fight as best as we can for our rights.

So carry on your agitation and organize your forces.

Power and Prestige will come to you through struggle.

Dr.B.R.Ambedkar

Empowerment refers to growing the political, spiritual, social or economic power of individuals and communities. Empowerment and independence of women and the change for the better of their political, social, economic and health status is both a highly significant end in itself and necessary for the triumph of sustainable human development. The responsibility played by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, as Chairperson of the Drafting Committee on the Constitution, has left hollow on the social wall-hanging of the country after independence, and shaped the socio-political fabric of the India today. It would have been a different India without him and, in a chance, a much more unequal and unjust one. He challenged to counterfeit India's moral and social foundations a new and struggled for a political order of the constitutional democracy that is sensitive to disadvantaged, inborn from the past or engendered by current social relations. Dr. Ambedkar had the uppermost academic official document for an Indian of his time, and his sophistication and scholarship has been generally acknowledged. sustainable human development. The responsibility played by Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, as Chairperson of the Drafting Committee on the Constitution, has left hollow on the social wall-hanging of the country after independence, and shaped the socio-political fabric of the India today. It would have been a different India without him and, in a chance, a much more unequal and unjust one. He challenged to counterfeit India's moral and social foundations a new and struggled for a political order of the constitutional democracy that is sensitive to disadvantaged, inborn from the past or engendered by current social relations. Dr. Ambedkar had the uppermost academic official document for an Indian of his time, and his sophistication and scholarship have been generally acknowledged. He quoted the famous thoughts of an Irish Patriot Daniel O Connal as, "No man can be grateful at the cost of his honour, no woman can be grateful at the cost of her chastity. And no nation can be grateful at the cost of his liberty." In his famous book Pakistan and partition of India. he expressed his views about Muslim women and their religious traditions, about wearing veil, their marriages and so on. Muslim women were suppressed under various religious traditions. Towards all the women, irrespective of their religion, casts and class, Babasaheb had a particular humanitarianism view. He frequently raised his voice against all sorts of injustice towards women.

On Women

According to Ambedkar, women were treated as mere tools to bear the burdens of the family, restricted to the role of bearing children and fulfilling duties of a wife or any mother Division of labour is not in their favour, as a result Indian women have lost their identity. They have to face discrimination on gender basis and because of this availability of equal opportunity for remaining a dream of them. Poverty, illiteracy lack of health and inequality of class of status and power, degrades are associated with them. Weight of traditional attitudes that regard them as physically, intellectually and socially, inferior to man subject them to male exploitation and unjustified division of labour. A society where women, i.e., the half of the population, enjoy a low status of women in Indian society is primarily due to the fact that they have no control over material and social resources. This is further compounded by lack of participation opportunities in the decision making process of the family. Ambedkar impartially concentrates on Muslim women also. He starts with the reference to Mother India, which created an impression through out the world that while Hindus were groveling in the mud of social evils and conservative, the Muslims in India were three of them and as compared to the Hindus, were progressive people. Babashaheb Ambedkar takes the help of census report and other data and proves Indian Muslims are equally harsh on their women; of course Muslim law has better provisions for women. But no Muslim girl has the courage to exercise them; there is latitude in their matter of divorce. The wife cannot escape marriage, even if it's irksome, the husband can always do it without having to show any cause. This destroys the sense of security which is fundamental to a happy life.

Views on Women Empowerment

The right of polygamy and Concubine, which the Muslim law gives to its men worsens the plight of Women. Ambedkar comments are sharp in saying "Purdah" deprives Muslim women of mental and moral nourishment. The segregation from the outer world makes them engage their minds in petty family quarrels which develop narrow outlook In 1936 Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar delivered a speech at Damodar Hall and addressed devadasis Muralyas and Jogathinis. He gives them a call to come out of their nasty occupation. “Our society has been put to shame because of you, Women are respected in our society, and every society honours the women of character. Therefore, you should forsake this dirty occupation, bring good names for yourself and your society. Many Devadasis, Muralya’s and Jogathinis were impressed by his speech and approached him saying that they wished to come out of their occupations, their marriages were arranged. Ambedkar had a great visionary, he always thought far ahead his contemporaries, he rightly identified that the progress of the community is measured by the progress of women. He said so in his address at the All India Depressed Classes women’s conference held at Nagapur on July 20, 1942. He identifies that marriage is a liability and says “let each girl who marries stand up to her husband claim to be her husband’s friend equal and refuse to be his slave. These words hold good even today, even after passage of six decades.

Women Rights to Self Respect

This shows how Ambedkar created awareness among poor, illiterate women and inspired them to fight against the unjust and social practices like child marriages and devdasi system. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar exclaimed, “I strongly believe in the movements run by women. If they are truly taken into confidence, they may change the present picture of a society which is very miserable. The past, they have played a significant role in improving the condition of weaker section and classes. He always honored women for their work and hardships. While addressing in conferences to women he could easily communicate with them as a homely person and conversation. He evoked women in the following words. “Never wear such clothes which will degrade our personality and character. Avoid wearing the jewelry on your body everywhere. It is not fair to make a hole on and wear “nath’.” In this he condemned all the bad traditions, habits and ways of life which made life difficult and complex. And to the surprise, even the illiterate women followed his advice from the bottom of their heart .He spent his life for the betterment of women even involved in bad practices and professionals like prostitutions. The greatest example of it was seen in Kamathipura. There was a person named David who was the mediator working in a brothel. He left his profession persuaded by the thoughts and teachings of Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar. He evoked the entire prostitute to give up their profession and lead the life of honour. In the Manu Smriti, Manu not only shows contempt for women, but goes on to degrade them as slaves, devoid of intellect; denies them the right of education and the right to property; and forbids them from performing sacrifices. Being an India” First Law minister and chairman of drafting Committee of the Constituent Assembly, Dr. Ambedkar thought it appropriate, rather his duty, to free women from the age old thralldom by reforming the Hindu social laws created by Manu. He, therefore, took initiative to draft and introduce the Hindu Code Bill in the Constituent Assembly

Today’s Scenario

Most people are literate, but not educated. Education by means of access to knowledge and learning played pivotal role the social reforms. Stagnation in the process of social reforms and imposing so called divine status of ancient women on today’s women there by influencing her development and upliftment. Shattered with the reforms and the liberation of women in the era of globalization and modernization the Indian mindset has not accepted the equality at par with men and hence forcing women to revert their development. Increasing incidences in women harassment in all ways violence, crime and humiliation insisted on her is only because of political apathy, which failed to keep social dogma. Education system, employment opportunities, tremendous population, inflation and non-availability of resources to strive are the barriers for development among people. The Sheer influence of modern lifestyle and adopting technology doesn't mean improvement of individual and society. The societal framework meant to make women subordinate or subjugated need to be dismantled. Active participation of women from all the strata could make it possible. Many notable women activists are working on issues like environment, health, poverty, etc. Those who indulge in social reforms were not supported, not even by women. Today, the women reservation bill is the hottest agenda of the discussion and fact is that a lay woman even doesn't know what it is. The more ridiculous male attitude is that girl's education meant only for her marriage. Today's women are trapped in the circle of insecurity, male domination, lack of awareness about her rights and no decision making powers. Much is talked about women empowerment today, but it is more economic, political and health related. The issue of social empowerment of women needs to be raised higher and given utmost importance then only it could complete phenomena. Women empowerment has five components: women's sense of self worth; their right to have and to determine choices; their right to have access to opportunities and resources; their right to have the power to control their own lives; both within and outside the home; and their ability to influence the direction and social change to create a more just social and economic order, nationally and internationally. Dr. Ambedkar strongly believed that women empowerment can be achieved by welfare of women. The activities of empowering women worldwide should follow the vision of Dr. Ambedkar

Conclusion:

Thus Ambedkar is described as the 'Modern Manu\ Manu codified the law of ancient India, which put women in the Shudra category and was responsible for the low profile of women's status in India. But Ambedkar contributed his intellect in the making of Indian Constitution and framing of the Hindu Code Bill. When Manu created a conservative social order chained the Shudras, Untouchables and Women, Ambedkar liberated all sections of the society In the condolence message, on the Ambedkar's death in parliament, Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru said "Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a symbol of revolt against all oppressive features of Hindu society". His dream of society, based on gender equality is yet to be realized and therefore his thoughts are important for the social reconstruction that favors women empowerment. Dr. Babasaheb expressed his views on the state of life of all women. He stated that women must be treated equally and given equal prestige. He insisted on Hindu Code bill suggesting the basic improvements and amendments in assembly. He also insisted and evoked all the parliament members to help to pass the bill in parliament. Eventually, he resigned for the same. The teachings and thoughts of Dr. Ambedkar are useful not only women but also all the Indians even today. His deep concern and feelings for all round development of women is expressed from his each sentence and word. In his last speech in Indian Parliament, we can know his feelings and respect showed towards women.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Thought on Indian Democracy

Guest Lecturer, Dept of English,
Gulbarga University, Kalaburagi

Abstract

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar made some brilliant speeches on the significance of the Constitution of India for the future of democracy. He wishes to maintain democracy not merely in form but also in fact. Dr. Ambedkar says that, we must follow constitutional methods to achieve our social and economic objectives. According to Dr. Ambedkar we must make our political democracy a social democracy as well. In his conception of exploitationless society, democracy has an extra-ordinary role which he defined as 'one person, one vote'; and 'one vote, one value'. Democracy means empowerment of any person for participating in the process of decision-making relating to her/him, democracy means liberty, equality and fraternity – Babasaheb Ambedkar's definition of democracy had such a tone.

Keywords: Social democracy, political, social, caste. Liberty, constitution, ect.

Introduction

Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was a teacher, lawyer, educationalist, organiser, party builder and cabinet minister. He wrote many important books on federalization, theology, philosophy, finance, language, sociology, politics and history of caste system. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar was multi faceted and multi dimensional personality. He was a savior of the depressed classes, a noted jurist, the chief architect of the Constitution India, scholar and a dared leader of India. Being a socialist thinker, Babasaheb's ideas revolve around social, political, religious and economic problems of India. According to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's ideal society is based on liberty, equality and fraternity. He fought for human dignity, self-respect, social, equality. Dr. Ambedkar's greatest contribution is social and economic upliftment of the suppressed classes.

Bhartha Rathna Baba Saheb Ambedkar was a lover of a democracy. He was a staunch supporter of social democracy. To him a society characterized by inequality and social disparity cannot sustain political democracy Dr. Ambedkar's aim of democratizing society and polity has found in various provisions of the constitution of India. To him the term social justice in real sense gives meaning and importance to the democratic way of life along with the rule of law and society. To remove untouchability. Dr. Ambedkar wanted the replacement of socio-religious or ritual status by secular status based on the principle of "one man's one value and one man, one vote" B.R. Ambedkar wanted reservation in legislature for political emancipation of the shards he desired nationalism of agriculture for economic development of shards and he advocated inter-caste dining and marriage for social rehabilitation of shards.

Dr. Ambedkar being a liberal, stressed parliamentary democracy along with state socialism many factors like impact of the west, rule of law, equality of citizens, political participation in law making and policy decisions encouraged him to accept parliamentary democracy. Dr. Ambedkar provided suitable parliamentary government to India. Dr. Ambedkar was a liberal democrat. He wanted to have the idea of elected parliamentary government but to him political stability and law and order were more important than any other matter Dr. Ambedkar favored the idea of a federal system but it should be designed in such a way that it could be converted into a powerful unitary state without too much difficulty

Dr. Ambedkar views on some aspects, which he expressed in the constituent assembly, reflect his passionate attachment to the democratic way of life. According to him democracy is not merely a form of government but a form of government through which revolutionary changes in the social and economic life of the people are brought about without bloodshed to him political democracy is meaning-less in the absence of social democracy. He conceived democracy as another name for equality, social and economic democracy is tissues and fiber of political democracy. Dr. Ambedkar wanted to convey the message that the fundamental rights in the constitution are a supporting pillar of Indian democracy.

According to Dr. Ambedkar basic features of democracy are equality, fraternity, reason, human experience, liberty, natural rights and rule of law. He was against to hero-worship in democracy. Individual should not lay his liberty at the feet of a great man. To Dr. Ambedkar, political upliftment is possible only in a reformed and enlightened society. To him religious equality meant little without social and economic equality.)

1. Dr. Ambedkar offered few methods, through which Indian democracy can be maintained,

- First thing is that Indians must adopt constitutional means to achieve their social and economic objectives.
- The second thing which Dr. Ambedkar mentioned is that there must be some limit to gratefulness. In politics Bhakthi or hero-worship leads to dictatorship
- The third thing Dr. Ambedkar says our political democracy should lie at the base of social democracy. To him political democracy is meaningless in the absence of social democracy because social democracy is way of life which provides liberty, equality and fraternity to the people.

2. Democracy and Socialism

As mentioned earlier, Dr. Ambedkar's vision of democracy encompassed "political, social and economic democracy". As he saw it, political democracy alone could not be expected to go very far, if glaring economic and social inequalities remained. A well-known expression of this concern is his parting speech to the Constituent Assembly: "On the 26th January 1950, we are going to enter into a life of contradictions. In politics we will have equality and in social and economic life we will have inequality... How long shall we continue to live this life of contradictions? How long shall we continue to deny equality in our social and economic life? If we continue to deny it for long, we will do so only by putting our political democracy in peril."

3. General connotation of Democracy:

Democracy is the most valued and also the indistinct political terms in the modern world. The ancient Greek word 'democracy' means rule by the demos, which can be translated as either 'the people; or 'the mole' depending on one's ideological preference. By itself, democracy means little more than that, in some undefined sense, political power is ultimately in the hands of the whole adult population and that no smaller group has the right to rule. Democracy can only take on a more useful meaning when qualified by one of the other word with which it is associated, for example, liberal democracy, representative democracy, participatory democracy or direct democracy. Although all free societies are democratic, democracies can fail to protect individual freedom. Countries are generally considered democratic to the extent that they have fair and frequent elections in which nearly all adults have the right to vote, citizens have the right to vote, citizens have the right to form and join organizations and to express themselves in alternative sources of information existed. Architects of democracy must determine the constitutional structure that best suits the needs of a particular country, alternative forms of constitutional democracy include parliamentary versus presidential forms of government, plurality versus proportional representation system and federal versus unitary systems. In a Parliamentary system, the Prime Minister is elected by the parliamentary process and can be removed from office by a vote of no confidence from the Parliament. Executive and legislative powers are fused in a Parliamentary System. In a Presidential system, the President is elected directly by the people and there is a formal separation of powers.

A important factor that influences the consolidation of democracy is the country's level of economic development. It produces a more highly educated society and attitudes, such as trust and tolerance that are conducive to a democratic political culture. Greater economic wealth facilitates compromise and accommodation among different groups Democracy follows, to use Samuel Huntington's phrase, "a two step-forward, one-step-backward pattern." The consolidation of democracy is influenced by prior experience with democracy, the political institutions that are established and the level of economic development among other factor. In a democracy, the government and opposition leaders must work together, which often requires basing from the previous experience of others.

4. Dr.B.R. Ambedkar's idea of Democracy in Indian context:

According to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, democracy means fundamental changes in the social and economic life of the people and the acceptance of those changes by the people without resorting to disputes and bloodshed. He wanted to establish the principle of one man, one vote and one value not only in the political life of India but also in social and economic life. He wanted political democracy to be accompanied by social democracy. He gave central importance to social aspects of democracy over political aspects, unlike many others whose discourse on democracy is confined to the political and institutional aspects. Dr. Ambedkar paid greater attention to social linkage among people than separation of powers and constitutional safeguards for democracy. The concept of power contained in his thinking has a direct relationship between social power and political power. He was conscious of the social and economic inequalities which corrode the national consciousness of the Indian people. Dr. Ambedkar said, "We must make our political democracy a social democracy as well. Political democracy cannot last unless there lies at the lease of it social democracy".

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar paid serious attention to religious notions that promote democracy. Dr. Ambedkar viewed the religious foundation of caste as the fundamental obstacle to democracy in India on the one hand and the Buddhist doctrine of liberally, equality and fraternity as the foundations for democracy on the other hand. He writes, "It is common experience that certain names become associated with certain notions and sentiments, which determine a person's attitude toward men and things. The names, Brahmin, Kshatriya, Vaisha and Shudra are hierarchical divisions of high and low caste, based on birth and act accordingly".

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar thinks of democracy from the viewpoint of practical life. He belongs to the realistic school of political scientists. He is not bothered about the principles and theories of political science. During the national improvement, his aim has to have justice and freedom for the people in the real sense. He aspired for having a government of the people, for the people and by the people. According to Dr. Ambedkar, democracy means no slavery, no caste, no coercion. He wants free thoughts that choice and capacity to live and let live, which his conscience, would be the right path to democracy. Dr. Ambedkar says “Democracy is a mode of associated living. The roots of democracy are to be searched in social relationship, in terms of the associated life between the people who form the society”.

Dr. Ambedkar is the greatest political thinker. Outwardly this may seem strange that in India, life was the monopoly of the Brahmin caste and was completely denied to other castes for thousands of years. However, here no contradiction is involved. It was the very privileged position assigned to the Brahmin that became the cause of the retardation. In Indian society, property, illiteracy, caste distinctions as the positive dangers to democracy. In these situations, educational facilities and economic help should be provided for those who are illiterate and backward on one hand and on the other, who want to wipe on the roots of caste system in order to safeguard the interest of democracy. Dr. Ambedkar says, “If you give education to the lower strata of the Indian society which is interested in blowing up the caste systems, the caste system will be blown up”. At the moment, the indiscriminate help given to education by the Indian Government and American foundation is going to strengthen the caste system. Giving education to those who want to blow up caste system will improve prospect of democracy in India and put democracy in safer hands. In Indian society, class structure is a positive danger to democracy. This class structure made a distinction of rich and poor, high and low, owners and workers, and permanent and sacrosanct parts of social organization. “Practically speaking in a class structure there is, on the other hand, tyranny, vanity pride, arrogance, greed, selfishness and on the other, insecurity, poverty, and degradation, loss of liberty, self reliance, independence, dignity and self respect.”

Dr. Ambedkar holds that the individual in society is an end in him and he has certain inalienable right in social relationship, which must be guaranteed to him by the consumption on certain reasonable conditions and be protected by the state. The democratic principles of life, liberty and pursuit of happiness are considered to be the essentials of human life in Dr. Ambedkar’s concept of democracy. He attaches more importance to human well being and development of every person.

Conclusion:

The main goal of the study is to analyze and evaluate critically the idea of Dr. Ambedkar regarding Indian democracy and to capture the position of Dr. Ambedkar on issues whose relevance is even felt at present. Analyzing the idea of democracy of Dr. Ambedkar in details, it can be found out that Dr. Ambedkar had unshakeable faith in democracy. In his conception of exploitation less society, democracy has an extra-ordinary role which he defined as ‘one person, one vote’; and ‘one vote, one value’. Democracy means empowerment of any person for participating in the process of decision-making relating to her/him, democracy means liberty, equality and fraternity – Dr. Ambedkar’s definition of democracy had such a tone.

Because he presided over making of the Constitution and is being projected as its chief architect, there is a misunderstanding that parliamentary democracy is what he wanted. But nothing could be farther from the truth than this. He himself spoke against parliamentary democracy. He defined parliamentary democracy as "voting by the people in favor of their owners and handing over the rights of ruling over themselves".

Thus, Ambedkarism is of great relevance to Indian society even today in achieving social justice, removal of untouchability, in establishing equality and freedom and true democracy. Democratic socialism is the key note of his political thought and constitutionalism is the only way to achieve it. In conclusion, it can be said that this research gives closer and analytical insight into the thoughts of Dr. Ambedkar and provides an answer to the question of whether we, the Indians, achieve religious tolerance, human equality and freedom, true democracy, gender respect in the society, justice and peace in the light of political philosophy of Dr. Ambedkar whose memory will ever guide the nation on the path of justice, liberty and equality.

Abstract

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar is the chief architect of the constitution of India and one of the biggest champion against the caste tyranny in India. He was a leader of the deprived people and fought for their rights and dignity within society. As an architect of modern India, he always supported as an equity and justice based society. Thus, he always worked for the women emancipation and opposed gender based inequality. Women also face a lower status in this society. In such a way, he worked for the rights of women and create consciousness regarding their rights within Indian society. In this context, this paper highlights Ambedkar who is a great personality in India and his major roles to define the women's right within Indian perspective.

Key Words: Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, Equality, India, Women's right

Introduction

"I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress which woman have achieved."

- Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

B. R. Ambedkar is the chief architect of the Indian constitution and modern India. He was among the greatest intellectual of India in 20th century. In the above quotation illustrates a community achievement does not depend only on its men development but at the same time women also. He basically gives importance about women achievement but it was not easy due to the prevalent traditional customs and superstitious belief during that time. Thus, Ambedkar took various step to improve their status.

Because of the father of Indian constitution he tries to put an equity and justice based society through constitutional provisions. He includes fundamental rights and signify the importance of human rights concept. They are basic rights for all people despite their caste, class, gender, race, sex and so on. In such a way, including fundamental rights in Indian constitution a drastic change happened of the rights of depressed caste and women who are denied from their basic rights in the earlier time. He recognised women equal position and gives importance to provide equal rights for them along with men through fundamental rights. Apart from these, he also introduce the Hindu Code Bill (1948) which was a drastic step regarding women rights. But due to the so many people against and opposed this bill it did not become law. On this issue Dr. Ambedkar the then Law Minister resigned from his position. Ambedkar is the greatest personalist who defined women rights on that time when ignoring their rights by the society. Although various intellectual focus such issue but he was greatly contributed to the rights of women issue.

Objective

The objective of this paper tries to understand Dr. B. R. Ambedkar role regarding women emancipation and gender based equity society in India. It is particularly focus Dr. B. R. Ambedkar role regarding women rights in India.

Methodology

The methodology of this paper is based on descriptive and analytical methods to understand Dr. B. R. Ambedkar role and his contribution to the achievement of women rights in India. This paper is based on qualitative nature and based on secondary sources like newspaper and magazine articles and other electronic sources etc.

Women Status in India

To know the status of women it is necessary to overlook from the historical time to till today. In the Vedic period women enjoyed their basic rights which signifies them as a human being. They equally participated and enjoy rights along with men like in the learning and knowledge sharing process. Men were unable to complete religious ceremonies without the participation of their wives (Das, 2015, p.192). In this context, within the Vedic period women enjoy their basic rights.

A Sexual based discrimination was happened later the Vedic period. They had no freedom and their status decreasing day by day. They had no property rights and at the same time they were treated as the property of men (ibid). Child marriage, illiteracy for women, polygamy, discrimination on sex, besides caste and creed became order of the day (ibid). In the medieval period, Muslims invaded India and they created parda (veil) and various strict rule-regulation for women. In this context, women had not enjoy even their basic rights on that time.

During the rule of British Raj in India, a new hope dawned in the mind of women for their emancipation (ibid, p.193). Basically western education enlightened many Indian thinkers such as Raja Rammohan Roy, Jyotiba Phule etc. mind set and they tried to improve the women status within this society and against the evil practices which were prevalent in this society. Thus, there were many social workers reform the Indian traditional customs and practices and gave importance women rights within this society.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar and Women's Rights: A Study in India

Dr. Ambedkar includes various provision in the constitution to improve the rights of depressed sections and women in Indian society. He includes equality, freedom, justice, fraternity and against caste, class, gender, race and sex based discrimination. He was an Indian jurist, economist, politician, and social reformer. He was also against the social discrimination towards the untouchables and the greatest champion of women rights to have existed in India.

"Unity is meaningless without the accompaniment of women. Education is fruit-less without educated women, and Agitation is incomplete without the strength of women".

-Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

This statement by Ambedkar has been defined that without women various terms unity, agitation and educated society is meaningless. Thus, Ambedkar spoke on the gender equality, women education and exposed the problems related to women and other depressed class (ibid, p.191). His perception of the women question related with their right to education, equal treatment with men, right to property and their participation in the political process (Kait, n.d, para. 12). Through to inclusion various articles within the fundamental rights he supports and provide a space for women and depressed class rights.

(i) Constitutional Provisions and Ambedkar

The constitution of India contains various provisions which provide the equal protection of rights of women along with men and against the gender based discrimination i.e.,

- Article 14 – provides equal rights and opportunities for all in political, economic and social spheres,
- Article 15- prohibits discrimination on the ground of sex
- Article 15(3) - state makes affirmative discrimination in favour of women and children
- Article 16 – equality of opportunity for all in matters of public matters
- Article 23- prohibit trafficking in human beings and forced labour
- Article 39- equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work
- Article 42- state securing just and humane conditions of work and maternity relief
- Article 46- state to promote with special care, the educational and economic interests of weaker section of people and to protect them from social injustice and all forms of exploitation
- Article 47- it is the duty of the state to raise the level of nutrition and standard of living of its people and the improvement of public health and so on.
- Article 51(A) (e) – fundamental duties on every citizen to renounce practices, derogatory to the dignity of women
- Article 243 D (3), 243T (3) and 243 R (4) provides allocation of seats in the Panchayat Raj system. It is important to define to promote women participation in the political field.

Apart from these constitutional provision the preamble of Indian constitution also includes various principles such as freedom, justice, equality, fraternity etc. to ensure social and economic justice for women. Thus, the preamble and constitutional provision of Indian constitution guarantees social and economic justice to women and it is because of possible of Ambedkar contribution (Das, 2015, p.192).

(ii) Hindu Code Bill, 1948

Ambedkar’s contribution towards securing the status of disadvantaged section is significant because in this section he not only includes lower caste men and women but also at the same time upper caste woman (Waghule, 2017, para.3). For this issue he highly criticized ‘Manusmriti’. In the ‘Manusmriti’ a ancient Hindu Code-book was written by Manu, defined the status of women is quite visible and she was put to the lowest rank of humanity as she was treated as animal and slave by the proprietors of Hindu Dharma(Kait, n.d, para. 1). To provide justice to women and questions about the gender based discrimination of Hindu epics he tried to social reform and on this circumstances he introduced Hindu Code Bill in the Parliament. The principal features of this bill illustrate Dr. Ambedkar contribution regarding the values of liberty, equality, dignity and fraternity (Prakash, 2019, para.6). He granted legal recognition of women’s rights to enlighten various rights through this bill such as the right to divorce, the right to inheritance, legal recognition of inter-caste marriage and so on(Waghule, 2017, para.10). Through this bill social inclusion of both civil and non-civil (sacramental) marriages where the former marriage provided the highest personal freedom with easy provisions for divorce (Prakash, 2019, para.5). Thus, this bill provided equal rights of women along with men. But too much opposition regarding this bill on the eve of the first election in 1951 Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru dropped this bill (Kait, n.d, para.22). Later on, he resigned from this post. However, the Hindu Code Bill incorporated four bills such as (i) The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, (ii) The Hindu Succession Act, 1956, (iii) The Hindu Minority and Guardianship Act, 1956, (iv) The Adoption and Maintenance Act, 1956 which later passed after the collapse of the bill.

(iii) Ambedkar and Other Perspectives Regarding Women’s Rights

Ambedkar was not only emphasis equity based society but also at the same time especially focus about the women issue. He advocated for family planning measures for women in Bombay Legislative Assembly (Singariya, 2014, p.2). He also introduced a Maternity Benefit Bill in 1942 through his statements - “It is in the interest of the nation that the mother ought to get a certain amount of rest during the pre-natal period and also subsequently, and the principle of the Bill is based entirely on that principle.” Through this it has been shown that through the Maternity Benefit Bill and on Birth control were quite relevant to recognize the dignity of women (Kait, n.d, para14).

He explained that within a society women as the victims of the oppressive, caste based and rigid hierarchical social system (ibid, para.2). He also created various organization and association to against this social evils. He was founded a women’s association in January, 1928 in Bombay with his wife Ramabai as its president (Singariya, 2014, p.2). He also organised various conference for the improvement Dalit women status. He organised the All India Dalit Mahila Conference and All India Untouchable Women’s Conference on 20th July, 1942 and on 6th January, 1945 respectively (Anand, n.d, p.20). Through these activities he advocated women’s rights and tried to improve the women status in Indian society.

Ambedkar and Women’s Right: A Study in Present Day Perspective

“We shall see better days soon and our progress will be greatly accelerated if male education is persuaded side by side with female education.” -Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

Ambedkar has been believed that a “family is educated only when the men along with women in the family are educated.” So, he strongly advocated education right for women and tried to aware about their own rights. In present day government of India takes various scheme to providing education for all child such as providing a package of free supply of books, providing uniform, mid-day meals, scholarships, free bicycle for girl student, development of women studies centre, establishing women universities etc. Various self-help groups and skill development training etc. are the outcome of this. Apart from this, an important organization the National Commission for Women was set up by an Act of Parliament in January 1992 with its objective to study and monitor all matters relating to the constitution and legal safeguards provided for women, review the existing legislation, to suggest amendments wherever necessary, and safeguard the rights and entitlements of women (Kait, n.d, para.36). Thus, Ambedkar contribution regarding women’s rights plays a drastic change in present day scenario.

However Dr. Ambedkar ideas influence the enactment of a number of significant pro-women Acts, such as The Child Marriage Restraint Act (1929), Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act (1956), Dowry Prohibition Act (1961), The Maternity Benefit Act (1961), The Equal Remuneration Act (1976), The Family Courts Act (1984), The Sati Prevention Act (1987), The National Commission for Women Act (1990), Protection of Human Rights Act (1993), Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act (2005) and so on(Prakash, 2019, para.7). In this context, when we called about the achievement of women rights in India then we call the name of Dr. B. R. Ambedkar who was develop and design this root.

Conclusion

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar especially focus about the women's rights to providing them various rights such as custody of child, adoption of child by a widow, provision of alimony, rights over parental property etc. He also against certain inhuman activities which basically put women subordination and creating exploitation within society such as "Dev-Dassies" system where priest exploited girls in the name of God, against prostitution and child marriage etc. Because of this exploitation he organised various organizations and conferences for women to aware about their rights. He also launched a journal Mook Nayak (1920) and Bahiskrit Bharat (1927) to against the hierarchical Hindu social order. Thus, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar is the chief exponent of women's rights in India. He mostly argued that it is the women who fight for their own rights otherwise they are not successful. He said that, "My final words of advice to you are educate, agitate and organize, have faith in yourself. With justice on our side I do not see how we can loose our battle to me is a matter of joy. You must abolish your slavery yourselves. Do not depend for its abolition upon god or a superman." He was awarded Bharat Ratna posthumously in 1990 for his lots of contribution to Indian society.

Dr. Ambedkar's Thoughts on Agriculture and Farmers - A Recent Perspective

Surajit Saha
UGC NET-JRF, SET

South Dinajpur, West Bengal

India is a major agricultural country. When we discuss about the agriculture, the issues of farmers come up inevitably. India is a very ancient civilization. History shows to us that peasants of India has been humiliated, deprived, and oppressed for ages to ages. India was under the British rule for almost 200 years. During the colonial period farmers were exploited in many ways. However, many Indian nationalist leaders roared against the exploitation and humiliation of the peasants. Dr. Babasaheb Bhimrao Ambedkar was one of the foremost among them. His views on agriculture and farmers are very justifiable. In Post-Independence India, The Government of India has always been committed to solving the problems of agriculture and farmers. At present, the farmers of India are using the advanced technology for the development of agriculture. Although it did not spread as much as expected. However, in this article, I will mainly discuss the creative thoughts of Dr. Ambedkar's for agriculture and farmers.

Dr Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar Popularly known as Babasaheb Bhimrao Ambedkar. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a great social reformer, politician, jurist, economist, writer, anthropologist and chief architect of our constitution and the country's first law and justice minister. He also played a major role in forming the Reserve Bank of India – the country's central banking system and a founding father of the Republic of India. Babasaheb Ambedkar was born on April 14, 1891 in a Military Cantonment in Mhow, Central Province, British India (Present day Madhya Pradesh, India). His father was Ramji Maloji Sakpal, who was a Subedar in the British Indian Army and his mother was Bhimabai Sakpal, daughter of Laxman Murbadkar. Ambedkar was their 14th and last child. Here mention that his family was of Maratha background. Ambedkar was born into a poor low Mahar (Dalit) caste, who were treated as Untouchables and subjected to Social-Economic discrimination and also oppressed by the Upper caste. With the help of various scholarships, he become a graduate in Economics and Political Science subject from Bombay University in 1912 and Postgraduate in Economics from Columbia University in 1913. He has completed his Ph.D. with the subject of Economics in London School of Economics and Political Science in 1922 and then he was become a first highly educated scholar within untouchable community in India.

Babasaheb Ambedkar inspired the Dalit Buddhist movement and campaigned against social discrimination towards the untouchables (Dalits), while also supporting the rights of women and labour. He was a famous economist. So, He also had a good idea about agriculture and farmers in India. In agricultural sector, he was fighting against the conventional "Khoti" system in the Bombay Presidency.

A land related system called "Khoti" was prevalent in some part of Kolaba (Present day Raigad) and also some parts of Ratnagiri district and Thane district in the Bombay presidency. "Khoti" system mainly related to minor land tenures. It was different from Ryotwari system. In Ryotwari system, the farmers directly responsible to the government for the payment of revenue. But in the “Khoti” system the government appointed some middlemen, who called “Khots”, who were totally free to do anything with the farmers. The Khots were generally misused the freedom and subjected the tenants to all kinds of exaction. The “Khots” extorting huge amount of revenue from farmers in either ways. At this time, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar came to the support of the oppressed farmers. Babasaheb Ambedkar raised a bill in the Bombay Legislative Council against the “Khoti” system. Abolish of “Khoti” system and direct relationship mentioned in the Bill between the government and the farmers, and also mentioned the reasonable compensation for the Khots. Although he was not able to pass the bill at that time from Bombay Legislative Council. However, the “Khoti” system abolished by the Indian government after independence. This was an Ambedkar’s most notable work in the support of the peasants in the Colonial India.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar also said that farmers should always be given the benefit of irrigation. For this the rivers of North India can be linked with the rivers of South India. We know that rivers of North India have full of water in whole year. But it turns opposite in the case of rivers of South India. This linking must be made through the canal. This will make it possible to control both, floods in Northern India and droughts in Southern India. As results of this river linking project, it will be possible to build big dams, generate electricity and introduce transportation through canals. He also spoke of a minimum profit of 15% on the total production costs of farmers.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was completely against fragmented land. The small and scattered holdings have given a real threat on agricultural production. According to him if we can consolidate the fragmented lands. Then the cost of production in agricultural sector will be decrease and crop production will also increase. As a result, the income of farmers will also increase. According to Babasaheb Ambedkar that consolidation of fragmented land is not enough. In here family planning is very important. Because, if there are 4-5 children in a family. Then land will be divided into 4-5 parts. The land will be fragmented again. Let’s see how applicable Babasaheb Ambedkar’s theories are in the recent period in the term of fragmented land.

From above Figure 1, it is clearly indicated that the decline of average size of holdings from 1970-71 to 2015-16.

Let's take a look at the operated area in agricultural field of India. Agriculture census for 2015-16 that showed to us a 1.53 per cent decline in total operated area at 157.14 million hectares as compared to 159.59 million hectares in 2010-11 data. The total operated area, the highest contribution was from Rajasthan with 20.87 million hectares, followed by Maharashtra with 19.88 million hectare, Uttar Pradesh with 17.45 million hectares, Madhya Pradesh with 15.67 million hectares, Karnataka with 11.72 million hectares. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar always spoke about increasing the operated area.

Figure 2

It is clear from the above Figure 2 that only five states in the whole of India have 54% operating area. Although India was comprising for a total of 36 States and Union territories.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar raised a demand that agriculture be given the status of Industry. As a result, agriculture will also enjoy the same benefits as industry. Also, farmers will get the benefit of contract farming. Advanced technologies will come into agricultural sector. Rural youth will get job from agricultural sector. Food security will increase due to higher production. If investment in agricultural sector will increase, then we will also be able to fight the problem of climate change. Babasaheb Ambedkar's thoughts was far ahead of its time.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was totally against the land revenue system of British Raj. He felt that the land revenue system of British Raj was further exploiting the poor people of the society. This land revenue needs to be amended as early as possible. Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was in favour of Nationalization of agriculture and land. He spoke of giving agriculture the status of a state enterprise. Babasaheb Ambedkar wanted to hand over all the responsibilities of agriculture sector to the states. Babasaheb Ambedkar propose the theory of state socialism. This theory related with the collective farming. He said that the state must be the owner of land. He said that the State government will distribute the acquired land in a standard-sized farm and distribute it to the residents of the village as Pattedar. Farmer should cultivate the farm collectively. The state should supply essential capital to the agricultural sector. For Example, seeds, fertiliser, watering, investments, and other inputs. States must be distributed the incomes among the farmers. He said that when distributing the land, the caste and religion of the people should not be seen. Land should be distributed in such a way that there is no Zamindar and no landless. This is a unique idea of socialism. In which we see the democracy.

He not only kept his thoughts about agriculture and farmers in his books but also applied many of them. Damodar Valley Project, Hirakud River Project, Sone River like all big project's construction made regarding to Dr. B. R. Ambedkar's recommendation while he was a Minister in Viceroy's Executive Council from 1942 to 1946. He was a first man to introduce a bill on family planning in the Bombay Legislative Council in 1938.

The relevance of Ambedkar's thinking can be understood by observing the steps taken by the present Central Government. The current government formed a ministerial committee in Jan. 2019 to double the income of farmers. The purpose of this committee was to give advice for that work. The committee suggested that using advanced technology in agricultural sector to increase the production, increase the MSP (Minimum Support Price) as well as send the surplus labour to other businesses.

In post-independence India, river linking project has been given much importance even recent times. which was a part of Ambedkar's ideology. In 2017, the Cabinet Minister Nirmala Sitharaman said that the Government has in favour of giving agriculture the status of an enterprise. Family planning is very important for the overall development of our country. The Government of India has been very aware in this regard since 1952. In recently, some states of India have taken very strong steps about family planning, with an aim to curb population explosion. Proper implementation of family planning was Ambedkar's dream.

Based on the above discussion, it is clear that Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a great well-wisher of the farmers at that time and his theory is equally relevant in recent times. He was like a Messenger of God to every oppressed person. Babasaheb Ambedkar dreamed of an India that would be completely free from any exploitation and democracy will reflect in the society. However, Dr. Ambedkar 's view on India's agrarian problem as well as farmers problem proved not only to be prophetic but reflect his Inflicting commitment to democracy based on Liberty and Equality as well. Fulfilling his dreams will be the best worship to humanity.

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar's Concept of Social Justice

Dr. Sunirmal Surendra Kabiraj

Tirpude College of Social Work Nagpur

Email- dr.sskabiraj@gmail.com

Dr. Ambedkar was one of the important political and social thinkers of modern India. He was well-versed in diverse subjects. As he was born in a Dalit family, he also had a bitter experience of injustice and inequality. His knowledge of diverse subjects and his experience as a Dalit made him think over social problems in a distinctive way. He did not consider political and economic reforms to be necessary preconditions for reformation of the society, nor did he believe that political independence would invariably lead to social reform, before initiating political and economic reform it is necessary to make people capable of enjoying the benefits of such reforms. His endeavour to solve social problems like inequality, and discrimination against the downtrodden and backward classes were governed by a distinctive concept of social justice.

Social justice being multifaceted deals with various aspects of human life and society, focusing on the preservation of the rights of the handicapped, marginalized, and depressed people. It deals with the people who are intentionally made victims of exploitation, injustice and unsociability, e.g., bonded labourers and unpaid scavengers. Social justice also critiques the laws, traditions, dogmas, customs, manners and usages that are used to perpetrate injustice. Social justice as a guiding and evaluative principle is always dynamic because it takes stock of the changing situation and suggests the abolition or modification of unjust custom, tradition and social structures to promote the welfare of the people and the preservation of the rights of the poor and weaker sections of society. His concept of social justice was based on human values such as liberty, equality and fraternity. Through liberty the hidden talents of the individual are expressed. It enables man to make his destiny. Equality binds men together through reciprocities, co-operation and social sympathy. Fraternity creates an atmosphere that is conducive to the enjoyment of liberty and equality. And fraternity means a sense of common brotherhood of all Indians, all Indians being one people. It is the principle, which gives unity and solidarity to social life. Social justice as a mode of life, giving every man his right place in society and to give every man his due without any artificial discrimination in mind and unnatural classification in society. The other precepts of social justice are the supremacy of constitutional rule, equality before the law, safeguarding fundamental rights, performance of duties, and adherence to social and legal obligations. The essence of Dr. Ambedkar's concept of social justice is the unity and equality of all human beings, independently of considerations of class, caste, gender and with respect to respect, rights, benevolence, mutual love, sympathy, tolerance and charity towards fellow beings, the dignity of all citizens, the abolition of caste-distinction, education and property for all, good will and gentleness. Dr. Ambedkar insisted on social justice because it includes all kinds of justice, namely, legal, economic, political, divine, religious, natural, distributive, and administrative and welfare of children and women also.

Dr. Ambedkar wrote, "In the scheme of Manu, the Brahman is placed at the first in rank, below him Kshatriya, Vaishya and Shudra and below Shudra is the untouchable. This system of rank and gradation is simply another way of enunciating the principle of inequality. So it may be truly said that Hinduism does not recognize equality. This inequality is a permanent social relationship among the classes to be observed, to be enforced at all times in all places and for all purposes. In every phase of life Manu has introduced and made inequality, the vital force of life". According to Dr. Ambedkar, social and religious inequalities are the essential nature of Hindu religion, which is reflected in the Hindu social order. Dr. Ambedkar showed that Hindu religion does not believe in the principle of liberty. Liberty is associated with social equality, economic security and availability of knowledge. Hinduism does not promote social equality. Similarly it denies freedom of vocation as an individual's work is already predetermined and fixed. He has no right to choose the occupation of his liking. Hinduism does not allow Shudras to accumulate wealth. Thus in Hinduism, there is no choice of vocation, economic independence or economic security.

Dr. Ambedkar also pointed out that Hindu religion does not encourage development of the feeling of brotherhood because there are water-tight compartments in this graded social order. He made this point more clear by pointing out that there are 3000 castes and sub-castes due to which social life is fragmented. Similarly, Hindu religion does not give permission to inter-caste and exogamous marriages. Hence there is a lack of fraternity among the Hindus. The social order, which is based on this Hindu religion, do not allow the individual belonging to castes other than the Brahmana to develop his qualities and skills. Besides that this society does not create an atmosphere where an individual can develop himself. Endogamy is an essential trait of the caste system. Inter-caste marriage was considered, as a sin against the divine will. Stringent penalties were imposed on those who broke these codes. A person who broke the rules was excommunicated from the main caste. Dr. Ambedkar wanted to show that the caste system originated in the selfish intention of the Brahmins and became more rigid through the support of religious texts like Manusmriti.

The caste system of the Hindu society created hierarchical social system, it divided the society into four castes. Social, religious and economic status of the individual in this system was determined on the basis of the caste in which he was born and an individual, though capable, did not have any right to change his status. Consequently, there was no mobility, no progress, no unity and integration in Indian society. According to him occupation even if in fact based on a division of labour yet it does not allow the individual to change the occupation traditionally assigned to him. So an individual had to do the same occupation, which his father was doing. Dr. Ambedkar further pointed out that this principle did not recognize the natural qualities and skills of the individual as it is based solely on the caste in which the individual was born.

Thus Dr. Ambedkar used the concept of social justice to critically evaluate the Hindu social order. He also used it to formulate the scheme of an ideal society where an individual will have complete freedom to bloom and society will also provide opportunities to the individual for his development. According to him there are two kinds of liberty; such as civil liberty and political liberty. Civil liberty means Liberty of movement, liberty of speech and liberty of action. All these kinds of liberty are necessary for the intellectual, spiritual, moral and social development of society. He believed that political freedom is important because as a responsible member of society, every individual has to keep a watch on the activities and decisions of the government. He was aware of the fact that heredity, social and cultural environment, opportunities for education and the individual's independent efforts play an important role in the formation of his personality.

Different individuals moulded by different circumstances cannot be equal, but that does not mean that he should be treated in an unequal manner. Principle of religion should be in consonance with the principles of liberty, equality and fraternity. Only if society is based on such a religion, individual will have an opportunity to develop his qualities and skills, as also an opportunity to change his social, economic and religious status. Social justice is one of the dimensions of the concept of justice that stands for organization of society based on the principle of equality, both social and economic, and fraternity with a view to create such human social conditions that ensure free and fair development of all human beings.

Abstract

One of the great epoch-making events in the history of India took place in the sixth Century B.C. When Gautama the Buddha delivered the First sermon at Isipatnam (Samath), and exhorted his disciples to "Go and wander forth for the gain of the many, for the welfare of the many, in compassion for the world, and to preach a life of holiness, perfect and pure". Soon his message of equality: of hope and peace; of kindness and compassion became the talk of the day; and the name and fame of the Buddha Spread far and wide. Of all the religions of the Sixth Century B.C. Gautama Buddha's religion had more popular brahminical social base. The Buddha's Dharma stands for the doctrine which is 'rationally possible for the welfare of human being. After the Mahaparinirvana of the Buddha in 483 B.C., the rise and fall of Buddhism in India can be said to have passed through many phases.

Keywords: Buddhism, Hindu religion, Untouchability , discrimination, equality and fraternity.

Statement of the Problem

"I like the religion that teachers liberty, equality and fraternity" - Dr.B.R.Ambedkar

Dr. Ambedkar was a rare combination of a political leader, legal luminaries, constitutional pundit, ardent scholar and champion of the downtrodden masses; whose memory never fails in the minds of the suffering masses for many years to come. Dr. Ambedkar was a fascinating personality. He "was a brilliant academician, a popular attorney, an erudite scholar, a powerful writer and a great Constitutionalist . Being a person from low caste, he suffered humiliation many times in – hands of upper caste Hindus. He raised his voice against Untouchability and discrimination against low caste people for this he used media as a powerful weapon. Ambedkar certainly possessed a multi-dimensional and multifaceted personality. He was a great soul' with a spirit of sacrifice and scientific outlook, who led and whose followers continue to lead movements of self-respect throughout India. It took two decades for him to embrace Buddhism, a momentous decision indeed. But his choice of Buddhism in 1956 unfolded a new life before millions of exploited untouchables. When Ambedkar declared in 1935 that he was going to renounce Hinduism, some Hindus including Mahatma Gandhi felt that religion was not a thing which could be ordered at the whims and fancies of the person concerned. Mahatma Gandhi said: It is unfortunate that Ambedkar has declared his resolve to abandon the Hindu religion. But conversion is not going to serve his purpose. Religion is not like a house or coat which can be changed whenever one feels like it. Ambedkar, on the other hand, felt that man is not born for religion. But conversion is not going to serve his purpose. Religion is not like a house or coat which can be changed whenever one feels like it. Ambedkar, on the other hand, felt that man is not born for religion. Religion is created by man and, therefore, it should work for the welfare of man. A religion which does not respect, equality, liberty and fraternity among all its adherents is not a religion but a felony. It sounds strange but yet it is true that Hinduism shows love, respect and sympathy for the animals, birds, stones, woods, etc., but it does not consider man as man and even the co-religionists are not shown any sympathy and love. While speaking at the Mahar conference in 1936 on the question of conversion to any other religion, Dr. Ambedkar said: I have decided once and for all to give up this religion. My religious conversion is not inspired by any material motive. There is hardly anything that I cannot achieve while remaining an untouchable. There is no other feeling than that of spiritual feeling underlying my religious conversion. Hinduism does not appeal to my conscience. My self-respect cannot assimilate Hinduism. In your case, change of religion is imperative for worldly as well as spiritual ends. Do not care for the opinion of those who foolishly ridicule the idea of your conversion for material ends. Of what avail is the religion that deals with life after death. A rich man's sense may be tickled by this idea in his leisure time. Those who are well placed and prosperous in this world may pass life in contemplation of life after death. But why should be live under the fold of that religion which has deprived you of honor, money, food and shelter? The result was confusion for those people who feared that change of religion by the untouchables was going to divide the Hindu society; Ambedkar believed that since there was no social relationship between them in matters such as dining and marriage, there was no need to be disturbed about it. He thus said in the same conference: therefore, nobody can say that by change of religion of the untouchables, Hindu society would be divided into two pieces. You will be just as different to them after conversion as you are to the Hindus today. Nothing new is going to happen.

Conversion back to Buddhism

As a profound life long student of anthropology Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar made a remarkable discovery that the Mahar people are originally ancient Buddhist people of India. They have been forced outside a village to live like an outcast as they refused to leave Buddhist practices and eventually they were made into untouchables. He wrote a scholarly book on this topic- Who were Sudras? How they became Untouchables. Ambedkar, with his followers embraced Buddhism Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar studied Buddhism all his life, and around 1950s, Ambedkar turned his attention fully to Buddhism and travelled to Sri Lanka (then Ceylon) to attend a convention of Buddhist scholars and monks. While dedicating a new Buddhist vihara near Pune, Ambedkar announced that he was writing a book on Buddhism, and that as soon as it was finished, he planned to make a formal conversion back to Buddhism. Ambedkar twice visited Burma in 1954; the second time in order to attend the third conference of the World Fellowship of Buddhists in Rangoon. In 1955, he founded the Bharatiya Bauddha Mahasabha, or the Buddhist Society of India. He completed his final work, The Buddha and His Dhamma, in 1956. It was published posthumously.

India got Independence 55 years ago, till today Dalit has to suffer for basic needs for their day to day living i.e. Drinking water, food, shelter and Right to live as a human being in society. The Untouchables "Dalit" were denied even Human Rights, which are essential for a bare existence of human life. They were not allowed to drink water from public well; and even their shadow was supposed to pollute the so-called upper Castes. The Hindu social order made the life of the Dalit miserable in every sense of the term. The Hindu Dharmashastra gave sanction to this evil Caste system and the practice of Untouchability. This continued for the Centuries.

Babasaheb Ambedkar raised the banner of Buddhism and brought back to his motherland the Buddha who suffered an exile for over twelve hundred years. Ambedkar, a man of provocative learning, challenged opponents of Buddhism to hold discussions with him, and was confident that he would defeat all Pandits. He propagated Buddhism in India. He made the provision for the study of Pali in the Indian constitution. The Government of India had declared Buddha Jayanti a holiday mainly through his efforts. Dr. Ambedkar was the greatest Pioneer of Buddhist revival in India. India, no doubt, continues to be proud of its Buddhist heritage. Since regaining independence, Buddhist symbols like the Wheel of Dhamma and the Asoka Capital, have become national symbols and the Mathura Buddha adorns the house of Parliament and inspires Indian lawmakers. The Buddha established a classless society by opening the gates of the Sangha to all deserving individuals, making no distinction between caste and class. The fundamental principle of Buddhism is equality... Buddhism was called the religion of the Shudra's. There was only one man who raised his voice against separatism and Untouchability and that was Lord Buddha... Buddhism is the only religion, which does not recognize caste and affords full scope for progress. Ambedkar's speech on the Eve of the great conversion at Nagpur on October 14, 1956, Dr. Ambedkar said Buddhism can serve not only this country, India, but the whole World at this juncture in the world affairs; Buddhism is indispensable for world peace you must pledge today that you, the followers of Buddha, will not only work to liberate yourself, but will try to elevate your country and the world in general.

Fifty-five years after independence, Caste prejudices in India have not erased very much. And now there is a deliberate attempt to revive these prejudices to their former position. Grundtvig's conception about Nordic mythology and Christian "Anskuelese" may be compared with Ambedkar's views on the original tradition of Buddhism as a source of inspiration. In describing the work of on Buddhism, he said "we have started this movement to develop and educate our minds" Explaining the need for religion among the poor as a need arising for hope, Ambedkar referred to a German professor of his, Professor Wintermitz. "The Water-gang Rabelan Depth was the book which he recommended and by which I was much inspired. It is only the poor, he said, who need religion." Hope is the spring of action in life. Religion affords hope. Therefore, mankind finds solace in the religion, and that is why the poor cling to religion."

Those who are turned to Buddhism, but remained within Hinduism, but wanted Hinduism to change, Ambedkar made the following suggestion: "You must give a new doctrinal basis to your religion-a-basis that will be in consonance with Liberty, Equality and Fraternity, in short, with Democracy." Dr. Baba Saheb Ambedkar once commented, "Dalit representatives elected from reserved seats open their mouth in the Indian parliament only when they have to yawn." It was the Buddha who, for the first time in the known history of mankind, attempted to abolish slavery and "invented the higher morality and the idea of the brotherhood of the entire human race, and in striking terms condemned" the degrading caste-system which in Indian society at that time was firmly rooted. The Buddha declared: "By birth is not one an outcast, By birth is not one a Brahmin, By deeds is one an outcast, By deeds is one a Brahmin." Dr. Ambedkar in His book "Annihilation of Caste" reproduces his major difference with the Mahatma Gandhi. While he was for abolition of the caste system, prescribed by Hindu sage Manu, Gandhi was for giving up caste prejudice, and for reform of the system, so that the stigma of Untouchability may be removed, but function of various castes remains. As Dr. Ambedkar could not abolish the caste system, when Mahatma Gandhi asked for dedication on the shared cause of struggle for freedom, he asked for separate electorates for the so-called “outcastes” whom the Mahatma called “Harijan”- sons of the ‘God’

Buddhism as a social, democratic Doctrine

Buddhism makes enlightenment the sole aim of life. This was the philosophy that Ambedkar accepted and tried to revive. Besides this there was another reason. Buddha, whose life and movement Ambedkar had studied, was a believer of the educability and the creativity of the people. Under the influence of those teachings, the most rejected peoples of India has once risen and uplifted their life as well as that of the whole society. If that was once possible in India, it must be possible again. He had a solid historical basis to trust India’s ordinary folk as India’s future democrats. This is what Jawaharlal Nehru wrote of the commitment of Ambedkar to the untouchables: “Dr.B.R.Ambedkar would be remembered mostly as the symbol of revolt against all the oppressing features of Hindu society. In a way he symbolized the hopes and aspiration of the oppressed and the Untouchables.” Buddha was the first religious leader of the world, who expounded peace and equality in the history of man. Five precepts (Panchsheel) of Buddha’s life are principles of building world peace the precepts Panchsheel based on Buddha’s life would help to build world peace and harmony among the Nations. Our Humanity is cultivated through our emotions. Each day we should look not only to be moved by others, But also to move them through kindness, patience and caring. Said Venerable Master Hsing Yun. It is my hope and prayer that we will always live a happy, joyful, peaceful life based on non-violence, truth, equality, love and compassion, this great message of Buddha is relevant today.

Conclusion:

Dr B R Ambedkar was the true follower of Buddhism which is reflected in each and every aspect of his life and also reflected in his social, Political as well as in all democratic deeds.

Abstract

The life of B.R. Ambedkar mirrors the story of struggle and his importance in re-establishing the identity of human in the form of dalits, women, poor, downtrodden and the lagged behind is undeniable. In the eyes of Babasaheb the women race is 'doubly marginalised' especially in the case of dalit women. Ambedkar first validated the question of 'self esteem' of the dalit women. Breaking the shackles of all conservations, he stood beside these marginalised groups and in doing so he presented Hindu Code Bill in the legislature. His main focus in establishing the women rights was the question of right to property for the daughters. His unquestionable quest against gender inequality in India and his impact on empowering women even in 21st century is the solo concern of this article. The objective of this study is to find out how Ambedkar fought the societal inequalities in the purview of women race and put forth a new narrative.

Key words: gender inequality, self-esteem, Hindu Code Bill, dalit, rights.

Introduction:

India being a heterogeneous land experiences the cultural, social, regional complexities and diversities. Amongst all these the issue of gender biasness is a serious concern for our society. Although instances of women during Vedic period holding high esteem is evident, till women all over India have always played a subordinate role. Women in the words of Aristotle be regarded as "inferior type of man." The hegemonic patriarchal society has victimised the women race in different ways. The victimization came in the form of child marriage, sati practice, superstitions, dowry and tortures. The status of women continued to deteriorate during the age of Smriti (A.D. 500- A.D 1800) and Muslim rule till they almost lost all status in society. During the British rule legislations were enacted to raise the status of women and prominent figures like Ram Mohan Roy, Vidyasagar, Ranade, Vivekananda, Dayanand Saraswati, Annie Besant, Mahatma Gandhi made strenuous efforts to regain the recognition of women. To give women respectful status in the society several initiatives were taken during the pre independence era. Sarojini Naidu, Mera Ben, Sucheta Kriplani, Vijaya Lakshmi pandit, Aruna Asaf Ali were some of the leading women freedom fighters who emerged as a counter discourse against the prevalent patriarchal construct. Education of women was encouraged, the age of marriage raised, employment and deployment of women in several fields was introduced. The Britishers also paid attention to ameliorate the condition of women holistically. Participation of women in education and other societal dimensions where are also highlighted. But after the independence the role and status of women have been gradually increased. In spite of several maladies India has produced women as a president, prime minister, speakers, chief ministers, governors, justices, police officers, Navy officers etc. Last 50 years has seen tremendous transformation of women as they are participating in every field to equate themselves with the male. In the words of Nehru, "If you educate a man you educate an individual, however, if you educate a woman you educate a whole family. Women empowered means Mother India Empowered.”- Jawaharlal Nehru.

At this juncture I would like to put forth Dr BR Ambedkar to validate my argument. This person fought for the rights of women and give them status in the constitution and society making them self reliant. Women suffered a lot due to improper implementation of laws, administration and ignorance. But it was Ambedkar who to highlighted the issues and challenges of women in Indian society and eradicating them with his own initiatives for the upliftment of the economical, social and political status of women. His objective was to empower women in the community. The socio-political fabric of India was woven by this great soul who drafted the constitution. His role and vision for women empowerment has tried to establish a society where discrimination, operation and exploitation do not exist. Considering the societal structure of India he subtly introduces women rights under the constitution of India to secure equality and dignity for women. The journey of the women of this 21st century from the periphery to the centre is no doubt due to the tremendous contribution of Dr Ambedkar.

Objective of the study & Methodology used:

The objective of this paper is to find out the importance of Dr Ambedkar in relation to the empowerment of women and his far fetched impact on the present society. His impact before and after the independence of India is a pertinent issue when we are discussing disparities especially about gender. Ambedkar’s vision works as a sleuth for generations to come. The present paper is a qualitative study based on secondary data and descriptive in nature out of which Ambedkar’s views on ameliorating the condition of women is explored.

Ambedkar and Women Education:

“I measure the progress of a community with the degree of progress of women have achieved.”

The above remark by B.R. Ambedkar upholds his attitude towards women race. He firmly believed that the development of a country can only be achieved with the development of women. In protecting the dignity of women he championed all the barriers against women. Providing education, giving equal opportunity and socio-cultural rights he wanted to uplift and empower Indian women before and after independence. He also advocated the participation and active role of women in social reform. Once he commented, “we shall see better days soon and our progress will be accelerated if male education is persuaded side by side with female education.” From the beginning he realised that the tool ‘education’ is instrumental in empowering women. Therefore, the status which was inferior to men and also belong to the lagged behind classes started changing with the influence of this stalwart. He visualised education as a tool which not only brings changes in others but also develops one’s own existence. He dreamt of a society where liberation of women from all kind of bondages. He wanted his country women to be economically and socially self dependent. In doing this the transfusion of education among women according to him, was a must. With his zeal and determination he succeeded in uplifting the marginalised. Empowerment suggests giving power to someone by means of any medium, here education for women plays a pivotal role in establishing a democratic society where equality will prevail irrespective of genders, castes, creeds. The encouragement in empowering women had always come from Dr Ambedkar and his family.

Ambedkar Fighting Gender Inequalities :

Participation of women in every field and giving back them their due share was the objective of Ambedkar. His way of empowering women and fighting gender inequalities was different from that of other social reformers. He was the chairman of the drafting committee of the constitution. He took this opportunity and laid down several provisions in the constitution to bring about a revolutionary change in the status of women. As a result of this the last 70 years have witnessed perceivable change in the condition of women in India. The legislations are brought to provide equal opportunities to all and eliminating every kind of discrimination in the society. Ambedkar was always vocal for the underprivileged, marginalised and subjugated. Therefore, for women those who belong to the category of the lagged behind, his contribution towards women can be described as an effort to ameliorate the 'doubly marginalized'. One of his greatest success was The Hindu Succession Act, 1956 where women got equal rights in inheriting his family property. Apart from these The Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, The Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961 needs special mention to understand the contribution of this person in restoring the status of women. Before independence this struggle and restoration of female status had no legal stand but after independence Ambedkar along with other social reformers put forth several legislations to ensure gender equality. Giving facilities to women - the daughter, the widow, the wife, the mother removed inequality and external barriers to establish the right of women. Ambedkar's quest against the commodification of women race gained success through his laws enacted in the constitution. Laws for the empowerment of women in India like The Equal Remuneration Act, 1976 and Prohibition of Child Marriage Act, 2006 are the offshoots of his thoughts. His tremendous fight against the Hindu orthodoxy and providing opportunities for the 'untouchables' and women will always be remembered. He dreamt of a society based on justice and equality everybody will enjoy freedom setting aside any kind of oppression.

If we go through the Indian constitution we shall find that the very preamble upholds the concept of social, economical and political justice for all. The fundamental rights also endorses freedom from oppression and equal opportunity for all. It would be unjust if I don't mention the constitutional provisions for women to improve their position in the society. The article 14 of the Indian constitution guarantees equality and equal protection of law which satisfies the parameter of ensuring equality. The next article also prohibits any kind of discrimination on the grounds of religion, race, caste, sex or birth place. Article 16 provides equal opportunity in the matters of public employment. Therefore, the women race who had been suffering several ordeals, now received a legal standpoint to fight back or acclaim the position which they really deserve. Apart from these Prohibition in trafficking human beings and forced labour, providing equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work also consolidates the argument. The fundamental duties in 51A also provides provisions for the dignity of women and reservation of Women in legislation or participatory democracy shows women being empowered. The fundamental rights, fundamental duties, DPSPs show how through constitution women are being given power to enjoy justice in a society which was predominantly a patriarchal one.

On the basis of Ambedkar's achievements the central government it and the state governments of India implemented several projects and schemes to fight inequalities and uplift the position of women in the social strata. In Indian federal structure several initiatives for women like Beti Bachao Beti Padhao, Ujjawala, Poshan Abhiyan, Ladli Lakshmi Yojna, Nari, Kanyashree and many more are active in taking the women forward. Moreover, schemes empowering women financially to live a better life and chase their dreams being an entrepreneur are also running. Under Stand Up India scheme huge amount of loans are also sanctioned to improve and strengthen women financially and socially. Several NGOs are also working hand in hand with the government to provide assistance to the women and facilitating their condition. All such things initiated with the enactment of our constitution and legislation and the man who's importance can never be denied behind fighting every inequalities is Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar.

Relevance of Ambedkar in Today's Society:

In spite of the societal obstacles women in today's Indian society has emerged as a coherent identity. Their journey from the periphery to the centre is not a cakewalk, even in today's world they go through several barriers but an upward graph in their journey is quite perceivable. All this is happening due to the government schemes as mentioned above, just administration and following the safeguards of the constitution. Women today can well acclaim their position as ample opportunities have been provided in our federal structure. If you look deep into the matter we will see that these changes have come very much from the constitution, legislations, schemes especially after the independence. Uplifting women in the society has a long history in India but the sleuth set by Dr. Ambedkar is very much pertinent in today's context. His continuous efforts in arising the matter of women problems and their upliftment in the viceroy's executive council or in the parliament in post independence era. He family believe that until the women are not actively participating their position cannot be uplifted. But at the same time he provided security and social status to women by implementing laws. His quest in empowering and making the women self reliant is obviously a relevant issue in India today. His Hindu Code Bill will remain as one of the most determining deeds in Indian history. Rise of girl child in formal education, emergence of women in working sector and gaining social status similar to that of male in a society are due to the contributions of this stalwart as he not only advocated the issues but also logically gave solutions to those problems in securing and restoring the status of women in this modern India. The acts like The Maternity Benefit Act, 1961, The Sexual Harassment of Women at Work Place Act, 2013 justify visions of Babasaheb Ambedkar who dreamt of an India where people from every section will enjoy freedom and equality. Therefore, Ambedkar's "educate, agitate and organise" message and his contributions are very much part of our lives even in today's society to bring positive changes.

Conclusion:

"What are we having this liberty for? We are having this liberty to reform our social system, which is full of inequality, discrimination and other things, which conflict with our fundamental rights."

[Dr. B.R. Ambedkar]

Apart from annihilating caste system Dr. Ambedkar unequivocally worked for empowering women fighting gender inequalities in a society which was very much patriarchal in nature. Out of the above mentioned activities of Ambedkar we can think about Dalit feminism where IEA marginalisation occurs from both ends ; joint oppression of caste and gender. For Pundit Nehru, Babasaheb Ambedkar 'was a symbol of revolt' against all discrimination in the society. His contribution in in breaking the shackles of social stratification, transfusion of education among all the sectors equally, providing provisions of freedom and opportunity for all irrespective of cast creed gender and religion established him in such a position whom we can look up to as the one who not only restructured our society but also presented a bright visionary future for India. His educational philosophy, socio economic perspective, political vision reshaped the society holistically and even in 21st century his relevance can be claimed. My concluding words on the society which is best on gender equality will be borrowed from this great soul – “Unity is meaningless without the accompaniment of women. Education is fruitless without educated women, and vegetation is incomplete without the strength of women.” Therefore, fighting gender inequalities is must for any unified society and Babasaheb dedicated his heart and soul for this purpose to held India's head high.

Abstract

Deccan Plateau had witnessed the flowering growth and spread of the Buddhist thought, culture and Sanskrit Scholarship during the Pre colonial era. The post British Invasion period beginning from Mahatma Phuley to Ambedkar , be aptly described as the dawn of social reforms and revolution in the history not only of Maharashtra but country as a whole. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, a crusader against the caste system, a valiant fighter for the cause of the downtrodden in India but also an elder statesman and national leader whose contribution in the form of the Constitution of India will be cherished forever by posterity. The relevance of his philosophy of education with the movements of liberation of depressed classes, which are in turn based on education for all. Ambedkar's educational philosophy in regards to the motto of the organisation would be 'Educate, Agitate and Organise.' From this point of view he advised the downtrodden classes to realize that without education their existence is not safe. His vision and ideas on education necessitate a study of Ambedkar while seeking to amplify the ignored voices through education.

Key words: social revolution, philosophy of education, liberation of depressed classes, marginalized community, 'Educate, Agitate and Organise'

Introduction

"Education is something which ought to be brought within the reach of every one." "The object of primary education is to see that every child that enters the portals of a primary school does leave it only at a stage when it becomes literate and continues to be literate throughout the rest of his life."

- Dr. B.R. Ambedkar

Maharashtra, an ancient land in the Deccan, has witnessed the flowering, growth and spread of the Buddhist thought and culture and Sanskrit Scholarship also see the rise of Indian Nationalism in the form of Shivaji the Great, in Mahatma Phuley, a contemporary of Karl Marx, the 'patria protestas' of the Indian social revolution and the first leader of the peasants. Lokmanya Tilak has been accredited as the Father of Indian unrest, Ranade as the Father of Indian socio-economic thought, Gokhale as the thinker whom no less a person than Mahatma Gandhi acclaimed as his political Guru and Savarkar as an ardent revolutionary. In Shahu Chhatrapati, we had a unique king who was a relentless fighter for social equality.

The dawn of social revolution

Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, affectionately known as 'Babasaheb', was born on 14 April 1891 in a community which suffered Oppression for centuries. The social oppression and disability attached to him on the ground that he was born to Mahar parents could not prevent him from realising his dreams. His love for learning led him to obtain the highest academic degrees available to any person during those days. Dr. Ambedkar graduated from Bombay University in 1912. thereafter, he went abroad to pursue higher studies.

Dr. Ambedkar was one of the most qualified persons of his time who had such high academic distinctions to his credit. His burning passion to fight against injustice made him a natural leader of the oppressed and the downtrodden sections of Indian society who were persecuted for centuries.

The period from Phuley to Ambedkar can, therefore, be aptly described as the dawn of social revolution in the history not only of Maharashtra but country as a whole. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, we have not only a crusader against the caste system, a valiant fighter for the cause of the downtrodden in India but also an elder statesman and national leader whose contribution in the form of the Constitution of India will be cherished forever by posterity.

Ambedkar and his Philosophy of Education

Ambedkar remains just a constitution maker for millions of people of this country, not even upper caste media is sensitive to his ideas on education and liberation. His philosophy of education should have been discussed separately and implemented in India's education system. It will take some time to address the educational process that Ambedkar's pedagogy teaches for the students of this country. If his ideas in the field of education, whether it was primary or university education, were accepted they would make great a new addition to India's educational philosophy.

“Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar was a symbol of revolt against all oppressive features of the Hindu Society.” His philosophy of life was influenced by Buddha, Kabir, Mahatma Phule, Shahu Maharaj and so on. He presented his reformist suggestions on the Educational rights of the depressed classes.

Equal Opportunity for all

He was a person with high intellect and was trained under the then distinguished scholars like John Dewey, Charles Beard and R. A. Seligman (Sirswal, 2011). Ambedkar, who developed an almost doctrinal belief in the efficacious and transformatory character of education, held that education must be available to all, irrespective of caste or status. “Education is something which ought to be brought within the reach of everyone.” (Ambedkar 1982: 40) He examined the education policy of the British in India and found that Education in India had always remained restricted to the members of the upper stratum of society.

Ambedkar's important contribution to the education sector was his belief that ‘Education is something, which ought to be brought within the reach of every one’. He urged this plea because he felt that, “we are arriving at a stage when the lower orders of society are just getting into the high schools, middle schools and colleges, and the policy of this department therefore ought to be to make higher education as cheap to the lower classes as it can possibly be made.” (Ambedkar 1982: 40-41)

The People's Education Society's objective is not merely to give instructions, but to impart such education as promotes intellectual, moral and social democracy. This is what modern India needs and this is what all well-wishers of India must promote, held Ambedkar. The motto of the People's Education Society is ‘Knowledge and Compassion’. The Society had made good progress in this direction; running a number of colleges. (Kadam 1993: 210-211)

Ambedkar's Vision on Dalit Education

Ambedkar was very much influenced by Dewey's ideas on scientific method, experimental approach, democracy and pragmatism in the field of education. He insisted that to his Dalit people, 'Educate to organize and to Struggle' for their own betterment using whatever educational facilities.

Education is not only a layer for their social mobility but also opens the doors for their modernization.

Ambedkar has been described as a philosopher, a patriot, scholar or a writer, the constitution maker, a social revolutionary, a humanistic thinker, or the socialist and he had also contributed a great deal to the cause of education. He mainly emphasized that the education as a vital force for individual development and social change. Ambedkar envisaged that, education was an instrument for the change of the lives of untouchables. He declared that the elevation of the depressed classes was recognized to be the cause of all the enlightened people in the country.

He thought that education would enlighten his people and bridge the gap between the rich and the poor to which the untouchables belong. Education plays an important role. It is an effective instrument of mass movement to safeguard life and liberty. Education could encourage the oppressed ones to fight and remove injustice and exploitation and pave ways for the free thinking.

He recognized that, lack of education was the main cause for the backwardness of poor people. Educate, agitate and organize are three final words of our savior. According to Ambedkar one must get educated before he is conducting agitated thoughts for the movement, so that people can organize with his support. A singular role that Ambedkar played in the upliftment of the untouchables in the early 20th century and the importance that he gave to modern education for their betterment deserves special emphasis.

In conferences, lectures and also in meetings, Ambedkar encouraged untouchable youth to acquire education in order to raise their social status and image. His educational contribution starts on a wider scale of educating classes as well as masses starts with this work.

For Ambedkar, education was the main key to open the doors of light, vision and wisdom. He himself said, "Education is something which ought to be brought within the reach of every one. The object of primary education is of to see that every child that enters the portals of a primary school does leave it only at a stage when it becomes literate continuous to be literate throughout the rest of his life." Ambedkar's ideas for the untouchables was to raise their educational standards so that they may know their own condition, have aspirations and rise to the level of highest Hindu and be in the position to use political power as a means. This is best reflected in Ambedkar's famous slogan of Educate, Agitate and Organize.

Educate, Agitate, Organise

Ambedkar's project of educating the Dalits' began when he started the fortnightly 'Mook Nayak' in 1920. His mission and vision were revealed through publications of various magazines and journals, representations to government and related bodies for passing of legislatives helpful to promote the education of the depressed classes It finally culminated in the establishment of schools, colleges, hostels and other educational institutions under the aegis of the People's Education Society established in 1945. However, it is demeaning to isolate his educational goals from that of his social objectives.

What he wanted to achieve was the emancipation of the depressed classes, which was common to his varied, but inseparable projects - social and educational. Speaking on the occasion of the foundation of the Bahishkrit Hitakarini Sabha, the organisation which heralded his public life as the leader of the Dalits, Ambedkar declared that the motto of the organisation would be 'Educate, Agitate and Organise.' From this point of view he advised the backward classes to realize that without education their existence is not safe.”

In Ambedkar’s idea on educate, agitate and organize Ambedkar’s idea of giving education and equal opportunity to the people aims at removing the barriers in Indian Hindu religious caste system and development of backward caste as well as all marginalized communities. According to the social work students, educate agitate and organize means create power in people to experience basic rights in the society, to achieve success in the life and also struggle for social justice. In the social work field. Ambedkar’s idea about educate agitate and organize is very much relevant in the current context because in the Indian society, people are illiterate and they are not aware about education as well as their basic rights of the life, still people are facing caste discrimination in society and lack of support and motivation.

Educate, Agitate and organize must be maintained to see the effective results of the movement for the upliftment of our people. For the upliftment of the depressed classes he developed a programme of education as a part of the general manifesto of Indian Labor Party before the general elections of 1937. Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar recognized the importance of education in shaping the future and cautioned the under-privileged not to lose any opportunity, and said that “We may forego material benefits, but we cannot forego our rights and opportunities to reap the benefits of highest education to the fullest extent.” He put all his efforts to guarantee the educational without any discrimination to all the citizens of independent India.

Conclusion

Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar, the frontier of Dalits emphasizes on the need of education. He quotes “If you want to develop the society then you need to spread the education. Education eradicates the bias of people which results on to minimize the exploitation, domination, of those people who try to take the benefit of the so called illiterate people. If the people get knowledge through education then they can face the problems created by the dominators. Education reforms opinions, it tries to remove the walls built among the people. The biggest gift that is given by the education is that it creates self confidence among us which is considered as the first stage of our development.”

He regarded education as a means to reach the doors of light and perception to remove the regions of darkness and ignorance. He emphasised on secular education for social emancipation. The basic theme of his philosophy of education is: inculcating the values of liberty, equality, fraternity, justice and moral character among the boys and girls of all shades. By the way of his educational philosophy, I shall view that by experiencing full freedom of education without the barriers of any caste, creed and race; it is the best way for the enlightenment of human beings from ignorance.

Introduction

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar is considered the father of the Indian Constitution, his hard work resulted in the formation of one of the detailed and finest written constitutions in the World. Our Constitution-Making process took almost 3 years, every part of it was debated at length all of these efforts of our constitution makers resulted in a Constitution which is one of the marvelous pieces of work in the world.

This article focuses on the journey of our constitution-making process and the Contribution of Dr. Ambedkar in this journey. The second part of this article is focused on the Fundamental Rights and Directive Principle of State Policy and the last part of this article in brief mentions the Indian Judiciary and Parliaments' efforts in bringing the social transformation in the society.

Key Words: Constitution, Dr. Ambedkar, Fundamental Rights, Directive Principle of State Policy

Dr. Ambedkar was a social reformer, economist, and jurist he was born on 14th April 1891. He belonged to the „Mahar“ caste which is considered as low caste amongst the Hindu Caste system. Because of his caste Babasaheb has to struggle all his life, he thought that by gaining education he might be able to get recognition and equal status but to his disappointment, his caste was recognized before his achievements. During his childhood, he was discriminated against at school and when he took up any job there too he was made to feel humiliated. His life experience taught him the value of liberty and equality, so when he was given the opportunity to write the Indian Constitution he tried his best to make a constitution that is not only capable of securing everyone's rights but is also able to fulfill those rights. As a result, our Constitution doesn't only mention our rights in written form but compels the government to provide us these rights.

Constitution-Making

The journey of our constitution-making is quite interesting it started in 1934 itself when M. N. Roy for the first time demanded a Constitution Assembly for India. In 1935 the Indian National Congress too made the same demand, in 1940 the British Government finally accepted this demand, and in 1946 India got its Constituent Assembly under the Cabinet Mission Plan.

The first meeting of the Constituent Assembly took place on 9th December 1946 it was presided by Dr. Sachidanand. Various committees were formed to make the work of the constitution making easier and Dr. Ambedkar became part of one of the most important committees i.e. the Drafting Committee. This committee was set up on 29th August 1947 and it presented its first draft in Feb 1948 itself. This Draft was put forward for discussion, criticism, and suggestions and after receiving the feedback the committee presented its second draft in October 1948 and soon it presented its third Draft in November 1948. The first reading of this third draft lasted for five days and then the second reading of this draft started which lasted for 11 months and 2 days during this time almost 7653 amendments were proposed out of which 2473 were discussed. After the second reading the draft went on for the third reading² and it's during this time Dr. Ambedkar passed a motion for the passing of the Constitution as settled, and finally, on 26th November 1949, we adopted our constitution.

Fundament Rights and Directive Principle of State Policy

In total, the Draft Constitution was discussed for 114 days and the part of Fundamental Rights (FR"s) and Directive Principle of State Policy (DPSP) took the most of the time to be agreed upon, probably because of this Dr. Ambedkar described Fundamental Rights part as „most criticized part" of Indian Constitution. ³The reason why FR"s and DPSP took the most time is that there was a debate going on amongst the members of the Constituent assembly whether to make all rights as justiciable or to divide them and make one part justiciable and another part non-justiciable. While B.N. Rau, Krishnaswami Ayyar wanted the separation of rights Dr. Ambedkar, K.T. Shah, K.M. Munshi wanted all rights to be justiciable. The separation of rights was suggested because at the time of independence we had limited resources and before giving certain rights, first there was a need to generate resources only then they can be provided. For example, the right to education can't be given in absence of infrastructure, first infrastructure has to be created before providing this right. Those who opposed this separation was of the view that India is a country where poverty and illiteracy exist and if all the rights were not made justiciable then people will not be able to enjoy their non-justiciable rights as they will not ask for them due to ignorance or poverty and the state itself won't provide these rights because they are non-justiciable. During the debate, Dr. Ambedkar too realized that in absence of resources all the rights can't be provided hence he

- ²14th November 1949

³ See B. S.Rao. (1968). The Framing of India's Constitution: A Study. New Delhi: The Indian Institute of Public Administration. p. 179

too saw the need for the division of rights into two categories. After the debate, the rights were divided into two categories the Part III of the Constitution was made justiciable including all the important rights which are necessary for living a dignified life, and Part IV of the Constitution was made non-justiciable, which included those rights which our constitution-makers wanted us to give but in absence of resource, they left the fulfillment of these rights on the future government.

Another reason why FR and DPSP were debated at this length is that they are the core of the Indian Constitution. Both the FR"s and DPSP aims towards achieving social transformation, while the whole Constitution aims to achieve that but FR"s and DPSP have been given a very crucial role by our Constitution makers. Probably because of this Austin (2000) describes them as „Conscience of the Indian Constitution."⁴

The Part III of the Indian Constitution is dedicated to Fundamental Right which includes the Right to equality (Article 14-28), Right to Freedom (Article 19-22), Right against Exploitation (Article 23-24), Right to Religious Freedom (Article 25-28), Right dedicated to Culture, Education (Article 29-30), and⁵ Right to Constitutional Remedies (Article 32).

Dr. Ambedkar described Article 32 as the „Soul of the Indian Constitution“ as the remedies provided under Article 32 gives teeth to the Fundamental Rights because of which they just not remain written words. When a person’s rights get violated that person has the power to move to Supreme Court (SC) and ask for relief and enforcement of his Fundamental Rights.

The Part IV of the Constitution dedicated to the Directive Principle of State Policy, the rights and instructions mentioned in this Part from Article 36-51 are directives to the state, stating in which direction it is supposed to move, how it is supposed to achieve the social transformation of society and upliftment of the people. For example, Article 38 directs the state to „secure a social order for the promotion of the welfare of the people, Article 40 talks about „organization of village panchayats“, Article 46 directs the state to promote „educational and economic interests of Scheduled Caste, Scheduled Tribe and other weaker sections.“ Unlike Fundamental Rights, the Directive Principles are non-justiciable i.e. they can’t be enforced by the court. Since they don’t have legal backing hence they are often seen as rights that might end up as „pious wishes.“ Dr. Ambedkar had a different view about the ⁴*State, Democracy and Nations Building*. New Delhi: IGNOU, 2017. English. 2020. p.115 ⁵Article 31 of the Constitution was ‘Fundamental Right to Property’, it was repealed in 1978. ⁶*Ibid*. p. 7.17 backing of DPSP he stated that while the DPSP are not justiciable but the state will surely work towards fulfilling these rights because of the existence of adult suffrage the state will work towards fulfilling these rights not because they are justiciable in nature but because the state is answerable to the people. If the state won’t fulfill these rights then the people will have the power to oust the present government and bring in another elected government which will provide them the rights given in DPSP.

Contribution of B. R. Ambedkar in Constitution Making

B. R. Ambedkar played an important role in forming the Indian Constitution, he was the Chairmen of the Drafting Committee. He “created and also expanded normative spaces involving not just equality, liberty and rights, but also self-respect and dignity for the historically disadvantaged segments of the population.”⁷ Dr. Ambedkar called for the greater intervention of state he argued in favor of “greater state intervention for economic and social advancement because he felt that a strong state was needed „for safeguarding the interests of the downtrodden castes... he justified the importance of a strong state because „unless the state was roused to and empowered to intervene, liberal ends would not be achieved, and individuals would remain trapped in oppressive traditions and exploitative relations“ (Bajpai 2012, 74).”⁸

He wanted to use the Constitution to eliminate caste-based discrimination, empower women, and create a society in which despite all the diversity people belonging to different religions can co-exist peacefully and with dignity. Dr. Ambedkar insisted on Constitutional safeguard to protect the rights of the citizens from any violation, Article 32 and 226 of the constitution provides this safeguard. Babasaheb believed that only political power will be able to provide power to the depressed classes as a result he wanted a universal adult franchise as he believed that “universal adult suffrage consolidated the foundation of liberal democracy.”⁹

Efforts of Indian Judiciary and the Parliament:

In the last 71 years, we have come a long way both Indian Judiciary and the Parliament have played their part in bringing social transformation in the society. The Parliament has used its law-making and amending powers to fulfill the promises of our constitution-makers of a free and equal society. The judiciary has come up with various innovative measures to help the citizens of India and to protect the Constitution of India, in 1973 it came up with „basic structure“ doctrine according to which any change in the constitution can be made by the Parliament as long as that change doesn't change the „basic structure“ of the Constitution. After the internal emergency of 1975-77, it has come up with a Public Interest Litigation

The Parliament too has played its part it has worked towards providing the fundamental rights to all its citizens and to provide the rights provided in the DPSP to its citizens. Its constant efforts have led to the inclusion of the Right to Education in Fundamental Rights under Article 21A not only this it has also used its amending powers to include some more directives in the DPSP, including the directive to provide free legal aid under Article 39A.

Conclusion

Dr. Ambedkar wanted to create an egalitarian society, he tried to make our constitution as detailed as possible. He put his faith in the Indian Judiciary and the Parliament for achieving a society that is free of class exploitation, caste exploitation, and where women enjoy equal status as of men. The efforts of the Babasaheb have resulted in a more egalitarian society where caste atrocities have come down, women are getting recognition and the poor are also getting the opportunity to reach up. The hard work of Babasaheb has paid off to a great extent, while we have not yet achieved the bright future that he sought for us but we are on that road and if all of us will work together then soon we will be able to achieve India of his dream.

Introduction

“Education is not only the birthright of every human being but also a weapon of social change.”

- Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar

Education is a key of social progress. It helps man to outgrow the crippling influences of ignorance and superstition and enables him to develop his potentialities to the maximum extent possible. It makes man conscious of his rights as well as obligations towards his fellow beings. Therefore, education is the best possible means to bring about an egalitarian society and very important instrument of social change. Ambedkar was conscious of the backwardness of downtrodden people in education. Undoubtedly he is an outstanding figure among almost all-prominent theoreticians of modern India. As observed by John Adams, “Education is the dynamic side of philosophy” is particularly true in the case of Ambedkar who was a nationalist soul reformer and philosopher of India. he has started his educational activities by setting up the Bahishkrit Hitkari Sabhs as early as early as in 1924. The sabha advanced the cause the causes of education and particularly higher education and culture among the depressed classes by opening colleges, college's libraries, social centers and study circles. It also published monthly magazine under the title 'Saraswati Belas which was connected by students under sabha's direction and guidance. His educational activities were not acknowledged much in society as compared to his activities in other fields.

Objectives:

1. To study Dr.BabasahebAmbedkar'sContribution in the Field of Education.
2. To study acquaint with his philosophy of life and leadership.

Methodology:

This paper is based on documentary study. The researcher has taken a few books from library and collected some documents from various sources. Some places by the help of internet & certain information have been collected.

Conceptual Framework

Ambedkar's three principles, be educate, be organized and agitate, occupied not only the first place in the in the process of education by chance but it generates reason and by education only ne can be self-enlightened. This can succeed in struggle to participate in social progress. Ambedkar stated, "Education is that which make men fearless, teach unity, make understand their birth rights and teach them to struggle and fight for the freedom." Education is a revolution. If education cannot serve these purposes, then such education is a dead one and better it should be burnt or set to fire. According to ambedkar that is not education which do not make capable, do not teach equality and morality, but the true education is that which safeguards the interests of the humanity and provides bread, knowledge and feeling equality in the society. True education really creates life in the society

Meaning of Education:

Education is a key of social progress. It helps man to outgrow the crippling influences of ignorance and superstition and enables him to develop his potentialities to the maximum extent possible. It makes man conscious of his rights as well as obligations towards his fellow beings. Therefore, education is the best possible means to bring about an egalitarian society and very important instrument of social change. Dr. Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar said, "Education is not only the birthright of every human being but also a weapon of social change."

Goal of Education:

The goal of education is one of the important aspect of educational philosophy. Ambedkar's sociophilosophical thoughts are based on social humanism. In the socio-philosophy of BabaSaheb, the "place of selfrespect and human pride was the greatest and most important. Through education he wanted to develop the qualities of justice, equality, brotherhood, fearlessness, it was necessary for him to establish a moral order in society. For establishing a moral order in society, morality as a goal of education should be given due importance. Dr Ambedkar said, "Education is what makes a person fearless, teaches him the lesson of unity, makes him aware of his rights and inspires him to struggle for his rights." His slogan was "Educate, Unite, Agitate".

Ambedkar was influenced by Buddhism and as such believed in developing a moral man and a moral structure in the society. He recommended only those goals of education, which have rational relevance to human happiness, prosperity and social development. He was also in favor of making education such that at will be able to provide employment. Thus education brings stability in society. Good behavior and character depend upon reason and preseason's gets its place due to education, experience and interview. So the goals of education as enumerated by Ambedkar are marked by his outlook on life and his social, economic and political ideas. In his pursuit of education, he was always scientific and rational in his outlook.

Growth and development of ethics:

Ambedkar believed in the development of morality, which is universal in character. By sacred, he meant that it could not be violated. Social needs common models and common standards and the growth of individual are the factors on which his concept of sacred morality resets.

According to him

1. Believe in the supernatural is not – dhamma.
2. Believe in Ishwara (god) is not essentially part of dhamma.
3. Dhamma based on union with Brahmins is a false dhamma.
4. Belief in soul is not –dhamma.
5. Belief in sacrifices is not dhamma.
6. Belief based on speculation is not dhamma.
7. Reading books of dhamma is not dhamma.
8. Belief in the infallibility of books of dhamma is not –dhamma.

He wanted to develop purity of mind, prajana (insight), Sila (Achar Dhamma or acting a rights), Karuna (love for human beings) and maitri (Love for living beings) Among human beings. Indian society is basically a rational society based on religion. The state is secular in principle.

Literacy:

He was of the view that one should be literate throughout his life. Discussing the object of primary education he has said, "The object of primary education is to see that every child that enters the portals of a primary school does leave it only at a stage when it becomes literate and continues to be literate throughout the rest of his life." They are dealt with in the following rules:-

1. To the Brahmins he (the creator) assigned teaching and studying the Veda.
2. The Kshatriya he (the creator) commanded to study the Veda.
3. The Vaishya the (creator) commanded to study the Veda.
4. He who shall acquire knowledge of vedha without the assent of his preceptor, incurs the guilt of stealing the scripture, and shall sink to the region of torment.
5. He (the twice born) must never read (the veda)-in the presence of the Shudras.
6. Women have no business with the text of the veda.
7. A twice born man who has –(improperly) divulged the veda (i.e.to Shudras and women) (commits sin), atones for his offence, if he subsists a year on barley.)

The Brahmins, kshatriya and Vishay can study the Vedas. Of these the Brahmins alone have the right to teach the Vedas. But in the case of the Shudras, he is not permitted to study the Vedas and he should not even be allowed to hear it read.

The successor of Manu made the disability of Shudras in the matter of the study of the Vedas into offence involving dire penalties.

For instance Gautama says- If the shudra intentionally listens for committing to memory the Veda, then his ears should be filled with (molten) lead and lac; if he utters the Veda, then his tongue should be cut off; if he has mastered the Veda his body should be cut to pieces.

Ambedkar firmly said,-"But I cannot wait to dilate upon this. am more immediately concerned in showing how the prohibition against the study of the Vedas to the mass of the people came to give rise to illiteracy and ignorance in secular life." The answer is easy. It must be realized that reading and writing have an integral connection with the teaching and study of the Vedas.

Realizing the role of education in self preservation he said, "Every one must have education. Means of defense everyone must have means of defense. These are the paramount requirements of every man for his self preservation.

Spirit of knowledge

The modern world's knowledge is exploding beyond our imagination. Ambedkar realizing the importance of knowledge has identified aims and functions of higher education. "the aims and functions of university education should be to see that the teaching carried on there is suited to adults; that it is scientific, detached and impartial in character, that it aims not so much at filling the mind of the student with fact or theories as at calling forth his own individuality, and stimulating him to mental effort; that it accustoms him to the critical study of the leading authorities, with perhaps, occasional reference to first hand sources of information , and that it implants in his mind a standard of thoroughness, and gives him a sense of the difficulty as well as the value of reaching at truth.. He should become able to examine a suggested idea, and see what comes out of it, before accepting it or rejecting it. without neccerally becoming an original students he should gain an insight in to the conditions under which orgional research carried on he should able to weight evidence, to follow and criticize argument and put his own value on authorities." Like Greek philosophers Socrates and Plato and other philosopher john lack and rossel he also believed that training of mind knowledge and courage are the virtues that education produce.

Ideal teacher

Ambedkaar has given great importance to the roll of a teacher teaching to learning process. Ambedkar told, "the role of teacher is to evoke and waken the student's mental faculties. They should guide the students in brief; a teacher should friend, guide and philosher to his students. He was opinion that a teacher not be only sincere and intelligent but he must be motivated by the dynamics of a social purpose and mucst at as the scourge and the scavenger of the society. Only he may command respect and reverence from his students religing the role of teacher he said , "lectures have not lost their use and books can never fully take the place of the living spoken word.

Student

1. Dr. Ambedkar expect from students to be unwavering and commendable to take education.
2. Students should be always ready and curious to learn
3. Student should be aware and careful about his health also

Women education

He introduced the Hindu code bill which legalized only monogamous marriages. The code also conferred the right to property and adoption to women, which was denied by Manu. It treated man and women on equal footing in all legal matters. B.R. Ambedkar criticized those roles that could lead women to ignorance. He demanded for economic independence and self-reliance for women. His Hindu code bill was criticized by persons like Pandit Madan Mohan Malviya and Dr. Shyama Prasad. But the passing of the bill was the first victory of women's struggle for equality gained in Indian history in the 20th century. Through the Hindu code bill B.R. Ambedkar may be supposed to be the pioneer of women's movement in India. Though various constitutional provisions like articles (14), 15(3), article 16(1), article 16(2). He forbade any discrimination against women. Regarding the women's education and personality development, B.R. Ambedkar's ideas are remarkable and similar to those voiced by the women liberation movement all over the world. He was in favour of giving compulsory education to women. But, general education may be given to them up to matriculation standard and after their needs and abilities should be considered while imparting education to them. He was aware of the special needs of women in education which were not equally considered by other educational philosophers of his time. He did not favour the same education to girl students as to the male student. He was of the opinion, "girls must be well-versed in home education." As a chairman of the drafting committee of Indian constitution he made certain provisions for the self-dependence of women.

Conclusion :

Ambedkar wanted the people to cultivate the values of freedom and equality among themselves; it is possible only through education. Dr. Ambedkar was a symbol of knowledge and character. He regarded education as a means to reach the doors of light and perception to remove the regions of darkness and ignorance. He used his philosophy of education to make aware of the condition of social degeneration in Hindu society among the lower strata of society and change the social order for the benefit of entire humanity. Through his educational institutes, he strives for educational development of all. He was an 'organic intellectual' in real sense. Dr. Ambedkar's contribution towards education and his independent thinking made him an independent intellectual of the world. He propounded his own philosophy of education and had largely influenced the outlook of the downtrodden. In order to honour his brilliant academic career his statue is placed at the entrance of London School of Economics and below that "Symbol of Knowledge" is written. It shows that how he was acclaimed as a great student and educationist of far excellence. Dr. Ambedkar's thoughts on education and his educational philosophy are relevant even today in the 21st Century for the socio-economic and political development of our country.

Abstract

Bhimrao Ramji Ambedkar, leader of the Dalits and the Law minister of the Indian government born to a Dalit Mahar family. He was humiliated by the high class community people in the school as well as in the society. He studied with the great help from the teacher Ambedkar and the Baroda King. But the ill-treatment continued. He turned as a legal practitioner and as a teacher. He soon succeeded in obtaining special representation for the lower class society and Dalits in the legislative council. He was the leader in framing the Law of Constitution of our Nation, outlawing discrimination against untouchability and helped the society in gaining their rights in the society.

Discrimination is can be done in the field of talent – high and low, this talent should be praised by the people and there is no other discrimination in the world. Discriminating people by their birth is not an intelligent activity but our nation is the only nation to discriminate people by birth, caste, creed, community, religion, and status. Moreover India has been treating in this way for many years. Among these activity the cruellest activity is on lower caste people is untouchability – The society discriminates the whole creed and were ill-treated. They were not allowed in the public places, not allowed to take water from the lake, and the cruellest activity neither allowed to enter the temple nor to step aside the temple.

The higher class sought all the domestic work from the lower class people for example, animals are allowed but these people are not allowed; milk is obtained from them but they were not allowed to take water from the public places. All these cruel activities were opposed and warred against and sought the rights and equal rights for the lower caste people by the great scholar Dr. Ambedkar.

Bhim Rao was the last child of the fourteen children for the parents Ramji and Bhim Bai. In 1891, on 14th of Monday in Maharashtra at Mogh, Bhim was born. Bhim Rao as other children, he too went to school for education purpose. School is the place of equality but the flat wooden benches were provided only for the higher class people whereas for lower class people had to sit on the floor. They were treated as untouchables. After seeing this Ambedkar's mind was boiled and the consequence of it was that he hesitated the school completely. The school teacher Ambedkar, a Brahmin who is of with unique character taught for the students. It was a good thing that happened for Bhim Rao was Ambedkar was his teacher. Though he belonged to lower class community, the teacher was so close to him and taught him to the core which enlightened him with extra ordinary knowledge. It is all because of the teacher he was able to, as well as continued his education. In order to respect him him he kept his name as Bhim Rao Ramji Ambedkar. There after everybody remembered him as Ambedkar and the name stood in our heart for ever. Ambedkar's heart was longing for studies.

He passionate towards education, learnt more, scored high marks. As days passed away, he and his society faced the problem of untouchability. With the help of his close friend Krishnaji, he was able to join the college, the Baroda King Chayaji helped Dr. Ambedkar in materialistic way. Thus in 1912 he received his BA degree.

He went to America to receive higher studies, The King's help was still continued. Almost eighteen hours he spent for his studies. In 1915 he received his MA degree and in 1916 he received PhD and the title "Philosophic Scholar". India portrayed and praised his extreme knowledge. "By 1927, Ambedkar had decided to launch active movements against untouchability. He began with public movements and marches to open up public drinking water resources. He also began a struggle for the right to enter Hindu temples. He led a Satyagraha in Mahad to fight for the right of the untouchable community to draw water from the main water tank of the town".

After his education he practised as lawyer and did social service for the lower caste people (argued for the lower caste people in the court and got justice for them). Many social activities were done for the people by Dr. Ambedkar. The fund he received from the committee was spent for the untouchable community. The untouchables were subjected to many increased social restrictions. Their touch was taken as a serious pollution to the higher class and much of rituals conducted by them for remedial purpose. In south side of India, even their sight of the untouchables were considered as pollution and many were forced to live a nocturnal existence. "These restrictions led many untouchables to seek some degree of emancipation through conversion to Christianity, Islam or Buddhism".

It was all because of Dr. Ambedkar's dedicated service to the society, the government allowed the lower class community in schools and in public places; no caste discrimination, with equal rights, all these facilities were passed by the government. People benefitted by this order. Everyone knows very well that he is the architect of the Indian constitution. He was very well known as a political leader, eminent jurist, Buddhist activist, philosopher, orator, writer, economist, and a great scholar. He fought to eradicate the evils in the society and fought for the rights of Dalits (Dalit is a vernacular form of the Sanskrit, this means "divided, split, broken, scattered") and other socially backward classes throughout his life.

In 1947 Dr. Ambedkar was appointed as first Law Minister in the Cabinet of Jawaharlal Nehru. He was appointed as the head of the committee for framing the law of constitution in India. But the team did not cooperate to frame the constitution. A legend, one man army Dr. Ambedkar created Law of Constitution for our nation. His dedicated work for the people, for the people and for the lower caste people are praised by every one for ever. He had received many titles and awards. But our nation awarded the Bharat Ratna, India's highest civilian honour in 1990 posthumously. He worked for the lower class people till his last breath.

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (1891-1956) who is well known as the 'Father of Indian Constitution' is a multi-faceted personality exhibiting in himself an iron-willed political leader, a par excellence freedom fighter, ideological thinker, shrewd philosopher, a social reformer, a great editor and so on. He is also well known for extensive economic and social rights for women. Ambedkar fought tooth and nail for women's economic liberation and for securing women's social rights. He stressed the need to safeguard the dignity and to respect the modesty of the women folk. The all-round development of women was his top most agenda and he left no stone unturned in achieving this goal. Empowerment is a multi-faceted, multi-dimensional and multi-layered concept. Babasaheb, as he is admiringly called, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was perhaps one of the biggest champions of women empowerment India has ever produced, around the period of the final days of its struggle for independence. Thus, to the very fortune of this country, the foundations of modern India and its constitutions had principles of women empowerment and gender equality embedded in it, owing to the contribution of Dr. Ambedkar, among others. Dr. Ambedkar, a social visionary aptly provided appropriate rights to women in the constitution. Dr. Ambedkar spent his life for the betterment of women even involved in bad practices and professions like prostitutions. Dr. Ambedkar tried an adequate inclusion of women's right in the political vocabulary and constitution of India. His deep concern and feelings for all round development of women is expressed from each sentence and word.

Introduction

I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress which women have achieved.

– Dr. B. R. Ambedkar

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar (1891-1956) who is well known as the 'Father of Indian Constitution' is a multi-faceted personality exhibiting in himself an iron-willed political leader, a par excellence freedom fighter, ideological thinker, shrewd philosopher, a social reformer, a great editor and so on. Dr. Ambedkar was one of the most outstanding intellectuals India has ever produced. Today's generation knows that Dr. Ambedkar is just limited to the constitution but he was more than what we know. He was economist, lawyer, social reformer etc. He was born on 14th April 1891 in Mhow, Madhya Pradesh. He was the first law and justice minister of our independent country and considered as the major architect of our constitution. In 1990, Government of India awarded him Bharat Ratna, India's highest civilian award for his contribution to our motherland. (Pritchett, Frances, 2011)

Dr. Ambedkar has worked for all sections of the society. His main objective of life was the equality and service to humanity. He campaigned against untouchability which was India's pioneer campaign and also inspired Dalit Buddhist Movement. His arguments on the measures for birth-control is another example that shows that he recommended the government to take the initiative to carry on an intensive propaganda in favour of birth control among the masses as well as to provide adequate facilities for the practice of birth- control. For this purpose, his advice was to promote Vasectomy. Therefore, in his opinion 'the Government and municipalities must provide facilities in this respect to their hospitals'. In the Bombay Legislature he moved the birth control bill and told the Assembly that he recommended the government that it should make necessary arrangements to educate people. This reflects his firm believe in the positive role of the government in eradicating this evil. His contribution for women also states his visionary empowerment of women. He is also well known for extensive economic and social rights for women. Ambedkar fought tooth and nail for women's economic liberation and for securing women's social rights. He stressed the need to safeguard the dignity and to respect the modesty of the women folk. The all-round development of women was his top most agenda and he left no stone unturned in achieving this goal. Baba saheb, as he is admirably called, Dr. B. R. Ambedkar was perhaps one of the biggest champions of women empowerment India has ever produced, around the period of the final days of its struggle for independence. One of his most important introductions towards the cause was the Hindu Code Bill. Dr Ambedkar's major concern for the status of women was reflected in this Bill. He had even remarked that his work on the latter, would be as important, as his work on the constitution itself, and mark a chapter of gender equality and justice, along with an exodus from ancient orthodox laws.

Methodology

The entire paper focuses on the contribution of Dr. Ambedkar towards women which is based on the secondary data. The various books, articles, journals, websites are referred in order to pen down this paper. The present paper helps to understand the condition of women in our society pre and post Dr. Ambedkar intervention.

Findings and Analysis

This paper has been penned down from the various secondary data in which the researchers have found the various contribution of Dr. Ambedkar towards women empowerment.

Ambedkar's Way of Women Empowerment

Dr. Ambedkar was one of the great intellects of our country who worked for the women empowerment. Our society is very well known to all i.e., patriarchal society. In our society women are always considered as subordinate to men and are oppressed in many ways. Today we all are witnessing a lot of initiatives taken by our government and various other academic institutions for the empowerment of women. Earlier women were considered as subordinate to men and today also the situation is same. When we talk about the ground reality of our society the situation is very pathetic. In order to empower women, the entire society have to change their mentality and approach toward women at each and every step. Thus, empowerment can be measured by indicators that indicate asset endowments like psychological, informational, organizational, material, social, financial or human; and the degree of opportunity like the presence and operation of formal and informal institutions, including the laws, regulatory frameworks, and norms governing behavior.

Dr. Ambedkar has played a vital role in empowering women.

Equality for All

Dr. Ambedkar advocated for equality for all. He was against any sorts of discrimination based on caste, colour, sex, religion etc. He incorporated the values of liberty, equality and fraternity in the Indian Constitution. Based on the belief that any scheme of franchise and constituency that fails to bring about representation of opinions as well representation of persons falls short of creating a popular government, he submitted the Constitution with a warning. He said in his speech delivered in the Constituent Assembly on 25th November 1949, "Political democracy cannot last unless there lies at the base of its social democracy." By social he means a way of life, which recognizes liberty, equality and fraternity as principal of life. He further said: "On 26th January 1950, we are going to enter into a life of contradictions. In politics we will have equality and social and economic life we will have inequality. In politics we will be recognizing the principal of one man one vote and one vote one value. In our social and economic life, we shall, by reason of our social and economic structure, continue to deny the principal of one man one value. Ambedkar while discussing the meaning of liberty said that it should include social equality, economic equality and there must be knowledge (education) made available to all. All these social conditions were restricted to a particular class in the old social order but form an important part in the new social order. He conceded the need to modify the liberal ideals to suit the developmental stage of a society He knew that the position of women could not be improved without proper education and economic well-being. Thus, he advocated for equal economic rights for women, to be granted by the State, through an adequate means of livelihood, equal pay for equal work for women and equal right to work for women. He felt it would be necessary to bring about changes through help of law and thus he preferred interventions at legal and public policy level.

Constitutional Provisions

Dr. Ambedkar has provided various constitutional safeguards for women. He knew that our patriarchal society will never give equal opportunity to women, so he brought constitution forward in order to strengthen the status of women in our society. The Constitution of India contains various provisions, which provide equal rights and opportunities women. They are as follows: -

- Article 14 guarantees that the State shall not deny equality before the law and equal protection of the laws.
- Article 15 prohibits discrimination against any citizen on the ground of sex;
- Article 15 (3) empowers the State to make positive discrimination in favour of women and children.
- Article 16 provides for Equality of Opportunity in matters of public employment.
- Article 23 prohibits trafficking in human beings and forced labour.
- Article 39 (a) and (d) enjoins the State to provide equal means of livelihood and equal pay for equal work.
- Article 42 enjoins upon the State to make provisions for securing just and humane conditions of work and for maternity relief.

- Article 51A (e) imposes a Fundamental Duty on every citizen to renounce the practices derogatory to the dignity of women.
- Article 243D (3) provides that not less than 1/3rd of the total number of seats to be filled by direct election in every Panchayat to be reserved for women, and such seats to be allowed by rotation to different constituencies in a Panchayat.
- Article 243T (3) provides that not less than 1/3rd of the total number of seats to be filled by direct election in every Municipality shall be reserved for women and such seats may be allowed by rotation to different constituencies in a Municipality.
- Article 243T (4) provides reservation of offices of Chairperson in Municipalities for SC, ST, Women in such manner as the legislature of a State, may by law provide; In pursuance of the above Constitutional provisions, various legislative enactments have been framed to protect, safeguard and promote the interests of women. Many of these legislative enactments have been in the sphere of labour laws to ameliorate the working conditions of women labour.

Thus, these are some of the constitutional provisions which was the main objective of Dr. Ambedkar to enhance the status of women in our society.

Conclusion

The above literature proves that Ambedkar, as a social activist, sought to highlight the fact that only through the organized and collective effort, a change of qualitative nature could be brought about in the Indian society. He was of the view that women should be encouraged to take active part in organized social mobilization activities which, in a long run, would enable them to assess their own position vis-à-vis the position enjoyed by the privileged section of the society. Participation in an organization, he believed, to be the first step towards 'capacity -building' for the women. One can relate this position with Ambedkar's idea that women needed adequate exposure to social morality-reality marked by injustice, discrimination and inhuman treatment.

Dr. Babasaheb expressed his views on the state of life of all women. He stated that women must be treated equally and given equal prestige. He insisted on Hindu Code bill suggesting the basic improvements and amendments in assembly. He also insisted and evoked all the parliamentary members to help to pass the bill in parliament. Eventually, he resigned for the same. The teachings and thoughts of Dr. Ambedkar are useful not only women but also all the Indian even today. His deep concern and feelings for all round development of women is expressed from each sentence and word. In his last speech in Indian Parliament, we can know his feelings and respect showed towards women Ambedkar adopted a comprehensive view on the social structure in India. The problem was complex and demanded a multi-prolonged attack. To him, the task of women empowerment in such a society would call for a multiple set of solutions. Rights of women could be achieved only when the monolithic nature of caste structure would be demolished. He was aware of the fact that it was a very difficult task and for this purpose, some sort of unbroken continuity in the social reform measures was needed. He strongly advocated that women should recognize their worth as social forces, organize themselves so that they could participate in social and political agitations. The processes adopted by Ambedkar to emancipate and empower women were primarily founded upon two premises: educate women and encourage them to participate in public events, this would subsequently create sense of self-respect in them and to reform the social order of Indian society such that the root causes of degradation and oppression of women were taken care of. Ambedkar's vision of empowerment of women through legal reforms was intertwined with raising social conscience through social reengineering and through education. Social awareness and social responsiveness appeared to him to be the basic ingredient of women empowerment. His policy prescription for women emancipation and empowerment encompasses two domains: 'Social' and 'Political'. Dr. Ambedkar, a social visionary aptly provided appropriate rights to women in the constitution. Dr. Ambedkar spent his life for the betterment of women even involved in bad practices and professionals like prostitutions. Dr. Ambedkar tried an adequate inclusion of women's right in the political vocabulary and constitution of India. His deep concern and feelings for all round development of women is expressed from each sentence and word.

Social identity threat and cast norms during the late 1920's

Dr Babasaheb Ambedkar was from family of untouchability of Hindu dharma in India .The untouchables comprises a number of the string groups among that he was in the lower strata of Hindu society. Untouchable classes were divided into three categories untouchables unapproachable and unseeable's. People were discriminated under this categories and they were forfeited for their rights. In 1950s the 'statistical revealed that out of 100% of population 20% were categorized as untouchable crowd ,in other words every fifth Hindu or Muslim or other religion person was untouchable and discriminated in these categories. These untouchable peoples having categorized into different groups like Pariahs, Panchamas, Atishudras, Avarnas, Antyajas, and Namashudras. During that time people of this groups were socially discriminated to the extent that the touch shadow and even voice were deemed by the higher cast to be polluting ,so whenever a low cast community people come across with the high cast community member perhaps the low caste one has to clear the way. Unlike most children of his caste, young Bhim attended school. However, he and his Dalit friends were not allowed to sit inside the class. Teachers would not touch their notebooks. When they pleaded to drink water, the school peon (who belonged to the upper caste) poured water from a height for them to drink. On days the peon was unavailable, young Bhim and his friends had to spend the day without water. They were forfeited to keep certain domestic , to use certain metals ,to use certain ornaments and they were obliged to wear a particular dress code, to eat a particular type of food ,not allowed to use a footwear and stand in front of higher caste . They were forced to occupy the dirty and unhygienic outfit of the village and town for example a male a rough blanket on the shoulder and a piece of Loin cloth and the woman wore rough sarees barely reaching the knees. These communities were not allowed to enter the temple also. Dr Ambedkar grew in such kind of social environment.

History of the origin of the caste in India

The system which divides people into rigid hierarchical groups based on their karma (work) and dharma is generally accepted to be more than 3,000 years old.

The caste system divides Hindus into four main categories - Brahmins, Kshatriyas, Vaishyas and the Shudras. Many believe that the groups originated from Brahma, the Hindu God of creation

Movement of Dr ambedkar

Bahishkrut Hitkaraini Sabha

After returning to India in 1924, Dr Ambedkar decided to launch an active movement against untouchability. In 1924, he founded the Bahishkrut Hitkaraini Sabha, aimed at uprooting caste system in India. The organization ran free schools and libraries for all age groups. Dr Ambedkar took the grievances of the Dalit's to court, and brought them justice. Over the following years, He organized marches demanding Dalit's rights to drinking water from public resources, and their right to enter temples. Despite severe attacks from the upper-caste men, Dr Ambedkar walked with fellow Dalit's into public tanks and reservoirs and drank from its water. He claimed that political reform without social reform is a waste .He fought for social equality and believed that political freedom from the British will automatically follow. He also claimed that caste is not a division of labour, but a division of labourers. He said that "The real method of breaking up the Caste system was not only to bring about inter-caste dinners and inter-caste marriages but to destroy the religious notions on which Caste was founded,"

Mahad conference on Kolaba

In the year 1927 Mahad conference was held on both days of March 19 and 20 ,the decided place was kolaba district as it faced a lot of depression due to the cast discrimination. It was therefore decided by the Kolaba district leaders to hold a conference at mahad . The leader of the conference had notified doctor Ambedkar the date of the conference and they made all the arrangements for the conference, for two months the workers and leaders had involved in the promotional activities and made the depressed classes to realize the importance of the conference as a result of these awareness. Lakhs and Lakhs of male of 15 to 70 years came from faraway places and distances landed in the soil of kolaba . In the meeting a question was marked by Ambedkar " there will be no difference between parents and animal if they will not desire to see their child in a better position than their own" .so he motivated the people of Kolaba to talk and fight for their rights and to develop the self-esteem in kolaba. It is also called as Chavdar Tale Satyagraha to allow untouchables to use water in a public tank in Mahad (currently in Raigad district), Maharashtra, India.

Poona Pact, (September 24, 1932),

B.R Ambedkar negotiated the Poona pact with Mahatma Gandhi in the place now called Pune ,Maharashtra. British government on 4th August 1932 allocated seats in the various legislatures of India to the different community. He supported the proposal assuming that pact will benefit the Dalit community. But Gandhiji was against the pact as he felt that it is the British divide and rule strategy ,It is an mutual agreement between Hindu leaders to grant new rights to Dalits.

Father of the Constitution

Elected to chair the drafting committee of the Constituent Assembly in 1947, Ambedkar abandoned many of his radical convictions as he steered the Assembly through the process of drafting India's constitution. His contributions can be seen in some of the special constitutional provisions for social equality for the Scheduled Castes. The practice of untouchability was “abolished” in the constitution of independent India (articles 15 and 17), and the Untouchability (Offenses) Act of 1955 makes such discriminatory practices punishable by law. Article 46 provides the Indian version of affirmative action, specifically the promotion of educational and economic benefits for the “weaker sections” of the society.

Conclusion

Today in 2021 still caste continues to remain a part of India's social reality. May it be the discrimination that members of socially-backward castes undergo, or the subtler issues of matchmaking during marriages, the question of caste continues to haunt our society. Dr Ambedkar's life and legacy, however, remains an inspiration for all of us who believe that caste hierarchy should not exist, and formation of an equal society is the true freedom. In recent decades, with the spread of secular education and growing urbanization, the influence of caste has somewhat declined, especially in cities where different castes live side-by-side and inter-caste marriages are becoming more common. Despite the changes though, caste identities remain strong, and last names are almost always indications of what caste a person belongs to.

Abstract

Dr. B. R. Ambedkar is also one of the proponents of social justice in modern India. The term "social justice" is based upon equality, liberty and fraternity of all human beings. The aim of social justice is to remove all kinds of inequalities based upon Caste, race, sex, power, Position and wealth. He was fully aware of the pattern and problems of the Indian society. Dr. B.R. Ambedkar, being a philanthropic, kind and generous social reformer was much moved with the pitiable and pathetic condition and low status of women in society and he was a torch bearer in the direction of social uplift of women generally and Hindu women specially. In January 1928, a women's association was founded in Bombay with Ramabai, Ambedkar's wife, as its president. In the Kalram Temple Entry Satyagraha at Nasik in 1930, five hundred women participated and many of them were arrested along with men and ill-treated in jails. The encouragement of Dr. Ambedkar to empower women to speak boldly was seen when Radhabai Vadale addressed a press conference in 1931. She said "It is better to die a hundred times than live a life full of humiliation. Dr. Ambedkar resigned from the cabinet expressing his discontent over non-acceptance of woman's right by the parliament. Besides, he highlighted the issues of Muslim women. His secular perspective is known through his thoughts on Purdah system. (Veil) Religious conversions and legal rights for Muslim women.

Key words: Justice, conversion, legal rights, equality, and fraternity

Introduction

Babasaheb, as he is admirably called, Dr B.R. Ambedkar was perhaps one of the biggest champions of women empowerment to have existed in India, around the period of the final days of its struggle for Independence. Thus, to the very fortune of this country, the foundations of modern India and its Constitution had principles of women empowerment and gender equality embedded in it, owing to the contribution of Dr Ambedkar, among others. "I measure the progress of a community by the degree of progress which women have achieved". Such were his values, envisioning progress and equality, at a time when the country was undergoing a social reorganisation, cultural transformation and a change in its overall political order and system. Being the first Law Minister of Independent India, and Chairman of the Constitution Drafting Committee, Dr Ambedkar left no stone unturned in ensuring that his values and vision found space in the constitutional framework of the nation.

Women Empowerment Thoughts

One of his most important introductions towards the cause was the Hindu code bill. Dr Ambedkar's major concern for the status of women was reflected in this Bill. He had even remarked that his work on the latter, would be as important, as his work on the constitution itself, and mark a chapter of gender equality and justice, along with an exodus from ancient orthodox laws. Through the Bill, women were to be granted absolute, right regarding all property. The fact that Dr Ambedkar envisioned gender equality in all certainty can be understood by his own words, when he said that, “son also would get a share as equal to girl’s share in mother’s property, even in Stridhana (defined in Hindu Law as wealth received by women as gifts from relations) too”.

Regarding marriage, two new clauses were added by Dr Ambedkar; restitution of the conjugal rights and the judicial separation. As prescribed by the ‘Dayabhaga rule’, sacramental marriage was the only acceptable practice, wherein no space existed for a non-theist. Hindu Code Bill, on the other hand, provided a measure of social inclusion with both civil and non-civil (sacramental) marriages, wherein the former provided the highest personal freedom with easy provisions for divorce. This was also the first of its kind when the provision of divorce in a civil marriage was introduced from a woman’s outlook, another reflection of Ambedkar’s philosophy towards restoring the dignity of women. Furthermore, Ambedkar “prohibited polygamy and prescribed monogamy”.
